The Demand For Meat.

Manifold are the reasons advanced for the high meat prices, one of the principal being that the inland production is insufficient to cover the demand. As a matter of fact, the German production has kept pace with the increase, but not with the demand of the population. The German of today eats more meat than formerly. Thirty or forty years ago the consumption averaged eighty-eight pounds per capita, whereas it now amounts to 113 pounds. Germany is producing from 95 to 96 per cent of the total consumption, only 4 to 5 per cent being imported.—New York Post.

Iron Plated Roads.

In France experiments are being made with an iron plated road with the view of discovering some form of road surface which is suitable to withstand the wear and tear of modern traffic. The plating consists of the introduction of fine pieces of iron, something of the character of the refuse from lathes and similar metal cutting machines, which are incorporated with the top dressing of the roadbed, and the result is a hard and yet elastic roadway, which is capable of severe wear.—Indianapolis News.

What Smoke Does.

It has been said in defense of soft coal smoke in the air that Pittsburgh has less tuberculosis than other cities similarly situated in which there is much less smoke. But the Journal of the American Medical Association points out that this, if true, is offset by the fact that catarrh, pneumonia and other "bad air" diseases are prevalent and that "the Pittsburgh ophthalmologists are said to be busiest after a heavy fog accompanied by smoke."

POSITIONS FOR POET

GOVERNMENT HAS HONORED A DISTINGUISHED CANADIAN.

Duncan Campbell Scott, Who Has Succeeded to Superintendency-General of the Department of Indian Affairs, Has Spent 33 Years In the Service of the Government—Is a Prolific Writer.

Appointing poets and champion riflemen to Government posts has for a good while been a beneficent pastime of the Canadian Civil Service. Poets, however, were given government jobs in this country long before riflemen were recognized. At one time several of our Canadian poets had easy Government jobs at Ottawa that gave them enough to live on and plenty of time to write poetry. This was not a reward for services rendered, as it might be considered in the case of riflemen, but an apportunity to render services in the future.

DUNCAN CAMPBELL SCOTT.

Duncan Campbell Scott, who for some years has been known as one of our most sympathetic interpreters of out-door life, and at the same time as an official in the Department of Indian Affairs, has now succeeded Mr. Frank Pedley as Superintendent-General of that Department. He is the first poet in Canada who ever got $5,000 a year for doing something else besides poetry.

Mr. Scott was born in Ottawa, in 1862, and has spent much of his life there in the Civil Service. He entered in 1880, as a clerk in the Indian Department. Thirteen years later, he was made chief accountant. In 1909 he was appointed superintendent of Indian Education. His poems and stories have appeared in many Canadian and American journals. He is the author of "New World Lyrics and Ballads," "Labor and the Angel," and other books. The Toronto Globe describes him as being "as dainty as Herrick, and with the polish of Mathew Arnold."—Canadian Courier.

London's Monster Map.

What is really a Doomsday Book of London is now in course of preparation. The huge task of compiling such a record of a town of the immensity of the metropolis, which has an area of 115 square miles, was commenced by the London County Council fifteen years ago, and, though the undertaking is approaching completion, it is doubtful whether it will ever be adequately finished because there are bits of land which nobody owns, and which therefore cannot be properly mapped. Already the council has spent $75,000 on the work, which will in time be a full record of every house and owner thereof within the administrative county.

The record is taking the form of a gigantic map, and naturally is being made in sections. The scale is five feet per mile, so that the necessity for sectional construction will at once be recognized.

Spurgeon's Long Sleep.

Among modern preachers Spurgeon held the record not only for the greatest number of sermons, but also for the largest audiences. On the national fast day, Oct. 7, 1857, he preached in the central transept of the Crystal Palace, London, to a congregation of 25,000, and was clearly heard by all. The physical effort involved, however, had a curious effect on the preacher.

"I was not conscious at the close of the service of any extraordinary exhaustion," he wrote in his autobiography, "yet I must have been very weary, for after I went to sleep on that Wednesday night I did not waken until Friday morning, sleeping right through Thursday."

A Chapel on a Bridge.

At St. Ives, the little old-Huntingdonshire town in which Oliver Cromwell lived for several years, there is a bridge spanning the lazily flowing river Ouse, and on this bridge is a quaint building which at one time did duty as a chapel. The structure has been in existence for something like 500 years and was, according to local historians, originally employed as a beacon lighthouse. After that it was turned for a time into a hostel and eventually became an ordinary dwelling house. Some of the rooms in this curious old building are considerably below the level of the water in the river.—London Telegraph.

Conference on Sea Safety.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The committee of revision of the international conference on safety at sea began its labors yesterday, and intends to work night and day in drafting a convention, but is unlikely to have it ready for the next meeting of the full conference this week.

WOULD ALTER LAW.

Lemieux Disputes Act Needs Some Changes Say Labor Men.

OTTAWA, Jan. 6. — Premier Borden was encouraging but, on the whole, rather non-committal in his reply to a labor deputation which waited upon him yesterday, stating that the Government desired more information upon the points raised.

The delegation requested amendment to the Lemieux Industrial Disputes Act to offset the decision of the Court of Review in the Montreal tramways case to the effect that a discharged employe is not competent to apply for a board under the act. It is desired to make the Minister of Labor the absolute authority and to prevent the interference of courts in industrial disputes.

Another request was that the fair wage clause in Government contracts be extended to provide a penalty for employers who violate them. With regard to the immigration act an amendment was asked to make it impossible for employers in time of labor troubles, to loan money to immigrants.

Legislation was also asked to give effect to the report of the Technical Education Commission to make Dominion election day a public holiday and to abolish the deposit required of candidates, while the request was renewed for an eight-hour-day on all public work.

The appointment of a royal commission to investigate conditions of steel and coal workers in the Maritime Provinces was asked.

MAY ASSIST MINERS.

Moyer Says Gompers Is Planning Big National Strike.

CHICAGO, Jan. 6. — Charles H. Moyer was credited yesterday with saying Samuel Gompers and other officials of the American Federation of Labor would meet in Washington in a few days to consider the advisability of calling a nation wide strike of labor organisations in sympathy with the copper miners of Michigan.

Denies the Proposal.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6. — Vice-President O'Connell and Secretary Morrison, the only officials of the American Federation of Labor in town yesterday, both professed to know nothing of a proposed meeting of the executive council to act on the copper strike situation. Vice-President O'Connell indicated he did not credit such a proposal.

C. P. R. GIVES UP.

Will Not Continue Mediterranean Service Against Persecution.

MONTREAL, Jan. 6.—The Canadian Pacific steamship service between Canada and Trieste and Naples and other Mediterranean ports is at an end, according to a statement made by one of the officials of the company here yesterday.

The cutting off of the service is due to the alleged persecution the company claims to have endured in Austria and Italy.

The final action which caused the management of the C.P.R. to take this drastic step would appear to have been the holding up of the Ruthenia by the Italian Government at Naples for a couple of days on charges of having contravened the immigration regulations of the country.

It will be recalled that the Tyrolia sailed from St. John for Trieste via Naples as recently as last Saturday, but it was stated by the officials who gave out the information yesterday that on her return to Canadian waters the Tyrolia will be sent to Liverpool. Similar action will also be taken with regard to the Ruthenia.

TO TRANSFER CARDEN.

British Minister To Mexico Was Going to Brazil In First Place.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—Sir Lionel Carden, British Minister to Mexico, is shortly to be transferred to Rio de Janeiro as Minister to Brazil. He was appointed to Mexico July 18, 1913, to succeed Francis William Stronge.

The successor to Sir Lionel Carden of Mexico City will probably be Chas. Murray Marling, senior counsellor in the British diplomatic service, now accredited to Turkey.

Sir Lionel Carden's transfer, which is a promotion as far as salary is concerned, although the two legations possess the same standing in the service, would have been made some time ago, except for the fact that the British Foreign Office would not make the change while the Minister was under fire for the alleged interviews in which he was made to reflect on the policy of the United States toward Mexico.

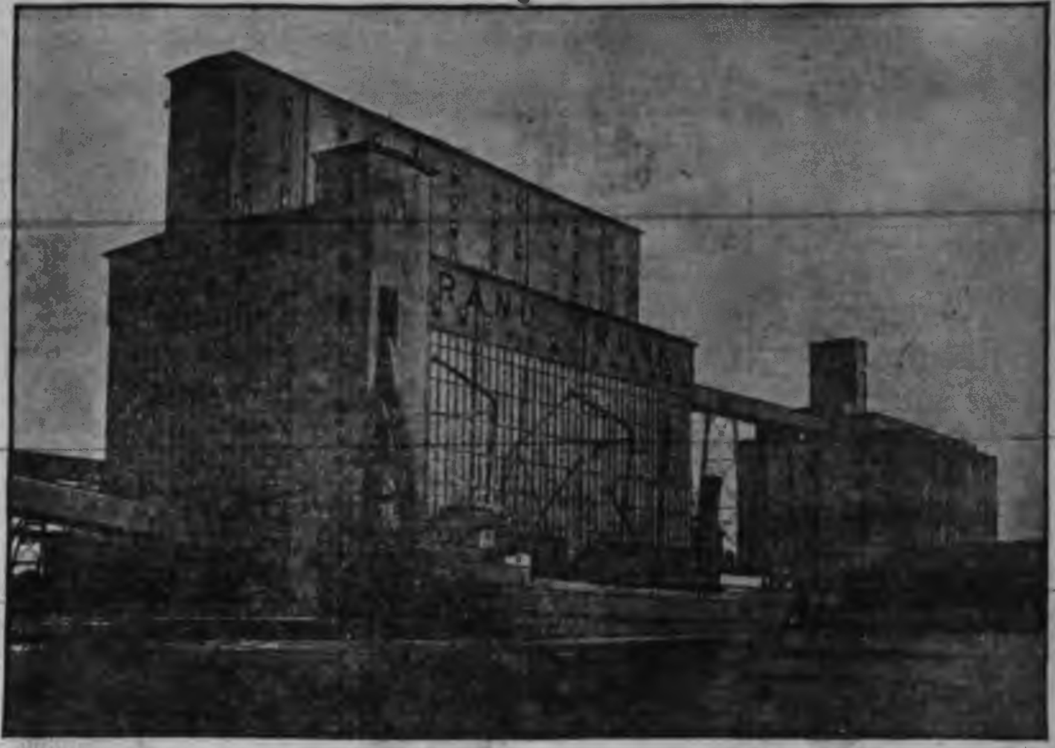
John Turner Still Alive.

KINGSTON, Jan. 6. — The man drowned off the ferry boat at Windsor was not John Turner of Kingston, as was feared by relatives in this city, who had not heard from him for over two months. Yesterday morning his sister, Mrs. William Howland, received a letter stating that her brother had been seriously ill in a New York hospital, but was now on the road to recovery.

Carnage Narrowly Averted.

STRASSBURG, Germany, Jan. 6.—Zabern, the little garrison own of Alsace, narrowly escaped widespread carnage on Nov. 28, according to the testimony of Col. Von Renter, commander of the 99th German Infantry Regiment, when he was brought before a court-martial here yesterday.

Let potatoes lie in cold water for a little while before paring if you wish them to be white.



WINDMILL POINT ELEVATOR, MONTREAL.

While the Grand Trunk has been looking well to the matter of elevator construction in Western Canada to provide storage capacity for the ever-increasing grain crop, provision has also been made for shipping facilities at Montreal. In the spring of 1906 what is known as the Windmill Point Elevator, located in the busy harbor of Montreal, was completed and put into operation. Its capacity was 1,080,000 bushels. Its situation is so well planned that it is easily accessible to both lake or ocean vessels, with railway tracks alongside. To provide additional accommodation a large annex has just been completed, with a capacity of 1,070,000 bushels, making a net capacity of 2,150,000 bushels. There are in this new building 28 concrete tanks, 25 feet in diameter and 100 feet in height, arranged at right angles in four rows, with seven tanks in each row. The tanks are constructed of reinforced concrete, having their adjacent sides rigidly united, so that the four-pointed, star-shaped spaces between the circular tanks may be used for storage as well as the circular tanks themselves. The large tanks hold approximately 33,000 bushels' apiece, and the star-shaped or interstice bins hold approximately 8,000 bushels each. It is the second largest grain bin on the Grand Trunk System, the largest being located at Fort William, with a capacity of 5,700,000 bushels.

SUICIDE IN VIENNA.

"Tired of Life" a Common Complaint in the Austrian Capital.

Statistics of the cases of suicide which occurred in the course of last year in Vienna show that 1,558 persons killed themselves there, as compared with 1,406 during the previous year. The increase was mainly among females, 627 of whom took their lives as compared with 510 during the previous year, while the corresponding increase among the males was only thirty-five. The ages at which persons committed suicide varied within wide limits, the oldest of the victims being eighty-eight years of age and the youngest only nine years.

It is a curious fact that the bright summer months are apparently more conducive to suicide than the gloomy winter days. Thus June, July and August head the list, while the lowest number of suicides occurred in February and December.

The modes of death most frequently selected were hanging (633 cases), shooting (233 cases) and poisoning (108 cases). Two women burned themselves alive. The most frequently assigned motives for suicide were ill health, disappointment in love and want of food. In seventeen instances attempts at suicide were made by children who found themselves unable to accomplish their class work at school.

Cause For His Tears.

"I wept because I couldn't get at the author."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

FILLING THE LUNGS.

Correct and Deep Breathing Is Essential to Good Health.

No piece of advice the physician can give will bear more frequent repetition than the pithy sentence, "Breathe deeply." It is a perfectly simple rule of health, yet it is constantly broken.

There are two ways to learn to breathe. If our powers of self discipline are poor, as is the case with most insufficient breathers, it is a good plan to join a gymnasium or calisthenic class and learn to use the lungs as a baby learns to use its feet and hands. But remember that lessons in breathing will do no good if the scholar thinks he is absolved from his task except when he is in the class.

A simpler method for those who have not time or opportunity to attend a gymnasium is to turn life's daily routine into a continuous discipline in breathing. If the poor breather takes the trouble to watch himself carefully he will find that when he is engaged upon any work that calls for close attention he does not even breathe as deeply as usual; he almost invariably holds his breath. Thus the blood current is vitiated when it ought to be cleansed, and the worker exhausts himself, not so much by his labors as by his neglect.

Draw in deep drafts of air every time you take a breath and every little while stop everything else and fill your lungs a few times with breath that test their capacity. You will be surprised to see the improvement that it will make in your general condition.—Timely Doctor.

A SPLENDID HAZARD

By HAROLD McGRATH

Copyright 1910 by Bobbs-Merrill Company.

Breitmann? The admiral's smile thinned and disappeared. There might be something in this. Two million francs did not appeal to him, but he realized that to others they stood for a great fortune one worthy of hazards. He would talk this over with Cathewe and Fitzgerald and learn what they thought about the matter—if this fellow Picard was a duke and had shipped as an ordinary hand forward. He wished he had left the women at Marseilles.

"Say nothing to any one," he warned. "But if this man Picard comes aboard again keep him there."

"Yes-sir."

"That'll be all."

CHAPTER XVII.

PLOTTERS OVERHEARD.

FLANAGAN and Holleran had really seen Picard and Breitmann talking together. The acquaintanceship might have dated from the sailing of the Laura, and again it mightn't.

M. Ferraud, who overheard the major part of the conversation later in the day, was convinced that Picard had joined the crew of the Laura for no other purpose than to get in touch with Breitmann. There were some details, however, which would be acceptable. He followed them to the Rue Fesch to a trattoria, but entered from the rear. M. Ferraud never assumed any disguises, but depended solely upon his adroitness in occupying the smallest space possible. So, while the two conspirators sat at a table on the sidewalk, M. Ferraud chose his inside, under the grilled window which was directly above them.

"Everything is in readiness," said Picard.

"Thanks to you, duke."

"Tonight you and your old boatman Pietro will leave for Altone. The admiral and his party will start early tomorrow morning. No matter what may happen he will find no drivers till morning. The drivers all understand what they are to do on the way back from Evisa."

A cart rumbled past, and the listener missed a few sentences. What did the drivers understand? What was going to happen on the way back from Evisa? Surely Breitmann did not intend that the admiral should do the work and then be held up later. The old American sailor wasn't afraid of any one, and he would shoot to kill. No, no; Breitmann meant to secure the gold alone. But the drivers worried M. Ferraud. He might be forced to change his plans on their account. He wanted full details, not puzzling components. Quiet prevailed once more.

"Women in affairs of this sort are always in the way," said Picard.

M. Ferraud did not hear what Breitmann replied.

"Take my word for it," pursued Picard, "this one will trip you, and you cannot afford to trip at this stage. We are all ready to strike, man. All we want is the money. Every 10 francs of it will buy a man. We leave Marseilles in your care. The rest of us will carry the word on to Lyons, Dijon and Paris. With this unrest in the government, the army scandals, the dissatisfied employees and the idle we shall raise a whirlwind greater than '70 or '71. We shall reach Paris with half a million men."

Again Breitmann said something lowly. M. Ferraud would have liked to see his face.

"But what are you going to do with the other woman?"

Two women: M. Ferraud saw the ripple widen and draw near. One woman he could not understand, but two simplified everything. The drivers and two women.

"The other?" said Breitmann. "She is of no importance."

M. Ferraud shook his head.

"Oh, well; this will be your private affair. Captain Grasset will arrive from Nice tomorrow night. Two nights later we all should be on board and under way. Do you know, we have been very clever. Not a suspicion anywhere of what we are about."

"Do you recollect M. Ferraud?" inquired Breitmann.

"That little fool of a butterfly hunter?" the duke asked.

M. Ferraud smiled and gazed laughingly up at the grill.

"He is no fool" (abruptly). "He is a secret agent, and not one move have we made that is unknown to him."

"Impossible!"

M. Ferraud could not tell whether the consternation in Picard's voice was real or assumed. He chose to believe the latter.

"And why hasn't he shown his hand?"

"He is waiting for us to show ours. But don't worry," went on Breitmann. "I have arranged to suppress him neatly."

And the possible victim murmured, "I wonder how?"

"Then we must not meet again until you return, and then only at the little house in the Rue St. Charles."

"Agreed. Now I must be off."

"Good luck!"

M. Ferraud heard the stir of a single chair and knew that the great grandson was leaving. The wall might have been transparent, so sure was he of the smile upon Picard's face, a sinister speculating smile. But his imagination did not pursue Breitmann, whose lips also wore a smile, one of irony and bitterness. Neither did he hear Picard murmur "Dupe!" nor Breitmann mutter "Fools!"

When Breitmann saw Hildegarde in the hotel gardens he did not avoid her but stopped by her chair. She rose. She had been waiting all day for this moment. She must speak out or suffocate with anxiety.

"Karl, what are you going to do?"

"Nothing," unsmilingly.

"You will let the admiral find and keep this money which is yours?"

Breitmann shrugged.

"You are killing me with suspense!"

"Nonsense!" briskly.

"You are contemplating violence of some order. I know it, I feel it!"

"Not so loud!" impatiently.

"You are!" she repeated, crushing her hands together.

"Well, all there remains to do is to tell the admiral. He will perhaps divide with me."

"How can you be so cruel to me? It is your safety—that is all I wish to be assured of. Oh, I am pitifully weak! I should despise you. Take this chest of money; it is yours. Go to England, to America, and be happy."

"Who cares?"

"I care!" with a sob.

The bitterness in his face died for a space. "Hildegarde, I'm not worth it. Forget me as some bad dream, for that is all I am or ever shall be. Marry Cathewe. I'm not blind. He will make you happy. I have made my bed, or, rather, certain statesmen have, and I must lie in it. If I had known what I know now," with regret, "this would not have been. But I distrusted every one, myself too."

She understood. "Karl, had you told me all in the first place I should have given you that diagram without question gladly."

"Well, I am sorry. Forget me!"

And with that he left her standing by the side of her chair and walked swiftly toward the hotel. When next she realized or sensed anything she was lying on her bed, her eyes dry and wide open. And she did not go down to dinner, nor did she answer the various calls on her door.

Night rolled over the world, with a cool breeze driving under her million planets. The lights in the hotel flickered out one by one, and in the third corridor, where the adventurers were housed, only a wick floating in a tumbler of oil burned dimly.

Fitzgerald had waited in the shadow for nearly an hour, and he was growing restless and tired. All day long he had been obsessed with the conviction that if Breitmann ever made a start it would be some time that night. Distinctly he heard the light rattle of a carriage. It stopped outside the gardens. He pressed closer against the wall. The door to Breitmann's room opened gently, and the man himself stepped out cautiously.

"So," began Fitzgerald lightly, "your majesty goes forth tonight?"

But he overreached himself. Breitmann whirled, and all the hate in his breast went into his arm as he struck. Fitzgerald threw up his guard, but not soon enough. The blow hit him full on the side of the head and toppled him over, and as the back of his head bumped the floor the world came to an end. When he regained his senses his head was pillowed on a woman's knees, and the scared white face of a woman bent over his.

"What's happened?" he whispered. There were a thousand wicks where there had been one, and these went round and round in a circle. Presently the effect wore away, and he recognized Laura. Then he remembered. "By George!"

"What is it?" she cried, the bands of terror about her heart loosening.

"As a hero I'm a picture," he answered. "Why, I had an idea that Breitmann was off tonight to dig up the treasure himself. Gone! And only one blow struck and I in front of it!"

"Breitmann!" exclaimed Laura. She caught her dressing gown closer about her throat.

"Yes. The temptation was too great. How did you get here?" He ought to have struggled to his feet at once, but it was very comfortable to feel her breath upon his forehead.

"I heard a fall and then some one running. Are you badly hurt?"

The anguish in her voice was as music to his ears.

"Dizzy; that's all. Better tell your father immediately. No, no; I can get up alone. I'm all right. Fine rescuer of princesses, eh?" with an unsteady laugh.

"You might have been killed!"

"Scarcely that. I tried to talk like they do in stories, with this result. The maxim is, Always strike first and question afterward. You warn your father quietly while I hunt up Ferraud and Cathewe."

Seeing that he was really uninjured, she turned and flew down the dark corridor and knocked at her father's door.

Fitzgerald stumbled along toward M. Ferraud's room murmuring: "All right, Mr. Breitmann; all right. But hang me if I don't hand you back that one with interest. Where is that Frenchman?" as he hammered on Ferraud's door and obtained no response. He tried the knob. The door opened. The room was black, and he struck a match. M. Ferraud, fully dressed, lay upon his bed. There was a handkerchief over his mouth, and his hands and feet were securely bound. His eyes were open.

The hunter of butterflies rubbed his released wrists and ankles, tried his collar, coughed and dropped his legs to the floor.

"I am getting old," he cried in self communion, "nearsighted and old. I've worn spectacles so long in jest that now I must wear them in earnest!"

"How long have you been here?" asked Fitzgerald.

"I should say about two hours. It was very simple. He came to the door. I opened it. He came in; Zut! He is as powerful as a lion."

"Why didn't you call?"

"I was too busy, and suddenly it became too late. Gone?"

"Yes." And Fitzgerald swore as he rubbed the side of his head. Briefly he related what had befallen him.

"You have never hunted butterflies?"

"No," sharply. "Shall we start for him while his heels are hot?"

"I have laid the trap. He and his friend will walk into it. I am not a police officer. I make no arrests. My business is to avert political calamities without any one knowing that these calamities exist. That is the real business of a secret agent. Let him dig up his fortune. The trap is set, and in forty-eight hours it will be sprung. Be calm, my son. Tonight we should not find a horse or carriage in the whole town of Ajaccio."

"But what are you going to do?"

"Go to Altone to find a hole in the ground."

"But the admiral!"

"Let him gaze into the hole and then tell him what you will. I owe him that touch. Come on."

"Where?"

"To the admiral to tell him his secretary is a fine rogue and that he has stolen the march on us. A good chase will soften his final disappointment. I will tell you this: I am playing against desperate men, and the liberty, perhaps honor, of one you love is menaced. They are coming. Not a word."

The admiral's fury was boundless, and his utterances were touched here and there by strong sailor expressions—the scoundrel, the blackleg! And he had trusted him without reservation! He wanted to start at once. Laura finally succeeded in calming him, and the cold reason of M. Ferraud convinced him of the folly of haste. Every one of the party was in Ferraud's room, and their voices hummed and murmured, and their arms waved. Only one of them did Ferraud watch keenly—Hildegarde. How would she act now?

Fitzgerald's head still rang, and now his mind was being tortured. Laura in danger from this madman? No, over his body first, over his dead body. How often had he smiled at that phrase, but there was no melodrama in it now. Her liberty and perhaps her honor! His strong fingers worked convulsively to put them round the blackguard's throat.

"Your head is all right now?" as she turned to follow the others from the room.

"It was nothing." He forced a smile to his lips. "I'm as fit as a fiddle now, only I'll never forgive myself for letting him go. Will you tell me one thing? Did he ever offend you in any way?"

"A woman would not call it an offense," a glint of humor in her eyes. "Real offense, no."

"He proposed to you?"

The suppressed rage in his tone would have amused if it hadn't thrilled her strangely. "It would have been a proposal if I had not stopped it. Good night."

To be continued.

WOMAN SUFFERED TEN YEARS

From Female Ills—Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Belleville, N.S., Canada.—"I doctored for ten years for female troubles and did not get well. I read in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and decided to try it. I write now to tell you that I am cured. You can publish my letter as a testimonial." — Mrs. SUVRINE BABINE, Belleville, Nova Scotia, Canada.

Another Woman Recovers.

Auburn, N. Y.—"I suffered from nervousness for ten years, and had such organic pains that sometimes I would lie in bed four days at a time, could not eat or sleep and did not want anyone to talk to me or bother me at all. Sometimes I would suffer for seven hours at a time. Different doctors did the best they could for me until four months ago I began giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial and now I am in good health."—Mrs. WILLIAM H. GILL, No. 15 Pleasant Street, Auburn, New York.

The above are only two of the thousands of grateful letters which are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., which show clearly what great things Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound does for those who suffer from woman's ills.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

BALLAD OF THE BEGINNER.

Old Jasper stout upon the street,
Where motor horns most hoot and bray,
Surprised me as on gouty feet
He hopped as nimbly as a fay.
I smiled to hear his angry "Hey!"
I did not miss him very far,
So I called back with manner gay,
"Who says I cannot drive a car?"

Our lawn was lately smooth and neat—
The drive's its straight and narrow way
Now furrowed turf your eye will meet,
For over it my wheels will stray.
Our pup is dead; the children play
Inside the house, so naught shall mar
The hour when I smile and say,
"Who says I cannot drive a car?"

Ill natured prophets I shall cheat—
What! Break my neck? Not I! Nay, nay!
I hardly like to stop to eat—
I get so out of practice, say—
But, though I'm lately growing gray,
Some time, as skilled as chauffeurs are,
I shall not miss a single jay
Who says I cannot drive a car.

L'ENVOI.

Good neighbors, though you show dismay,
I was born 'neath a lucky star.
I'm fit and eager for the fray—

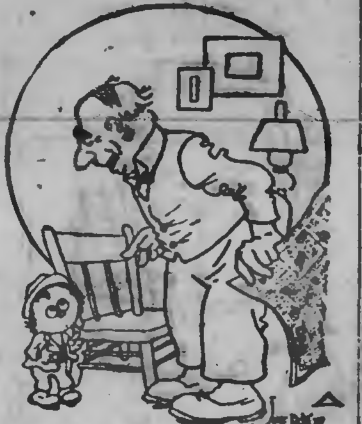
The Chief Concern.



Son—Dad, when you put a hen on eggs to hatch them, do you say she is "sitting" or "setting?" A hen can't really sit, can she?

Dad—Don't bother about little things like that. What concerns me most is to know when she cackles whether she has laid or lied.—Philadelphia Press.

No Sport.

"That distinguished member of the hunting party always wants to shoot. He never cares to fish."

"Well," replied the guide, "you see we can get out into the woods and chase animals his way, so that he's almost sure to get something. But you can't do anything with a fish."—Washington Star.

Began Too Soon.

"They tell me you accepted young Frugall and then turned him down the next day. What was the matter?"

"He made me suspicious. You see, he proposed in a taxicab and when I accepted him he paid the fare and made me get out and walk with him."—Philadelphia Record.

Entertaining Unawares.

"What's daughter doing?"

"Making shrimp salad."

"I didn't know we had any shrimp in the house."

"We haven't, but there is one going to call on her this evening."—Houston Post.

Not In His Case.

"Silence is golden."

"Not necessarily. I haven't had a word to say around my house for years, and yet I'm no richer than I ever was."—Detroit Free Press.

Hateful.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Prevention of Obesity.

No one should permit himself to become the subject of obesity in advancing years, and almost invariably it is his own fault if he does. The prevention may be insured by largely reducing the use of fatty foods, as fat of meat, bacon, ham, etc.; by renouncing all pastry which contains that element largely; also cream, and much milk, as well as all starchy matter, which abounds in the potato and other farinaceous products of the vegetable kingdom; and especially in those combinations so popular and so universally met with at the family table, as rice, sago, tapioca and corn flour puddings, made with milk and eggs, of which the yolks contain much fat, the whole being sweetened with sugar—a combination of "carbohydrates" of the most fattening kind. Admirable for childhood and middle life and afterward, during the years of maximum activity, they must be completely renounced if corpulence appears in later life. In this condition also large quantities of liquids are undesirable at meals; indeed, no liquid should be taken during the meal, and only in moderate quantity soon after it, and then pure water is the best.

Don't Be a Jack-of-All-Trades

The day of the "Jack-of-all-trades" is passed. This is the time of the specialist, of the man qualified to do some one thing to the queen's taste—which means to the satisfaction of a critical boss. No concern can afford to place a high-grade equipment in the hands of low-grade men. Competition forces employers to meet skill with skill.

To make it short, have you any special equipment? Is there anything in you to command big pay?

Every month upwards of 400 I. C. S. students write to Scranton to tell of positions secured or bettered—of earnings increased and prospects brightened—through study of I. C. S. Courses. Last month the number was 476. The letters come from every section and from all sorts and conditions of men. Some of the writers live in Ontario—some live in British Columbia; some began with no more education than ability to read and write—some were college graduates; some had a good deal of spare time—some had to figure on every spare minute; some were well-to-do—some were obliged to save the pennies.

ADVERTISING

A STORE'S importance is rightly judged by its advertising. Not altogether by the size of the advertisement, but by size and tone, and quality of announcement.

What the store has to say is one thing. Quite as important is how it says it.

Given that the clerical force is competent and up-to-date, it will say, over the counter, the very best to be said in reference to the goods enquired for. It may, and should, suggest other goods, not in the customers view.

This implies that the customer is in the store. But what brings him or her there? The wish to buy and the belief it is a good place to buy at.

How is this learned of?

By advertising. The advertisement is a message, an intelligent middleman, doing service between seller and buyer. The space talks to thousands, even while the store is closed for the night.

Use The REVIEW and tell the story of your store and its opportunities for good service.

She gave deftest of glances as she rose. looked steadily at her while a on of a smile, appreciative and friendly, came into his eyes. She had the story with her; but, suddenly following an impulse, she dropped it as a thing of no value upon the seat.

Janet Fair was in a state of woe. The lion of the house party had not materialized. Frantic telephoning and wires disclosed the fact that he had left town for Silox, next station beyond Brentwood, on the 4:50 train and had been seen no more. The Fair country place stood midway between the two stations used impartially by the Fair guests, and a coupe had met both stations, one bringing Anne Halliwell from Brentwood, the last woman guest.

"He is yours, dear," said Janet, drawing Anne out into the chill moonlight on the little balcony.

"Why don't you take him yourself?" laughed Anne.

"Can't. Never sees me. Told me confidentially that he adored the svelte, dreamy girl made of repose and inner reserves, and—I handed him over to you. You'll have to take him bodily, for Gladys Whitcomb has sharpened up her teeth and nails ready to spring and drag him off."

"But, Janet," protested Anne, "I never went in for a man in my life. I couldn't do it. I'd hate myself."

"I'm a deep dyed villain," growled Janet, striking an attitude. "You blessed lamb, don't I know your proclivities? Rack your naive brain for a simple and good reason why I sent you a belated invitation, why I expected Aubrey Churchill on the 4:50 train, why"—

"W-was"—

Anne started in consternation, lost her balance against the low railing and was reeling backward when strong arms caught her and set her upon her feet. Then a traveling bag was flung upon the balcony, and, emerging from the shrubbery beneath, a man vaulted beside the girls.

"My lady of the story," he said, smiling whimsically upon Anne, who after one swift look was trying vainly to melt into the shadow. "I have a score to settle with you after I get something to eat. Just look at this saturated brow, will you? It's like a sponge. And these aching arms carried that bag ten miles on an empty stomach."

"Oh, jolly!" screamed Janet ecstatically, sliding through the French window. "You'll have a banquet, Aubrey Churchill."

A terrifying silence followed the click of the window behind Janet's exit. Anne stood on the chilly balcony with the perfect stillness that precedes either attack or precipitate flight, gazing straight into the steady eyes of the man before her.

Then, turning swiftly, she wrestled with the window fastening for an instant and fled. The man, laughing softly, stepped into the library and called, "The tilt after the banquet, remember," as she escaped the room.

He was a young man who would have his way, Anne discomfitedly admitted later. She had been playing fox and geese with him desperately all evening, with the dawning conviction that she was the singular goose. When he cornered her in the dim library as the other guests drifted into the music room she almost gasped surrender.

"Now, Miss Story Lady," he said, thrusting his hands into the pockets of his tuxedo and looking tremendously handsome, with an expression of mock severity on his clean cut face, "why did you do it?"

Anne squirmed preparatory to flight, but he blocked egress from the divan, and she settled back, with a laugh that tried to be trifling.

"It was a great story, wasn't it?" she said irrelevantly.

"Don't you know," he said, dropping down beside her, "that you ought to apologize for causing me to discommode our hostess."

Embarrassment enveloped Anne. She was groping desperately for that will-o'-the-wisp, her daredeviltry, that had got her into this difficulty and refused to extricate her. "W-why didn't you get off?" she stammered, a flush mantling her cheeks. "I did not keep you there."

"But the story did." He smiled insistently upon her as he drew the pages from his pocket.

Anne's heart stopped. She had forgotten the scribblings on the margins when she dropped the story in the car.

"It seems we have a stanch admirer in Janet," he said gently, "and I, for one, quite approve of her. I was deep in a panegyric on your charms and virtues when the train went through Silox."

Anne groaned. She could not help it, knowing, as she did, the extravagance of Janet on paper.

"She has everything arranged," he continued, smiling subtly down at the helpless girl half facing him. "Bridesmaids—think of it—bridesmaids! We didn't either of us know that when we started out this afternoon, did we?"

Anne suddenly buried her face in her hands. He looked at her a moment musingly, then ever so gently extricated her fingers and made her look at him.

"Janet is a clever girl," he drawled. "She said you would have to be taken with a trick."

Anne blinked. Where was her vaunted demureness? "No such thing," she blurted out. "I did it myself. I knew you were a winner."

Swelling England's Navy.

Winston Spencer Churchill, first lord of the British admiralty, reporting on the growth of the British navy, recently stated that the navy would increase in the next eighteen months as follows: A torpedo boat destroyer once a week for the next nine months, a light cruiser every thirty days for the next twelve months and a super-Dreadnought of the latest type every forty-five days for the next eighteen months.

Milady's Mirror

Cure For Enlarged Pores.

Enlarged pores certainly do not improve the appearance of the face, and the skin that is so affected loses its freshness because it is difficult to keep in a perfect condition on account of the small pittings which collect a great deal of dust, often giving to the face a greasy, grayish cast.

To diminish their size successfully is one of the most tedious things in connection with achieving beauty, because there are so many reasons for enlarged pores, and the improvement shows only after such a long period that the average girl or woman often gives up in despair before the remedy has been fairly tried.

The main reason for dilated pores is not keeping the skin in a thoroughly hygienic condition. Skin that is not properly cleansed at least once a day and into which dust and small foreign bodies are allowed to settle will soon show enlarged pores. The excessive eating of rich, greasy foods or indulgence in spirituous drinks, beer or ale will affect some person's skin in precisely this way, as will also fried dishes or gravies.

A moment's reasoning should make this clear to any girl when it is understood that more fat is taken into the system than can be thrown off in a normal manner through the liver, and so it makes its way through the pores of the skin, enlarging them and causing the complexion to be oily. Thus it is that failure to keep the skin perfectly clean is chiefly the cause for this difficulty. To obviate it the flesh must be thoroughly and regularly cleansed to remove the dust from the pores, as they cannot throw out the dirt unassisted.

Pores, it should be remembered, are like tiny lung cells giving air to the skin. If they are clogged they struggle for breath and this causes dilation. It is really impossible to prevent dust from getting on the skin through the day, and it is therefore advisable al- [illegible] thoroughly to cleanse the skin [illegible] at night before retiring. Although some fastidious women wear two veils in order to protect the skin of the face, these do not wholly prevent the dust from settling in the pores. It is because the complexion brush does this work so very successfully that its use is strongly advocated, especially as a cure for enlarged pores.

Charm of New Coiffure.

Parting the hair on one side is in some cases very becoming, and in others it gives almost too rakish an effect to be pretty and feminine. It depends very much on how it is done and upon the general good taste of the wearer. The fashion really has its good points, however, and the greatest of these is that it rests the hair. Women's heads have been so overburdened with artificial pompadours, puffs, curls and the like that the hair and scalp have suffered considerably.

The absence of puffs and pompadours has reduced our heads to something like a natural size, and the coiffure change is a matter for rejoicing.

There is no reason that the fashion should be unbecoming, and most of those who find it so are more biased by the absolute change it makes in appearance, for, of course, one's reflection in the mirror does give one a shock until one grows used to it. However, if the trouble lies deeper than this and the part really is unbecoming, do not despair until you have tried the part on the opposite side. You know a man often changes the part from one side to the other to hide a bald spot or for some other reason best known to himself, and you know how different he looks after doing so. Just so with a woman. Since the two sides of the face are unlike it is natural that a different arrangement of the hair will produce different effects.

Perhaps that is the greatest charm of the new coiffures, this irregularity, and the same is true of the new clothes. We had grown so tired of the geometrical precision in our garments that now we have got used to having one side looped up and the other hung down it is hard to say just where we shall stop.

Health and Beauty.

When applying tonic to the scalp a new five cent sewing machine oil can is excellent for this purpose. It puts the application where it is needed without soiling the hair.

White wigs met with enough success at Paris fetes of the late summer and at fashionable watering places to indicate that powdered hair will be in vogue for evening in the coming winter. The high, helmet shaped coiffure will also probably be adopted, as it is suited to the period of styles when the hair was powdered.

Cold feet and hands indicate that the circulation is poor, and those who suffer in this way should exercise every day in the open air and bathe their feet in cold water, rubbing them briskly with the palms of the hands. Following the cold bath in the morning, a few simple exercises should be taken, notably the one of raising the body on the toes with arms aloft, then inclining it and trying to touch the floor with the finger tips without bending the knees. Tight stays, tight clothing and high, tight collars should certainly be avoided.

The Gibson Robbery

A Smart Piece of Detective Work

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"Mr. Harley?" inquired the white haired, elderly man, stepping into the private office of the junior member of the law firm.

"I am Rogers," said that young man courteously. "My partner, Mr. Harley, has not yet returned from lunch. Did you wish to see him particularly?"

"No. Either one will do," returned the other hastily. "I was directed here by my friend Dr. Brown. He gave me to understand that your firm did a little detective work now and then."

"Hardly that," returned Rogers, placing a chair for his client and regaining his own seat, "but in the course of our practice we have chanced upon a number of curious cases that we were fortunate enough to unravel. As a matter of fact, we are rather fond of that sort of thing, although it is not a branch of our business."

The visitor frowned thoughtfully for a moment and then looked sharply at the young lawyer.

"In spite of what you say perhaps I can prevail upon you to undertake a delicate matter for me. It is in the line of detective work, but it requires unusual tact, something that the average detective does not possess. This is not the mere shadowing of a suspected party. It is an endeavor to find a thief among a group of people none of whom could possibly be guilty of theft." He leaned back and smiled at Rogers' look of dismay.

"Tough proposition, eh?"

"Rather. It sounds interesting. Without consulting my partner I'll say that we will take it up as a recreation after business hours."

"Done!" returned the visitor heartily. Drawing a cardcase from his pocket, he laid a bit of pasteboard on Rogers' desk and leaned back in his chair.

"My name is Gibson—James Addison Gibson," he said, nodding toward the card, "and my house was robbed last evening of $10,000 worth of jewels."

Rogers sat up in his chair and listened intently.

"It happened at my country home at Shorecliffe. My wife and I were entertaining six friends from Manhattan, all people of refinement and impeccable honesty.

"During the evening Mrs. Gibson mentioned that she had just received a necklace of diamonds as a birthday gift from me, and she brought out the jewel case and displayed the necklace to her friends. It was greatly admired and I was about to close the case and replace it in my safe in the library when both my wife and myself were summoned to the telephone by an urgent message."

"Was the message really an urgent one?"

"It proved to be an error. There was some mistake about the number, and the Mr. and Mrs. Gibson called for were really my brother and his wife, who lived over on the East road."

"So your absence from the room was really unnecessary?"

"So it appears."

"Did any one enter or leave the room during your absence?"

"I cannot find that any one remembers. I have questioned the servants, and all are unanimous in the protest that they had not entered the room that evening."

"Who brought the message from the telephone?"

"Pun Shah, my Hindu buttler."

Rogers was silent for a long time, and then he asked one more question.

"Did Pun Shah enter the room when he called you and Mrs. Gibson outside, or did he stand in the doorway?"

"He merely stood in the doorway and gave the message."

"May I have the names of the six guests who were present that evening?"

Mr. Gibson nodded.

Rogers drew forth a pencil and notebook. "Please give a brief description of each one as you mention the name, not forgetting to give me the chief characteristics that mark each individual."

"First, there was Rodney Stone, the poet, a dreamy young chap, with his lovely wife, who is quite content to shine in the reflection of his glory.

"Then came Dr. Latimer, a brilliant physician, now driven to death with an immense practice. If he keeps on his present pace without cessation from work he will end in a madhouse. Besides Dr. Latimer, there was Mme. Finelli, the prima donna, who, as you no doubt have heard, possesses an emotional temperament as well as a wonderful voice. Last of all were the Huxfords, father and son, busy Wall street men, almost too fagged out to recollect what the necklace looked like five minutes after my wife had displayed it."

"Those were the six who were alone with the jewels?"

"Yes."

"And they are all unanimous in saying that not one person entered the room during your absence?"

"Yes, although it is singular that Mme. Finelli and Mrs. Rodney Stone both declare that Pun Shah stood in the doorway for a moment and regarded the company rather strangely for a few seconds. Mme. Finelli resented the impertinence and made a gesture of dismissal. After that the man vanished. As a matter of fact, Mr. Rogers, not one of my six guests can recollect the topic they were discussing when I entered the room and discovered that the diamonds were missing.

"Now, what am I to do? The case is a singular one, and I do not care to call the police into the matter, although the loss is a greater one than I can afford to withstand. The gift to my wife was rather an important matter financially." He smiled ruefully.

Mr. Rogers put up his notebook and donned his hat.

"Where is Pun Shah now, Mr. Gibson?" he asked.

"Down at Shorecliffe, I presume. He was there at noon when I motored up to town."

"Can you take me to Shorecliffe at once?"

"Certainly; my car is at the door."

Rogers dictated a brief message for his partner and left the office with Mr. Gibson. In five minutes they were spinning toward the Thirty-fourth street ferry to Long Island City.

Shorecliffe was a handsome estate on the north shore of the sound, and Mr. Gibson and the young lawyer reached the gates within an hour after leaving Rogers' office.

A grave eyed Hindu in snowy turban admitted them to the house, and Rogers was conscious of a peculiar sensation along his spinal column as he met the man's piercing glance.

He felt in that moment that Pun Shah knew the reason for his coming as well as many other things that he would not divulge.

He followed his host into the library and listened intently while Mr. Gibson pointed out the table where the jewels had lain during his absence at the telephone. The table was between two French windows that opened upon the front veranda.

"Were the windows open last evening?" asked Rogers.

"They were both closed. It was chilly and we were enjoying a fire on the hearth."

Rogers was silent for a long time. His eyes wandered from one spot to another. Once they glimpsed the corner of Pun Shah's snowy turban outside the door, and again he was sure that the man's jetty eyes were regarding him from a heavily beaded curtain that separated the library from a smaller adjoining study.

"Well, Mr. Rogers, I am wondering if you exonerate all my friends. My theory does not permit of suspicion pointing to one of them," remarked Mr. Gibson at last.

"My theory, Mr. Gibson, is that all your six guests were accessory to the deed."

"What? My dear sir"—

"Wait a moment, sir. I did say that they were accessories to the deed, but it was quite unconsciously so on their part. Have you several strong men on the place, men whom you can trust?"

"Yes. There is Baker, the gardener, with his assistants, besides my chauffeur and the second man, four altogether. Why, may I ask?"

"Please summon them to this room, and after that," continued Rogers in a low tone, "have the man, Pun Shah, sent in."

Mr. Gibson smiled grimly. "So that's it, is it? I couldn't see how the rascal had a chance. Excuse me, if you please, while I send for the men."

He left the room and Rogers waited there alone. Presently he heard a stealthy footstep behind his chair and a hot breath on his neck. He jumped just in time to escape the wicked knife of Pun Shah, whose dark face was convulsed with anger.

Rogers had whipped out a revolver, and so the two were standing facing each other when Mr. Gibson returned with his four servants.

"What is this, Pun Shah?" demanded his master quickly, but the man only bowed his head in silence.

"Your man was about to kill me," said Rogers coolly, "because I have discovered that he is the one who stole your diamonds."

"Is it possible? Pun Shah, what have you to say?"

The Hindu fastened a look of deadly hatred on the young lawyer and, snatching off his turban, drew from its folds the string of diamonds that had so mysteriously disappeared. He flung the ornaments on the floor at his master's feet and with a swift, gliding movement vanished from the room.

No one made a movement to follow, and an instant later they saw the flicker of his white turban as he disappeared down the driveway.

Mr. Gibson dismissed his servants with a gesture, dropped the string of diamonds in his coat pocket, and faced Rogers.

"How did you fasten the crime upon Pun Shah so quickly? I had evidence that no one saw him enter the room, and"—

Rogers put up a hand. "It is easily explained. Your butler possesses unusual hypnotic powers. He simply hypnotized the six guests in your drawing room, took the diamonds from beneath their noses and disappeared. They might have been puzzled by the incident which made them accomplices in his crime, but they were quite innocent of any wrongdoing. In fact, they didn't know what had happened after he left the room."

Mr. Gibson sat down and drew his check book toward him.

"This is such a gratifying exhibition of your cleverness, Mr. Rogers, that I must show my appreciation in a substantial way. Here is a check for $1,000. Shall I make it out to you personally or to your firm?"

"To Harley & Rogers," said the junior partner dizzily. "Harley ought to have something to make up for losing the fun of this job."

A letter, so constructed without punctuation that it can be read in a number of different ways, giving directly opposite meanings, was printed in an Indiana newspaper in 1855. The letter follows:

A LOFTY GYMNASIUM.

Fine Exercise in the Great Dome of the National Capitol.

It would not be suspected that the great dome of the capitol could be made a gymnasium, but it is used by not a few people in Washington, and especially by some of the employees of the capitol, for purposes of exercises and the like.

Its chief apparatus in that line is the many winding steps to the top of the lantern—287 feet in the air. You go round and round and round and climb and climb. That sort of thing makes for firm muscles and is said to be the best anti-fat cure to be had anywhere, and especially in Washington. You can lose ten pounds in one trip.

The thing is done at record speed, however. It is not a slow going up and a slow going down, although with other people this seems most ample labor, but doing the thing in five minutes and less. It is a rush up and a rush down.

People who climb the stairs for sightseeing purposes are astonished to see the Mercuries rush in the ascent or the descent, but of course they do not know what it is all done for.—New York Sun.

Wanted a Haunted House.

The following curious letter was recently received by a house renting agency in London:

"Have you a reputed haunted house on your books? I am not afraid of ghosts. I do not as a matter of course believe in their existence, and I am willing to live in a house for a long or short term by arrangement, of course rent free. Should there be no ghost, then, if you wish it, I shall be willing to testify on oath to the fact. But should I see an apparition I will keep the matter secret and only acquaint you with the circumstances. I will pledge myself not to pander to local gossip. I have a small income on which I can subsist. My sole object in thus applying to you is to be allowed to live in a place in which I do not need to pay any rent."

The inquirer was informed that the firm had no haunted houses on its list, but would inform him when it had.

Quaint Old English Ceremony.

On the last day of each October the city solicitor of London, with an assistant, attends upon the royal remembrancer, when by proclamation "the tenants and occupiers of a piece of waste ground called the moors, in the county of Salop," are commanded to "come forth and do your service upon pain and peril that shall fall thereon." The solicitor chops in halves two fagots, one with a hatchet and the other with a bill hook. Afterward comes the summons to the tenants, etc., of "a certain tenement with a forge" in the Strand and the payment of six horseshoes, with sixty-one shoe nails, by the solicitor. This forge has long ceased to be, and the same shoes and nails are used year after year, the shoes being at least two centuries old.

Salty Savored Speech.

The natives of the coast town down east discuss every phase of life or death in terms of the sea.

A fisherman had recently laid his wife, Delia, to rest in the village cemetery. He visited the spot a few days afterward with the undertaker, and found another newly made grave directly behind that of his wife. Regarding it curiously, he said to the undertaker:

"Wal, s'r, Si, who's that buried thar astarn o' Dele?"—Youth's Companion.

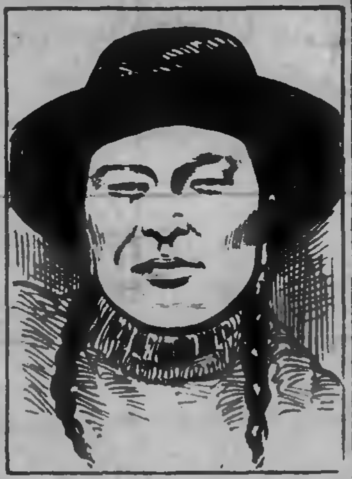
CROP-EARED WOLF DIES

HE WAS HEAD OF THE BLOOD BAND OF THE BLACKFEET.

Celebrated Old-Time Chief Opposed Any Sale of Indian Lands to the Palefaces—He Lived in a Modern House and Was a Leader of Agriculture Among the Indians—Wore a Uniform.

With the passing of Crop-Eared Wolf, one of the last of the old-time Indians is gone. The deceased chief was head of the Blood band of the Blackfeet, whose reserve is the largest in Canada. Wolf was the chief adviser of some 1,200 Indians and nothing was done without his sanction. He was stern with his own people, but kind to the white man as long as he did nothing to interfere with the Indian or his rights. He was a most careful guardian of Indian rights. Some years ago an agitation was raised by farmers in the vicinity of the reserve to buy a portion of the southern section, lying in the vicinity of the town of Cardston. A price was offered that would have made every Indian on the reserve independently rich, but the old chief resolutely refused to give his consent. He would have nothing to do with the sale of Indian lands to the white man. He insisted that the Indian treaty gave the reserve to the Indians as long as grass grew and water flowed, and from his position he could not be moved.

It is said that one of the last things Crop-Eared Wolf did before his death was to call his minor chiefs and people together and make them promise that they would never sell their land to the white man. Their tract is one of the most fertile in the whole Province of Alberta and would be valuable as a tract for colonization purposes.



CROP-EARED WOLF.

Crop-Eared Wolf was the proud possessor of one of the medals given to the Indian chiefs of Western Canada some years ago. He always wore the uniform of a chief, which in modern times is blue serge with brass buttons, supplied by the Indian Department.

He was an ardent advocate of peace. Many a tempestuous time on the Blood reserve was brought to a happy issue through his intervention. At the time the Indian murderer, Charcoal, was at large, Crop-Eared Wolf was one of the party constantly on the watch for his capture. It was through his help that Jas. Wilson, agent on the Blood reserve at the time, was able to make the capture that brought the murderer to the gallows.

Crop-Eared Wolf had a greater sense of the fitness of things than is generally found in an Indian. It is told that a photographer called on him once for the purpose of taking his picture. Wolf was very indignant. He explained through the interpreter that it would have been correct etiquette if he had invited the camera man to visit him, but it was a violation of good taste for him to come unsolicited. Wolf had an aversion to having his face snapped, and the photographer had to return home without his picture.

Crop-Eared Wolf had a home as well furnished as most houses in towns and cities. Carpets covered the floors. The wigwam, with its open fireplace, was replaced by the kitchen with its modern range. Instead of sleeping on a blanket on the ground, this Indian had a comfortable mattress and bed. Lamps lit the house, blinds covered the windows, cooking utensils hung in their proper places, a table was set to which the Indian agent or farm instructors could well sit up, and paint kept the exterior of the house from becoming weather-beaten.

While Crop-Eared Wolf was averse to selling any part of the Indian lands, he was not in favor of allowing the whole to lie idle. When the Indian Department inaugurated a plan by which the Indians should work a portion of the land, the old chief fell heartily in line, and worked for the accomplishment of the purpose. As a result of his efforts large tracts were broken in different localities on the reserve, and Indians are now working it for the production of crops. In later years he has worked with the agent to prevent the old sun dance, a pagan festival among the Bloods.

Crop-Eared Wolf became an adherent of the Roman Catholic faith, and at his funeral a brass band, composed of Indians, played "Nearer My God to Thee." The funeral was attended by all the Indian staff on the reserve, as well as many friends from the district surrounding the reserve. His burial place was at Stand Off, in the Roman Catholic cemetery there. — Toronto Star Weekly.

OLD WORLD AND NEW

The Start and Finish of a Love Story.

By W. S. ODLIN.

"He looks as if he were one of the statues, just a part of this wonderful picture of the old Italy and the new rolled into one," mused Penelope Gardiner. "He is really more than life size—six feet four if he is an inch."

Her aunt, Mrs. Hammell, swung around sharply.

"Who? Oh, that guard? It is his helmet, my dear child, and his high heeled boots. Wouldn't you think he'd be ashamed to pose like that at the head of the grand staircase? Did you ever see so much gilt braid and shiny leather on one human being?"

Mrs. Hammell's voice had executed a grand crescendo, and Penelope reached forth a protesting hand.

"Don't speak so loud, auntie, dear. He might understand."

But the great, square shouldered figure in glittering uniform stood as impassive as the knight in the old Gobelin tapestry before which Mrs. Hammell stood enraptured, though she continued to criticise the king's guard.

"That's just the difference between our soldiery and what we see abroad. Every one of our lads holds possibilities of doing big things. Foreign soldiers are mere puppets."

Penelope replied with conviction:

"I don't agree with you. That man has the face, the bearing, of one who will some day do things that are worth while. He makes me think of that tapestry knight, setting out to fight for his true love."

Mrs. Hammell gasped and closed her Baedeker with a snap.

"My dear Penelope, I am amazed if you behave this way over the first handsome man you see in uniform how will you feel by the time we have attended a few receptions and met the real nobility, rising young diplomats and all that sort of thing?"

"Thoroughly disgusted, I presume," said Penelope coldly, "and I hope we shall not go to any receptions where tiny men with waxed mustaches and mincing steps will look through my backbone to daddy's newly acquired bank account. It is because that man is so big, so strong and looks as if he could move heaven and earth to achieve for the woman he loved that I was studying him. It is so seldom that I meet a man whom I could look up to," ended Penelope, with a sigh for her five feet eleven inches of graceful slenderness. "I was considering him only as an abstract quantity, a hypothetical man, so to speak."

"I should hope so," was her aunt's indignant reply. "Why, these special guards of the king are gathered in the north of Italy solely for their height, the guidebook says, and no doubt he was found grubbing in some wretched farm or vineyard. In New York he would be working in the subway."

Penelope turned and started to cross the great throne room where through an open window the soft Italian sunlight beckoned to her. The martial figure at the entrance so close to the Gobelin tapestry had not moved the half of an inch, but above the gold braid on his collar and rising up to the peak of his helmet was an unmistakable flush.

Penelope paused, frozen in her tracks, but the man looked straight ahead. She crossed to the window, resting her head wearily on her gloved hand. Her glance traveled over the great courtyard of the palace, while Mrs. Hammell completed her tour of the tapestry hung walls.

"He understood English—every word we said. How intolerably stupid of us! And auntie said he probably grubbed on a farm! No wonder these foreigners think we Americans are rude."

The sunlight waned, and Penelope knew that out on the Appian way tender amethyst shadows were settling. Why could not her aunt be satisfied with Rome's beautiful outdoor life, its drives and walls? Why must she spend days and days in musty churches and hideously garish palaces? She looked back into the room. Lovely shadows softened the gilt frames and furniture, red and blues blended into purple, and the uniformed figure right faced abruptly. He had dared to watch her as she stood thus at the window! Well, it served her right for talking about human beings as if they were statues or curios.

That night she wrote in her diary:

"Spent entire afternoon in the royal palace. Tapestries remarkable, but rather boring. Bedrooms reserved for various royal guests reminded me of a New York hotel. Were not permitted to enter royal suit of court, but heard laughter of royal children through folding doors, and a hurdy gurdy playing in what must have been the nursery. Italy is a place of disillusions. The natives are learning English, the better to do you, my dear!"

• • • • • • • •

Penelope Gardiner held off the plate card at arm's length and studied it critically. Her caller said:

"It's lovely, Pen—you ought to charge more for your work. You could get it, you know. Rich women love to patronize girls like you"—

"Who once ate off their plates, instead of painting plate cards for them? I think I will charge Mrs. Fitch half a dollar more for each of these cards. They were done to match her Italian villa dining room, you know."

"What I do know," pursued Penelope's caller, "is that you are going with me to Archie Hunter's studio tea this afternoon. The way you have shut yourself off from all of us, just because your father dropped money in the wrong copper mine, is inexcusable. Pen—there are so many who loved you in spite of your money and love you more now because you haven't any—won't you come?"

"St. Anthony himself couldn't refuse you, Kathie," said Penelope, pushing aside her work. "I am going, and what is more, I shall wear my new frock, made over from one that last year I might have given to my maid."

Penelope could say such things without a touch of bitterness. She seemed rather to glory in the fact that she was self supporting, able to face the world which had promised her so much and then withdrawn its hypocritical smiles.

Through the open door of Hunter's studio came the click of teacups and a confused murmur of well bred voices.

"Jolly glad to see you!" exclaimed Hunter, looking up into Penelope's gray blue eyes. Sometimes he had thought that if he could have looked down instead of up she might have said "Yes" instead of "No."

"Isn't it a good crowd today? You see, I had something special to bring them. You haven't met Lecca yet, have you? Hello, there, old chap! I want you to know Miss Gardiner. You wouldn't think he was an Italian, eh, Pen?" Hunter rattled on. "Who ever heard of a six foot Italian, with blond hair at that?"

"My friend Hunter said that he would not make of me either a lion or yet a curio, but listen how he talks." Some one turned on an electric light, and before its flash the soft shadows of the studio disappeared. Penelope gave a little gasp and slowly from Lecca's face every vestige of color faded.

Penelope recovered first.

"Ah, there is Dorothy Kent pouring tea. I know it will be worth drinking." And Lecca, dazed, watched the trail of a shimmering ciel blue voile skirt across Hunter's priceless rugs to the tea table. There for several minutes she stood with her back turned full upon the group around her host and his guest of honor.

She was the center of another laughing group when she felt his compelling gaze drawing her away from the chatter. Hunter was speaking to her in a tone which the tense, nervous girl did not realize was one of renunciation.

"Lecca has been unpacking some of his traps in my farther room. He wants to know if you would like to see them. It's an honor, Pen. Even I have not seen the picture he expects to exhibit at the academy next month. He's a fine fellow. Met him last year in Paris. Awfully glad he has taken a shine to you."

Without speaking Penelope passed through the door whose hangings Lecca drew aside for her. He crossed to a canvas and threw back the drapery which hid it.

"I have named it 'The Old World and the New,'" he said simply.

Penelope looked with widening eyes. There was the tapestried walls of the throne room in all its old world colorings, faded, in places almost obscure, while against it, vital, full of grace and vigor, was the figure of an alert American girl clad in navy blue broadcloth, a velvet picture hat on her soft brown hair and a great bouquet of Roman violets at her belt.

"You see, I have done what you said—something worth while—and, having done it, I have come to show it to you and your people. I wanted you to know that you had made it possible—it is not for sale"— He drew himself up proudly, and she reached out her hand pleadingly.

"And if it was I—I could not buy it. Much has happened to me since the day—in the throne room. We—we have lost everything."

"Ah!" The man drew a long, deep breath. "Fate has indeed been kind; otherwise I might not speak. I was a foolish boy, unworthy son of a gifted father, proud of my authority in the royal guard and my toy uniform—faugh!—until you came, and the man in me cried out in shame. You said I could do it. Have I done it well enough to please you?"

She bowed her head and then raised it again. Yes, without the helmet and the high heels he still towered above her, and then her eyes fell before his earnest gaze.

"That day—it was the same—the glance, the flash, you will forgive me, the message of love. In our country love does not wait. Yet for five years I have worked for you. All I am you have made. Today I may be artist to our king. Will you come?"

"To my king—yes."

And, though his next words were of his own country, the girl understood, for the language of love is the same in the old world and in the new.

Advertise in The Review, it pays.

Two officers hunting wolves on the Dry mountain, in Central Servia, lost their way in a fog. After wandering for fourteen hours one of them lay down in the snow and speedily became unconscious. His comrade bound him with cords, placed him in a sitting position and then rolled him down the mountain. He glided down the slope at terrific speed and reached the bottom safely, being found an hour later in an exhausted condition by a peasant.—London Mail.

Mankind and Machinery.

Why do employes go on strike? An English physician says that it is solely due to the craving for excitement, and remarks that men engaged in exciting pursuits are never found on strike. Machine-like tasks and long hours are the real cause of strikes, he assures us. It is interesting from how many angles comes support of the Ruskin-Morris theories of the degradation of mankind by machinery.

LATEST IN RAILWAY TICKETS.

The Agent Presses a Button and a Machine Does the Rest.

The very latest way of selling railroad tickets is for the ticket agent when a ticket to Pittsburgh or to Cos Cob is requested to simply push a button and thus set a machine at work picking out the type for that ticket, putting it in place, inking it, placing a piece of cardboard over the type and then printing the ticket. The machine hands out the freshly printed ticket in less time than it takes the ordinary ticket seller to select a printed ticket from his rack and stamp the date on the back of it.

Ticket printing machines appeared a few years ago, but it is only within the last few months that a machine has been developed which will do all the work on pressure of a button. The advantages of the machine to the railroads are many, and if experience shows they are always reliable and do not cost too much for their service they will be generally adopted. As it is now tickets are checked up almost like cash at a vast amount of trouble and time. A ticket printing machine is locked, so no one can tamper with it.

Every time a ticket is printed a separate record is made on a slip for the agent to keep his accounts and one for his superiors, by which his accounts may be checked up—an automatic cash register, in other words.—Saturday Evening Post.

Genuine Beggar Poet.

France possesses a genuine beggar poet in Germain Nouveau, a close friend of Paul Verlaine, who has published a number of ballads and sonnets over the pseudonym "Humilis." A selection of these issued in book form some years ago was very favorably received. In one of the notices of his work the author was described by a critic who knows him personally as "a man soured by poverty, who declines to allow his lot to be bettered." Nouveau lives at Aix en Provence, mainly on the alms of the charitable, and is frequently to be seen on Sundays amid the throng of beggars who line the approach to the cathedral.—London Chronicle.

MAYBE the new dancing steps are responsible, maybe it is the unsubstantial, filmy materials used to make fashionable creations, perhaps it is only the eternal search for something new that gives that delightful zest in the acquisition of a new gown. In any case there is noticeable, both in Paris and New York fashions, an amusing tendency toward new style lines. The smartest new street suits are ridiculously short—one sees the uppers of the high shoe or the slim silken ribbon laced ankle, the skirt is so short. To go the daytime décolleté one better, the necks of the daytime dresses, blouses and wraps are cut out in a décolleté curve in the back, the dinner and simple dancing gowns also. On the tailored coats and wraps this is especially amusing, for half the time it looks as if it were the result of an unsuccessful piece of dressmaking and the collar had refused to fit the neck at the back, falling away because cut out too much. When it comes to the waist line indication, if all traces of a waist line are not ruthlessly obliterated, as in many dresses, wide sashes are tied in a halfhearted way around the waist, not even drawn in the snug way one expects of a girdle finish. The one thing that seems natural and that one can cling to with any degree of familiarity is the tunic in some form, for the minaret and its relatives are always the direct descendants of the first garment fashioned by the original home dressmaker.

Hats have threatened to balance atop the head for many seasons. That is all that has come of it till now. A new shape with a brim dashingly turned up at one side is having immense popularity with ultra smart folk. This shape perches on top of the modish coiffure often cocked jauntily on one side. The higher side of the brim turns back at an audacious angle that is continued by the high aigrette or paradise ornaments. The distance from the chin to the top of one of these ornaments is unbelievable even in headgear. None of these ultra and rather bizarre fashions has yet been vulgarized or even popularized. That is always simply a matter of time. An attractive fashion always becomes popular when it takes on conservative lines and colors. In the process, unfortunately, it also becomes vulgarized until every line proportion and color out of harmony makes of it a sorry caricature.

Very charming examples of these new lines are shown here. One of these worn coquettishly, shown in both a front and back view, contains nearly all these new features. Two views, Nos. 1 and 2, a front and side view, show the curtailed skirt, the waist with its peculiar décolléte back and the "poster" style of the hat with its absurdly high ornament. The illusion of a dress and a hat a size too small, judged by our present popular style standard—therein lies the fashion. The material is pale rose satin, the little skirt tunic of silver lace showing a sparkling ribbon-like lamé thread accentuating the design. The corsage, of the pink satin, is V'd in front to the waist and with the new scooped out décolleté back is outlined by a line of sable fur. A soft vestee of illusion replaces a tucker. Sable fur outlines the tunic edge and a supple satin sash ribbon wrinkled into soft folds and twisted loops indicates a very high waist line.

Perched atop of the rather close casque coiffure a black velvet hat tilts in true "Watteau" fashion over one side of the head, and the large black paradise ornament, posed high on the upper brim edge, continues the upward line of the sharply turned back brim.

Outlined by a wire tulle frill, the curiously cut out neck back of the dancing gown in Nos. 3 and 4 has the same novel movement as in the previous model. The filmy double ruffle, however, seems to accentuate it even more than in the simpler frock. The gown has a [illegible] from [illegible] lation—the tunic is of white tulle. This tunic is pointed on the sides, weighted with two crystal bead tassels, and the ruffle is headed by a narrow band of sable like the tunic. It is charmingly sashed with brown tulle, to carry the color of the fur, tying in one of the spread butterfly bows in the back pinned to the gown, with long floating ends; the sleeve ruffle is caught back on the inside of the arm. The satin foundation skirt is draped up in a crossed hidden slash. There is a crystal bead fringe on the petticoat that shows a bit at times through the slash.

An ermine coat, draped into panniers on the sides, has this same revealing line at the back of the neck. The seal collar stole that follows the outline rolls over into a little collar, and the coat seems to be pulled down a bit to accentuate this movement. Two hats are on very much the same idea as that worn in Nos. 1 and 2. One is of velvet, one of plush, and both are black. One is heightened with a fountain aigrette, the other by two paradise ornaments.

What the French Writers Say About Fashions

FIGURINE, in L'Art de la Mode, writes of the modern figure. "I do not know," she says, "if you are as much amused as I am in passing an hour at the great dressmakers, but I can assure you that my diversion is mixed with envy before all the exquisite eccentricities that file before me.

"In the first place, the throwing forward of the abdomen which the dressmakers' models exaggerate is disconcerting and unexpected. . . . . Quick, let us pose before the mirror, and just till we have acquired it practice and [illegible] this effect till accomplished. That day we will appear in this pose and will surely produce an effect, perhaps at some five o'clock tea, perhaps in some drawing room.

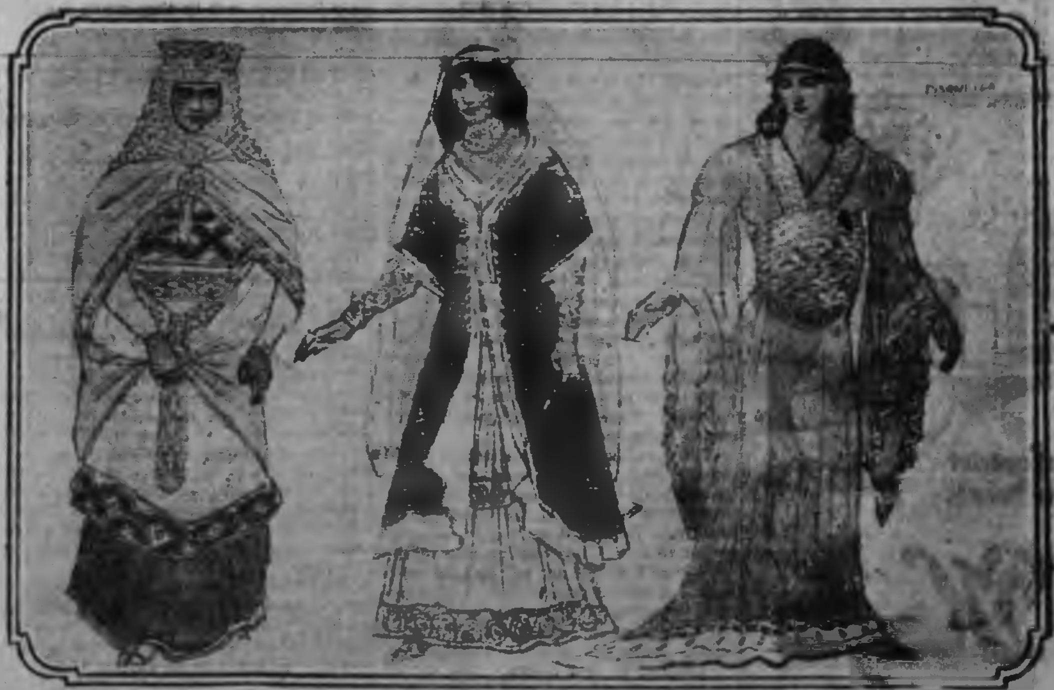
"While awaiting this here are some models which will aid toward this silhouette. First, a robe made of tulle bands [illegible] and ruffles large, [illegible] in the front as if one wished to [illegible] stream, which multiplies the pleatings into the belt—very large, by the way. A corsage made of two large bands of sombre blue and white striped silk simulates a front 'à la vierge' bordered with a line of sable.

"A robe, all of one color, of velours de laine, had a skirt without ornamentation, but the long coat was an unusual novelty."

Camille Duguet, in Chiffons, says in her "Visions Elegantes": "Evening clothes seem to be almost discarded. Oh! the evenings at 'Magic City!' Sleeves have disappeared, the arms display their whiteness without any veiling, and one wonders how corsages stay on the shoulders. They are no longer corsages, in fact, but a trifle, mere nothings—of mousseline or a tulle of such fineness as to be impalpable and almost invisible. The tango danced by a woman so dressed and guided by a professional teacher becomes something unspeakably lovely. The gowns of the tango dancer seem to [illegible] special seduction; one, for example, called 'Nuit Rose' which seems to evoke the poetic and voluptuous silhouettes of the heroines of D'Annunzio. It is in rose crêpe de Chine, with silver lamé threads and an indescribable blue that is both harmonious and violent at the same time. The corsage of rose pink mousseline de soie, transparent over the skin, is enlivened in front by blue stones mounted in a silver setting after the fashion of ancient buttons.

"Another robe, 'Vision Argentée,' merits also some mention. Salammbo must have been so dressed on the terraces of the palace of Carthage. This one is of white satin, veiled with silver lace forming a tunic. The silver lace makes the corsage, but what is noticeable in this gown and which gives it its style of charming novelty is the narrow bands of silver ribbon posed loosely on the tunic, which they encircle like the straps that held them on the waist. At the waist an enormous [illegible] strass and emeralds help to [illegible] resemblance to the marvel[illegible] of the beautiful Carthaginian."

Fashion Hints by Leon Bakst, Russian Designer and Costumer



Court Ladies' Gowns from Pisanella, Costumed by Leon Bakst.
Copyright by the Berlin Photographic Co.

BRIGHT as is the coloring of the Leon Bakst costume sketches now on exhibition at the galleries of the Berlin Photographic Company, in New York city, they paled before some of the fashionable gowns worn at the opening private view. One Florentine gown, designed by Fortuny, it is said, of gold, green and brown, fairly shimmered and glowed with its rich coloring.

Not but that the designs of Mr. Bakst are all that could be desired by those who have a developed color sense. They are veritable orchestrations of color. In fact, it is only just to credit this versatile artist painter with having given the first impulse to the mode of wonderful and rich coloring of to-day's fashions. For it was his costume designs for the Russian ballet which first set Paris agog and thus influenced French gown designers toward brilliant hues.

Since Mme. Paquin, several seasons ago, lent Mr. Bakst her workrooms and staff that he might carry out some ideas he had in modern dress, fashion has been interested in Bakst ideas in coloring, interior decoration and dress, whether on the stage or in private life. Each winter those who saw the Russian opera "Boris Godounow" at the Metropolitan Opera House gained a very good idea of this wonderful color sense, for these costumes were copies of originals that he had designed for its first production abroad.

It is in the "Pisanelle" drawings, the play by d'Annunzio that took Paris by storm last season, that one can trace most clearly this unusual and original dramatic color sense. He has made a certain color a theme—a motif that runs through the scenery and costumes of the last act, as does a leitmotif in music. A certain color red, a powerful shade of red-violet, at the first of the act shows here and there lightly in bits—in the [illegible] of a slave, the skirt or tunic of a court lady or in the decorative background garden scenery. This color gains in mass, till at the end and the climax, the heroine, sentenced to death, is stifled under an avalanche of roses of this color.

The reproduction of a Bakst drawing of three of the court ladies' costumes shows this tone of red in the skirt of the first, in the poignant tunic of the second and [illegible] the third in the skirt, that is [illegible] with a brilliant blue trim. The same color idea is carried out in most fascinating manner in other plays, such as "Thamar" and "Le Dieu Bleu."

The costuming of the athletic [illegible] of "Le Jeux" is amusing because modern athletic clothes are idealized and gently caricatured for the scene, a reversal of the usual order.

This Bakst idea of a color theme in costume has a germ of what may prove a future idea in fashionable woman's garb and is therefore important to all those interested in fashion. [illegible]

Very frequently when separating the white from the yolks of eggs the yolk becomes broken and falls into the white. Dip a cloth in warm water, wring it dry, and touch the yolk with a corner of it, and the yolk will adhere to the cloth and may easily be removed.

We are told that experience is the best teacher—yet some fool men are bigamists.

Accused

Fortunately Vindication Was at Hand

By OSCAR COX

Giuseppe, for this act of perfidy you shall suffer. You have handed me over to be dealt with by the law. I will be the law to you. I will not remain long behind bars. No prison walls have yet been built strong enough to hold me. When I am free, as the carrier pigeon looks about him for the flight he will take, I will locate you. And wherever you are there will I go. It may be when the earth is awakening after a nocturnal slumber, it may be when the sun is pouring a flood of light on hill and vale, it may be when you think yourself concealed in the shadows of evening, that I will come, but come I will, and when you feel my blade cutting into your heart your eyes shall serve you for the last time, and they will behold me bending over you gloating in my revenge.

I paused in my writing and read over what I had written. I was dissatisfied with it. There was not sufficient strength, rancor, bitterness, diabolism, in it to suit me. I wrote it over, vivifying the picturesque points and intensifying the hate. Then I put it with my manuscript in its place at the close of a chapter and made my preparations to leave my room.

Two reasons influenced my going. In the first place, I suffered the impoverishment usual to authors who have not attained recognition as geniuses, and I was expecting to be turned out for nonpayment of rent. In the second place, I was in love and had promised to spend the week end with my betrothed. As to my poverty, I was expecting better things when my novel, "The Bandit's Revenge," should be published; as to my ladylove, I hoped to conceal from her the pitiable condition of my [illegible] altie[illegible].

My apartment was on the top floor of a building in which there were many rooms. I possessed an old satchel, but no wardrobe except what I wore. There were a number of unsold manuscripts in the closet, and in order to fill out the bag I put them in it and, going with it out into the hall, descended. A man on the floor below, seeing me, started toward me. Thinking he might be intending to stop me for my unpaid rent, I hurried on and succeeded in eluding him. Emerging from the building, I felt satisfaction in knowing that I had all my worldly possessions with me and had left nothing in my room that the landlord could hold as security for my debt. Alas, I had left one little article that would bring me more trouble than if I had left abundant security, but I did not know it.

I had in my pocket the wherewithal to pay my way to the suburban town where lived my beloved. I expended 50 cents for a ticket and, having $2 more, spent it for some roses to take with me as a gift for her, leaving me a cent for a newspaper. Then I entered the train, laid my satchel on the seat beside me, unfolded my paper and, assuming a carelessness I did not feel, began to read the news. My poverty did not trouble me. I was used to that. But I dreaded lest my betrothed should find it out.

Nina, who was aware of my coming, was at the station to meet me and took me to her home in a little auto her father had recently given her. I tossed my satchel, containing no toilet articles except a toothbrush, on the floor of the vehicle and took my seat beside my adored chauffeur. Instead of driving me directly home, she made a long detour into the country. It was evident from her manner that she had something of importance to say to me and was making an opportunity to say it. As soon as we were on a country road she slowed down and said:

"My dear Luigi, I hope that what I am going to say to you will not lead you to think that I do not trust you implicitly. It is papa who is uncertain about you. He would prefer that I should marry a man born in America, whose family and antecedents we might learn about. You know that you have no relatives in America, and in order to learn of your ancestry and status in Italy one must go there to make an investigation. I have told papa what you have told me—that you are a descendant of the historical Colonnas; that your father is a member of the Italian parliament and has been a cabinet minister. Papa says, 'What proof have you of this?' and I can only reply that I have your word for it. And when papa asks me why I believe you and I say it is because I love you he laughs at me."

"My dear Nina," I replied, "have patience. I have written for such proofs of who and what I am as shall convince any doubter. Meanwhile, though I do not expect your father to feel satisfied concerning me, it seems to me that if you really love me you will trust me."

Had I not romance in my nature I would not be a novelist. Romance led me to take the ground that there is something in true love to induce a woman to trust the man she loves without calling on him for his credentials. I went into a rhapsody about this beautiful faith in a loved one and succeeded in infusing the sentiment into Nina. I was all I pretended to be and was only concealing from my betrothed my poverty, which my hopeful disposition led me to think would soon be ended. But there was not a single reason in my words why she should put faith in one whom she saw only through the romance tinged eyes of a lover. Yet I succeeded in drawing from her an impassioned statement that if I were accused of being a member of the dreaded Camorra society, if I were convicted of being a perpetrator of Black Hand crimes, still would she believe that I was maligned and innocent. I kissed her again and again, telling her that her confidence in me had enhanced my love for her tenfold.

Hours had passed when we returned to her house. Leaving me, Nina went straight to her father and told him that my credentials were expected shortly and till their arrival she would only ask him to receive me conditionally. This satisfied him, and I was made quite welcome.

The next morning, Sunday, opened bright and beautiful, and my spirits partook of the serenity of the day. Sunday brings relief in many ways, and this Sunday brought an especial relief to me. I felt comfortable in the fact that I would not be troubled with duns. I passed some time after breakfast reading a morning newspaper. One piece of information I read especially interested me. It was headed, "Followed to His Death." An Italian had been found dead in his bed with a knife sticking in his heart. The police had discovered a clew to the murderer, and his arrest was expected. The clew indicated that the man had been murdered from revenge. The supposed murderer had occupied a room in the same building with his victim and had left a paper on which was given the motive for the crime. He had fled, but the police had a description of him. But what struck me flat aback was that the murder had been committed in the house where I had had my room and which I had left the day before.

As I read on another shock awaited me. The murderer had been for some time a lodger in the same building and had been given notice to move for nonpayment of rent. He had been seen to leave the house soon after the murder had been committed, a description of him was in the hands of the police, and he was being traced by detectives.

A sudden thought—a horrible thought—struck me. This case fitted me exactly. I had been notified to leave my room for nonpayment of rent. Great heavens! They were looking for me!

Here was a pretty combination of circumstances. In addition to other uncertainties about me, I was in the position of a murderer flying from justice. I dreaded that the police might come down on me at any moment. Calling Nina, I led her out into the garden where we were alone and said:

"Sweetheart, I am about to be accused of having committed a crime. Will you trust me as you yesterday said you would?"

"What crime?" she stammered, paling.

"Murder."

"Oh, heavens!"

"Here they come now."

I saw several men passing through the gate. They came up to me, and one of them, putting a hand on my shoulder, said, "You're wanted."

"What for?"

"Murder."

"The one committed in the apartment on X street?"

"Yes."

"What proof have you of my guilt?"

"That you will find out ou your trial."

Nina's father, followed by her mother and the rest of the family, came hurrying from the house to learn what was the matter. A police officer stated the case, and when I demanded some evidence against me, after consultation with his fellows, he drew a paper from his pocket and began to read:

"Giuseppe, for this act of perfidy you shall suffer. You have handed me over to be dealt with by the law. I will be the law to you. I will not be long behind bars. No prison walls have yet been built strong enough to hold me."

"Stop!" I shouted, laughing hysterically. "I know what that is. I must have left it in my room when"—

"You admit it?"

"Certainly I do."

"Oh, go on," wailed Nina.

"When I am free, as the carrier pigeon looks about him for the flight he will take, I will locate you, and wherever you are there will I go. It may be when the earth is awakening after a nocturnal slumber, it may be when the sun is pouring a flood of light on hill and vale, it may be when you think yourself concealed in the shadows of evening, that I will come, but come I will, and when you feel my blade cutting into your heart your eyes shall serve you for the last time, and they will behold me bending over you gloating in my revenge."

As the man stopped reading I heard a thud, and, turning, I saw Nina lying in a heap on the ground. Her father picked her up and was about to carry her away when she revived and insisted on remaining, giving me a look of terrible appeal for my vindication.

"These fools," I cried—"these confounded fools have taken the closing paragraph of a novel I have been writing for a threat to kill a man. Of all the stupid asininity I ever heard"—

The police force looked at each other, doubtful as to whether or no they had made a mistake.

"Can you prove what you say?" asked their chief.

"Certainly. In my satchel I have my novel and the substitute for that paper which I rewrote."

My mortification at pulling only manuscripts instead of toilet articles from my satchel was overtopped by my delight at having a vindication at hand. The policemen went back to the city without me, and my escape from arrest excited the sympathy of all my entertainers. I was invited to remain till my credentials came from Italy, and when they arrived they contained a check from my father that set me up in good shape.

Nina and I are now very happy together. I have given up scribbling, my father-in-law having taken me into his business.

A DRAMATIC MEETING.

When Thaw Faced Jerome at the Door of His Hotel Room.

In the little hotel at Colebrook, N. H., at which the principals in the Thaw case were staying William Travers Jerome occupied rooms with Deputy Attorney General Franklin Kennedy exactly opposite the elevator, one floor above the rooms occupied by Thaw and his mother. Thereby hangs a tale.

The night was warm. Jerome and Kennedy sat in their rooms discussing the case, with the doors open. Jerome was facing the door leading into the hall. Suddenly Thaw appeared in the doorway. Jerome, his mind filled with stories of the threats of Thaw against him, leaped to his feet and half started toward the slayer of Stanford White. Thaw, equally startled, glared at the man who more than any other now alive he considers his deadly enemy.

But Thaw was the first to recover his equanimity. With a cold bow he said: "Good evening, sir. I seem to be in the right church, but the wrong pew." Whereupon he turned and went downstairs one flight.—New York Tribune.

New Road System In France.

In France a new system of road designation for the convenience of tourists has been adopted. Every road in the country will be given a name and a number, and these designations will be painted upon direction posts at the road crossings and the hundred meter posts along the roads. The roads in each case will be numbered. The direction post will state the class of highway and the number of the road. The tourist starting on a journey will need only a strip of figures, and he will be able to find his way anywhere.

German Soldiers Abused.

ZABERN, Alsace, Germany, Jan. 3.—A local newspaper, The Anzeiger, yesterday printed detailed charges of abuse of soldiers and civilians by Lt. Baron von Forstner, Lieut. Boittge and Sergt. Hoeflich of the 99th Regiment. Capt. Von Kistowsky of the same regiment is also accused by The Anzeiger of insulting and permitting insults to private soldiers.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Varicose Veins.

In mild cases of varicose veins, especially in young and otherwise healthy people, the symptoms are very slight. There is a feeling of weight in the leg and a dull ache toward the end of the day. The ache is soon relieved by the patient's resting with the leg somewhat raised, so that the blood can flow back more easily. Sometimes cramp complicates the trouble, and the cramp is likely to return again and again until life becomes a burden.

More serious complications are thrombosis, or the clotting of the blood in the vein, and phlebitis, or inflammation of a vein. Often a form of eczema appears in the skin of the leg, or an ulcer may arise. When varicose veins are very troublesome surgical treatment is advisable, but the milder cases can be much relieved by rest and proper bandaging.

A KING AS AN ACTOR.

He Didn't Intend It, but the Moving Picture Men Caught Him.

While King Christian of Denmark was cruising with the queen and their two sons in his yacht Itita off Aarhus, Jutland, the party were startled by the sound of shots and shrieks for help. The king immediately gave orders to sail in the direction of the sounds.

They found several boats manned with crews of the most desperate looking type engaged in a regular battle.

The king was making arrangements for speedy intervention when he saw through his binoculars another boat, a little away from the others, with a man at the stern calmly turning the handle of a cinema camera. The sight of that unruffled figure made the king smile, and he ordered the yacht to be "taken out of action."

At that moment, however, fate took a hand in the game. The actress who took the part of the heroine jumped overboard to escape from the villain, but halfway to the shore she became exhausted and would have drowned if the king had not detected a genuine ring in her cries of distress. A boat from the royal yacht was manned and came to the rescue of the actress.

The silent man at the camera stuck to his post and thus gained the distinction for his firm of having a king among its actors.

WISCONSIN'S NEW CAPITOL.

It Will Be Crowned With the World's Fourth Highest Dome.

The fourth highest dome in the world is that of the new Wisconsin state capitol, with a height from the ground of 269 feet 8 inches without the bronze statue of a woman which will increase it to 287 feet. The three domes which are higher are those of St. Peter's cathedral at Rome, 330 feet; the Duomo at Florence, Italy, 310 feet, and the national capitol at Washington, 307½ feet.

The dome on the Wisconsin capitol is more than 104 feet in diameter at the base. It is constructed of concrete, re-enforced with 2,300 tons of steel, with exterior wall made of 8,000 tons of white granite. In order to place the main steel girders, each of which weighs twenty-three tons, it was necessary to erect a square steel tower through the center, with derricks which could be moved from corner to corner.

The dome alone will cost $2,500,000, considerably more than one-third the price for the whole building, which is limited to $6,000,000.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Prize Crop Counties.

No other county in the United States from the Atlantic to the Pacific has the distinction of Lancaster county, Pa. For fifty years it has stood as the richest farming county in the land. The tillers of the soil try to raise better crops each successive year. McLean county, Ill., now stands second to Lancaster, with Los Angeles county, Cal., a close third and Whitman county, Wash., fourth.—Argonaut.

Faithful Diary Keepers.

Henry Ballinger of Coeur d'Alene, Ida., has kept a diary continuously since Sept. 18, 1854. Miss Laura Gwinnup of Vail, N. J., has kept a diary since Nov. 17, 1854, not missing a day, and R. C. Weaver of Findley Lake, N. Y., has kept one since April 1, 1854, six months longer than Mr. Ballinger. Mr. Weaver is eighty-seven years of age and reads without glasses.—Christian Herald.

Modernizing Ben Nevis.

Ben Nevis, Scotland's highest mountain, may be commercialized to meet the demands of tourists. A project is under way looking to the erection of a hotel on the peak to occupy the site of the former meteorological observatory. The plans embrace a railway nearly five miles long. In an ordinary season it is estimated that fully 15,000 people climb Ben Nevis.

China's Postal System.

The Chinese are great letter writers, and something over 350,000,000 of letters were carried by the Chinese posts last year. It is the most extensive and the cheapest postal system in the world. The Chinese post will carry a letter to any part of China for about a cent and a half, whether it is sent by rail or horse or foot courier.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, Jan. 5.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 128 carloads, comprising 2024 cattle, 1500 hogs, 668 sheep and lambs and 93 calves.

Butchers—Choice steers sold at $8.75 to $9.00; choice heifers, $8.25 to $8.50; good steers and heifers, $8 to $8.25; medium steers and heifers, $7.25 to $7.75; common, $5.75 to $6.25; choice cows, $6.75 to $7.25; good cows, $5.50 to $6.25; medium cows, $5 to $5.25; common cows, $3.75 to $4.50; bulls, common to choice, $4.50 to $7.

Stockers and Feeders

There was a limited number of stockers and feeders, which sold at firm prices. Choice heavy steers were reported as selling at $6.50 to $7; good, $6 to $6.50; stockers at $5 to $5.75.

Milkers and Springers.

A limited number of milkers and springers sold at $54 to $85; better quality would have sold at higher prices.

Veal Calves.

Receipts were light, 93 all told, and prices were as strong as ever. Choice veals, $10 to $11; good, $9 to $10; medium, $7.50 to $8.50; common, $6 to $7; eastern rough quality calves, $5 to $5.75.

Sheep and Lambs.

Sheep, ewes, $5.50 to $6.25; culls and rams, $3.75 to $4.50; lambs sold at $8.75 to $9, and one or two choice lots light weights, sold at $9.12½ to $9.25.

Hogs.

Selects, fed and watered, sold at $9 to $9.25.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Jan. 5.—At the Montreal Stock Yards west end market the offerings today amounted to 500 cattle, 400 sheep and lambs, 1700 hogs and 100 calves.

There was no improvement in the trade in cattle today owing to the fact that packers and butchers generally have carried over fair stocks from the holiday trade, consequently the demand was very limited and the market dull. The supply was somewhat larger than expected and in excess of requirements, and an easier feeling prevailed. Prices declined 25c per 100 pounds, but even at this reduction the few buyers present showed no disposition to operate anyway freely. The demand from American buyers for stock for shipment to the United States has ceased for the present on account of the higher prices ruling.

The trade in small meats was also quiet, but the tone of the market was firm on account of the limited supply offered. Choice lots of western lambs sold at $9 to $9.25, but mixed lots of only medium quality were disposed of at $8.50 to $8.75, while ewe sheep brought $5.50 to $6 per 100 pounds. The trade in calves was slow, as the quality of the stock offered was poor. Owing to the limited supply of hogs coming forward, the undertone to the market is strong, but prices show no actual change as compared with a week ago. The demand from packers was good, and sales of selected lots were made at $9.75, and straight lots at $9.50 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars. Further supplies of hogs are expected from the Canadian Northwest later in the week, which shippers are making considerable money on, as prices here are much higher than in the Winnipeg market.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $8.50 to $8.75; do., medium, $6.50 to $7.50; do., common, $5.50 to $6; canners, $4.25 to $4.75; butchers' cattle, choice cows, $7 to $7.25; do., medium, $6 to $6.50; do., bulls, $5 to $7; milkers, choice, each, $90 to $95; do., common and medium, each, $80 to $85; springers, $70 to $75.

Sheep, ewes, $5.50 to $6; bucks and culls, $5 to $5.25; lambs, $8.50 to $9.25.

Hogs, f.o.b., $9.50 to $9.75.

Calves, $3 to $15.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

CHICAGO, Jan. 5.—Cattle—Receipts, 23,000; market steady; beeves, $6.70 to $9.35; Texas steers, $6.90 to $7.90; stockers and feeders, $5 to $7.50; cows and heifers, $3.50 to $8.50; calves, $7 to $11.50.

Hogs—Receipts, 42,000; market, mostly 10c up; light, $7.90 to $8.25; mixed, $7.95 to $8.35; heavy, $7.95 to $8.37½; rough, $7.95 to $8.05; pigs, $7.15 to $8.20; bulk of sales, $8.15 to $8.30.

Sheep—Receipts, 32,000; market, steady; native, $4.75 to $6.15; yearlings, $5.55 to $7.15; lambs, native, $6.70 to $8.25.

Rose Petal Beads.

The latest fad in personal adornment is a rope of rose petal beads, beads made from rose petals. The secret for making them has just been divulged and comes from Algeria, where they have been making rose petal beads for the past fifty years. And they are not so perishable as one would think, the old lyric coming to one's mind, "Gather ye rosebuds while ye may; old time is still a-flying." Strands made thirty years ago are in existence, and they are still durable. The life of them, however, as of other things, depends upon the usage given them.

BOARD OF EDUCATION WANT INCREASE OF $8200 IN APPROPRIATION FOR YEAR

Statement of Estimated Receipts and Expenditures and General Financial Report

NEED $81,700

The general statement of receipts and expenditures of the Board of Education was presented by Mr. L. M. Hayes, K.C., at the last meeting of the 1913 board, last evening.

An increase in the appropriation of $8,300 will be required this year, due to operating expenses of the two new schools, increase in salaries of school teachers according to schedule and also industrial classes.

IT WAS NOT LIKE THIS IN 1907-1908 CONDITIONS WERE FAR MORE SERIOUS

Under a heading of "What One Year of Borden Rule Has Brought to Us," The Examiner has a terrible tale of woe. The country has gone to the dogs, since the Laurier administration gave up the reins and sad indeed is the lot of the people of Canada.

On the other hand, all is well in the Liberal camp, Peterborough included! What a whopper!

It is admitted that at this time of the year, many men are without employment. It was ever thus. But conditions are not quite so bad as during the winter of 1907-8, when Sir Wilfrid Laurier was in power. That winter the citizens of Peterborough who could and would, gave freely of charity. Soup kitchens were opened and there was a constant demand for relief, made upon the Charity Board and the Relief Officer. The people lined up, outside the office of the Relief Officer to get food.

Peterborough was not alone, as conditions such as these were experienced throughout the Dominion. The situation in Toronto must still be quite fresh in the minds of the public.

GEN. VILLA ON THE JOB

Rebel Dictator Welcomed With Joy by His Followers

EL PASO, Texas, Jan. 7.—"Villa is here! Vive Villa! Viva Panchito!"

This is the cry that echoes across the desert. Riding an old pinto pony, Francisco Villa, commander-in-chief, governor-general and dictator, spent the afternoon going from camp to camp of the Constitutionalists around Ojinaga, Mexico, conferring with his lieutenants, Ortega, Natera and Rodrigues.

Villa arrived yesterday afternoon, coming through La Mulapas. With him came Rosalio Hernandez, the schoolmaster general, in command of 2,000 south of Mexico men. The other wing was commanded by Monclovio Herrera, cattle-thief by profession before he turned rebel from choice. The reinforcements number 3,500, and are believed to be strong enough to turn the balance against the Federals, who have so bravely beaten off the rebel attack. With the reinforcements came three big field pieces.

GENERAL VILLA.

Rebels Blew Up Train.

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 7. — A variation of the usual dynamiting incident is reported from Aguascalientes. The rebels captured a train at Espiritu Santo. While it was approaching La Honda another party of rebels, believing that the train carried Federals, exploded a mine. The train was blown up and eighty men were killed or injured.

POULTRY SHOW OF PETERBOROUGH ASSN. A REVIEW MAN GIVES HIS IMPRESSIONS

A Plea for the Ignorant—Geology in Poultry—Aristocrats and Democrats — Bantams From Lilliput —Boneless Chicken

By Our Special Reporter

A great many people do not go to poultry shows because they say they know nothing about poultry, that they could not tell a game cock from a cochin and therefore they find it very monotonous.

There is a good deal to be said for these people and the poultry fanciers are to a large extent to blame for this ignorance. It never seems to strike the average fancier that he might impart a little of what he regards as common knowledge about the various breeds of poultry and how they came in existence. There are a multitude of people who do not know that the Wyandotte is a cross between the grey (?) Hamburg and the Cochin. The Review man did not know this till last evening, when he gleaned the information from Mr. Paxman, who took him around the show, and this particular Review man was not altogether ignorant of poultry, having kept a number of cocks and hens of questionable breeds at various times.

If these poultry people want to arouse the interest of the average man and woman in their show they must not take too much for granted. If more people knew the open secrets of poultry breeding, more would go to the show and enjoy comparing one bird with another.

A simple lecture upon the pedigree of the various breeds and how they were evolved, would be far more interesting than "how to prepare a boneless chicken."

Among the Rocks

The Plymouth Rock breed is in itself an interesting subject for demonstration. I just forget what it is evolved from, but it is a cross of some kind, possibly between a Minorca and something else. It is not generally known that there are other kinds of Plymouth Rocks than the speckled or "barred Rocks." There are in fact, almost an infinite variety of Rocks, far more than the geologists are aware of—the same might be said of the Leghorns, and a few others.

A student of human nature might learn a great deal from the close observation of the types and the idiosyncracies of poultry at a show like this. There are democrats and aristocrats in the poultry world. There are fighters and cowards among them. The Dorking is a typical English fowl and has more toes than it knows what to do with. There is a subject for a lecture, Miss Yates or Mr. George Paxman might well employ an hour demonstrating how the Dorking comes to be possessed of an extra toe. There is some inequality here and the subject ought to interest our socialist friends, it is a wonder the birds themselves don't take up the question and cry "down with the Dorkings." But the Dorking is a rather homely looking bird, and I suppose belongs to the lower classes in poultry society, and is therefore not a subject of envy, but for commiseration.

A Subject for Mr. Burnham

If the Dorking is the democrat, the Poland is the aristocrat. This is quite a distinguished looking bird, it's crest reminds one of the coronet of a peer. Our esteemed member for West Peterboro would not keep Polands if he went in for poultry, or if he did, he would have their coronets removed. This would doubtless be a very good idea in this case for I was informed that the Poland is at a disadvantage in the country, that the hawkes easily get them as they cannot see overhead owing to the head-feathers hanging over their eyes.

There is a fine array of bantams at the show. Here are all kinds, just the same as among their larger kin. And in looking at these roosters in miniature one wonders if there may not be something in "Gulliver's Travels" after all, and whether these were originally denizens of the farm yards of Lilliput? It may be that Gulliver brought a pair of these bantams back with him in his pocket, or perhaps a few small eggs.

Sea-Bright and Silkies

The prettiest of all the bantam variety are the sea-brights, but the most delicate and charming of all are the little "Silkies," you would wonder how God could make such delicate creatures.

There are also a number of pidgeons and doves of various kinds. The "Homer," and the "Carrier" in which some men take an intense interest. These birds are not used so much in Canada as in other countries.

There are few Cayuga ducks, with a glossy raven-black plumage. These are not often seen at shows, at least I have never seen them before. There are also geese and turkeys which would send Bob Cratchet into ecstacies.

After going the rounds of the coops, one feels like starting a poultry farm right away. I made enquiries as to what were the best breed to lay in winter, and was told that that question had been engaging the attention of experts for many years, and that no one breed had a monopoly in egg laying. That a hen usually laid if it wanted to, and if it didn't want to, the best thing to do was to eat the bird before it ate your substance.

Boneless Chicken

Our new Mayor Buller made his initial public appearance at the show last evening, and received an ovation. He introduced Miss Yates and wished the exhibition every success. Miss Yates gave a demonstration of "boning a chicken." In the midst of the din of crowing cocks, Miss Yates had some difficulty in making herself heard. She showed how a chicken could be divested of its flesh just like a man taking off his overcoat, when the bones and body framework of the chicken are removed, you fill the fleshy envelope with some kind of stuffing and when roasted, you slice it across as you would a piece of meat. So that every person at the table gets a bit of everything. This ought to prove a blessing in families where one chicken has to be divided among half a dozen and everybody wants a leg and a bit of the breast. The boneless chicken must come if things are going to be more equally distributed. But the sad part of it is that the lucky-bone mus go with the rest!

CHAMBERLAIN STEPS OUT

Retires to Make Room for a Young Man.

Canadian Press Despatch

BIRMINGHAM, Jan. 7.—Joseph Chamberlain having represented West Birmingham, since 1876, announced in a letter to the Unionist Association before leaving for South France today, that he had decided to retire to make ready for a younger man.

Chamberlain has not spoken in the House of Commons for nearly eight years, and has not attended for over two years. Newspapers of all shades of opinion today make laudatory references to his career and express regret over his retirement.

NO DEFINITE IMPROVEMENT IN SIR JAMES' CONDITION

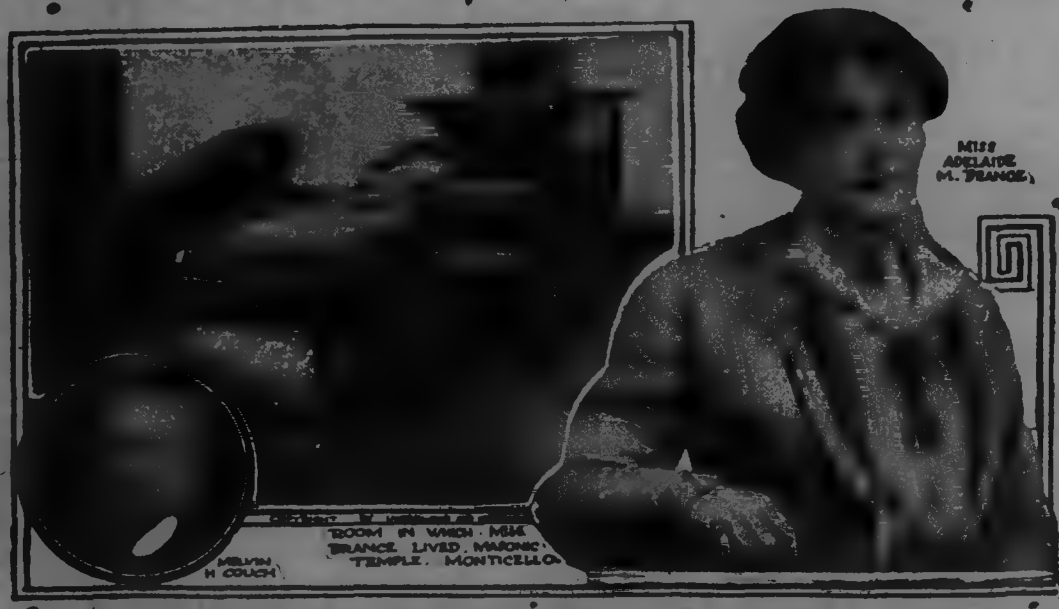
Canadian Press Despatch.

New York, Jan. 7.—A few minutes before eleven o'clock the physicians issued the following bulletin: "Sir James Whitney's condition continues serious without defin to improvement."

New York, Jan. 7.—Qualified hopefulness was the keynote in the conversation and attitude of those surrounding Sir James this morning. Dr. Pyne would not authorise any statement as to whether Sir James might recover so completely as to make it possible for him to take up his duties as Ontario's Prime Minister again, but he cited the case of Premier Scott of Saskatchewan. Mr. Scott suffered from heart and other troubles and was absent from office for his health's sake for many months. To-day he is a new man and literally stronger than ever. Dr. Pyne also absolutely declined to set a date for Sir James' return to Toronto. The Premier himself, is eager about it, and those about him are busy assuring him that everything is alright and that he must not excite himself. Dr. Pyne is particularly pleased with Sir James' ability to take nourishment, which is assisting him to regain his health.

New York, Jan. 7.—The doctors' bulletin issued about eleven o'clock, which contained the statement that Sir James' condition continued serious and no definite improvement could be reported, was a shock to members of his party, who expected to hear contrary, from the Premier's ability to sleep well and return to interest in public affairs. Sir James slept well from eleven p.m. to four a.m. to-day. Dr. Pyne says Sir James' ailment is "old man's heart," of which symptoms are fluctuating pulse. Strychnine and digitalis are being administered in an attempt to correct this trouble.

ADELAIDE BRANCE, LOVE SLAVE OF THE SECRET CHAMBER



MISS ADELAIDE M. BRANCE
ROOM IN WHICH MISS BRANCE LIVED, MASONIC TEMPLE, MONTICELLO
MELVIN H. COUCH

A fresh puzzle concerning the future of Adelaide M. Brance, the secret "love slave" of Melvin H. Couch, of Monticello, N. Y., whose death recently revealed a remarkable romance, was presented after H. O. Brance, the woman's half brother, returned to his home, in Hartwick, N. Y. Miss Brance said she would not go to her brother's home, and he gave an intimation that he had no desire that she should. He said he would have her placed temporarily in a sanitarium. In the meantime the strange position of the woman continues to excite interest and not a little pity among all classes.

FIRE ESCAPES NECESSARY

Fire Chief Recommends Them for King Edward School

According to the report of the Fire Chief to the Board of Education on the annual inspection of the Public schools of the city, the King Edward is sadly in need of fire escapes. From the report, should a fire break out, and the stairway become useless, fearful results might be the outcome. The matter has been brought before the Board by the Fire Chief after two annual inspections.

The schools are reported free from any combustibles and rubbish.

The time for the clearing of each school is:

School.	No. of Scholars	Time.
Central east bldg.	320	1 m

Queen Alaxandra	350	44 s
King George	300	64 s

The matter was handed over to the Property Committee to deal with and in all probability the matter will be given serious consideration.

CLASSES MEET WITH SUCCESS

Appropriation for Industrial Classes is $1100.

The report of the Industrial classes presented at last night's Board of Education meeting by Chairman Eastwood, gave strong evidence as to the good work they are carrying on, and also the success they are meeting with.

Since the organisation here last fall, the Board have kept well under the appropriation of $1,000 set aside for this purpose.

Forty per cent. of the equipment money will be returned to the Government, while fifty per cent. of the salaries paid out for teachers will be supplied by the Government. This means that some five or six hundred dollars will be handed back to the Board. The appropriation next year for the spring and fall terms will be $1,100.

It never seems to strike the average fancier that he might impart a little of what he regards as common knowledge about the various breeds of poultry and how they came in existence. There are a multitude of people who do not know that the Wyandotte is a cross between the grey (?) Hamburg and the Cochin. The Review man did not know this till last evening, when he gleaned the information from Mr. Paxman, who took him around the show, and this particular Review man was not altogether ignorant of poultry, having kept a number of cocks and hens of questionable breeds at various times.

If these poultry people want to arouse the interest of the average man and woman in their show they must not take too much for granted. If more people knew the open secrets of poultry breeding, more would go to the show and enjoy comparing one bird with another.

A simple lecture upon the pedigree of the various breeds and how they were evolved, would be far more interesting than "how to prepare a boneless chicken."

Among the Rocks

The Plymouth Rock breed is in itself an interesting subject for demonstration. I just forget what it is evolved from, but it is a cross of some kind, possibly between a Minorca and something else. It is not generally known that there are other kinds of Plymouth Rocks than the speckled or "barred Rocks." There are in fact, almost an infinite variety of Rocks, far more than the geologists are aware of—the same might be said of the Leghorns, and a few others.

A student of human nature might learn a great deal from the close observation of the types and the idiosyncracies of poultry at a show like this. There are democrats and aristocrats in the poultry world. There are fighters and cowards among them. The Dorking is a typical English fowl and has more toes than it knows what to do with. There is a subject for a lecture, Miss Yates or Mr. George Paxman might well employ an hour demonstrating how the Dorking comes to be possessed of an extra toe. There is some inequality here and the subject ought to interest our socialist friends, it is a wonder the birds themselves don't take up the question and cry "down with the Dorkings." But the Dorking is a rather homely looking bird, and I suppose belongs to the lower classes in poultry society, and is therefore not a subject of envy, but for commiseration.

If the Dorking is the democrat, the Poland is the aristocrat. This is quite a distinguished looking bird, it's crest reminds one of the coronet of a peer. Our esteemed member for West Peterboro would not keep Polands if he went in for poultry, or if he did, he would have their coronets removed. This would doubtless be a very good idea in this case for I was informed that the Poland is at a disadvantage in the country, that the hawkes easily get them as they cannot see overhead owing to the head-feathers hanging over their eyes.

There is a fine array of bantums at the show. Here are all kinds, just the same as among their larger kin. And in looking at these roosters in miniature one wonders if there may not be something in "Gulliver's Travels" after all, and whether these were originally denisens of the farm yards of Lilliput? It may be that Gulliver brought a pair of these bantums back with him in his pocket, or perhaps a few small eggs.

Sea-Bright and Silkies

The prettiest of all the bantam variety are the sea-brights, but the most delicate and charming of all are the little "Silkies," you would wonder how God could make such delicate creatures.

There are also a number of pidgeons and doves of various kinds. The "Homer," and the "Carrier" in which some men take an intense interest. These birds are not used so much in Canada as in other countries.

There are few Cayaga ducks, with a glossy raven-black plumage. These are not often seen at shows, at least I have never seen them before. There are also geese and turkeys which would send Bob Cratchet into ecstacies.

After going the rounds of the coops, one feels like starting a poultry farm right away. I made enquiries as to what were the best breed to lay in winter, and was told that that question had been engaging the attention of experts for many years, and that no one breed had a monopoly in egg laying. That a hen usually laid if it wanted to, and if it didn't want to, the best thing to do was to eat the bird before it ate your substance.

Boneless Chicken

Our new Mayor Buller made his initial public appearance at the show last evening, and received an ovation. He introduced Miss Yates and wished the exhibition every success. Miss Yates gave a demonstration of "boning a chicken." In the midst of the din of crowing cocks, Miss Yates had some difficulty in making herself heard. She showed how a chicken could be divested of its flesh just like a man taking off his overcoat, when the bones and body framework of the chicken are removed, you fill the fleshy envelope with some kind of stuffing and when roasted, you slice it across as you would a piece of meat. So that every person at the table gets a bit of everything. This ought to prove a blessing in families where one chicken has to be divided among half a dozen and everybody wants a leg and a bit of the breast. The boneless chicken must come if things are going to be more equally distributed. But the sad part of it is that the lucky-bone mus go with the rest!

CHAMBERLAIN STEPS OUT

Retires to Make Room for a Young Man.

Canadian Press Despatch

BIRMINGHAM, Jan. 7.—Joseph Chamberlain having represented West Birmingham, since 1876, announced in a letter to the Unionist Association before leaving for South France today, that he had decided to retire to make ready for a younger man.

Chamberlain has not spoken in the House of Commons for nearly eight years, and has not attended for over two years. Newspapers of all shades of opinion today make laudatory references to his career and express regret over his retirement.

NO DEFINITE IMPROVEMENT IN SIR JAMES' CONDITION

Canadian Press Despatch.

New York, Jan. 7.—A few minutes before eleven o'clock the physicians issued the following bulletin: "Sir James Whitney's condition continues serious without defin te improvement."

New York, Jan. 7.—Qualified hopefulness was the keynote in the conversation and attitude of those surrounding Sir James this morning. Dr. Pyne would not authorize any statement as to whether Sir James might recover so completely as to make it possible for him to take up his duties as Ontario's Prime Minister again, but he cited the case of Premier Scott of Saskatchewan. Mr. Scott suffered from heart and other troubles and was absent from office for his health's sake for many months. To-day he is a new man and literally stronger than ever. Dr. Pyne also absolutely declined to set a date for Sir James' return to Toronto. The Premier himself, is eager about it, and those about him are busy assuring him that everything is alright and that he must not excite himself. Dr. Pyne is particularly pleased with Sir James' ability to take nourishment, which is assisting him to regain his health.

New York, Jan. 7.—The doctors' bulletin issued about eleven o'clock, which contained the statement that Sir James' condition continued serious and no definite improvement could be reported, was a shock to members of his party, who expected to hear contrary, from the Premier's ability to sleep well and return to interest in public affairs. Sir James slept well from eleven p.m. to four a.m. to-day. Dr. Pyne says Sir James' ailment is "old man's heart," of which symptoms are fluctuating pulse. Strychnine and digitalis are being administered in an attempt to correct this trouble.

Fire Chief Recommends Them for King Edward School

According to the report of the Fire Chief to the Board of Education on the annual inspection of the Public schools of the city, the King Edward is sadly in need of fire escapes. From the report, should a fire break out, and the stairway become useless, fearful result might be the outcome. The matter has been brought before the Board by the Fire Chief after two annual inspections.

The schools are reported free from any combustibles and rubbish.

The time for the clearing of each school is:

School.	No. of Scholars	Time.
Central east bldg.	320	1 m
West bldg.	160	35 s
Queen Mary	425	60 s
Queen Alaxandra	350	44 s
King George	300	54 s

CLASSES MEET WITH SUCCESS

Appropriation for Industrial Classes is $1100.

The report of the Industrial classes presented at last night's Board of Education meeting by Chairman Eastwood, gave strong evidence as to the good work they are carrying on, and also the success they are meeting with.

Since the organization here last fall, the Board have kept well under the appropriation of $1,000 set aside for this purpose.

Forty per cent. of the equipment money will be returned to the Government, while fifty per cent. of the salaries paid out for teachers will be supplied by the Government. This means that some five or six hundred dollars will be handed back to the Board. The appropriation next year for the spring and fall terms will be $1,100.

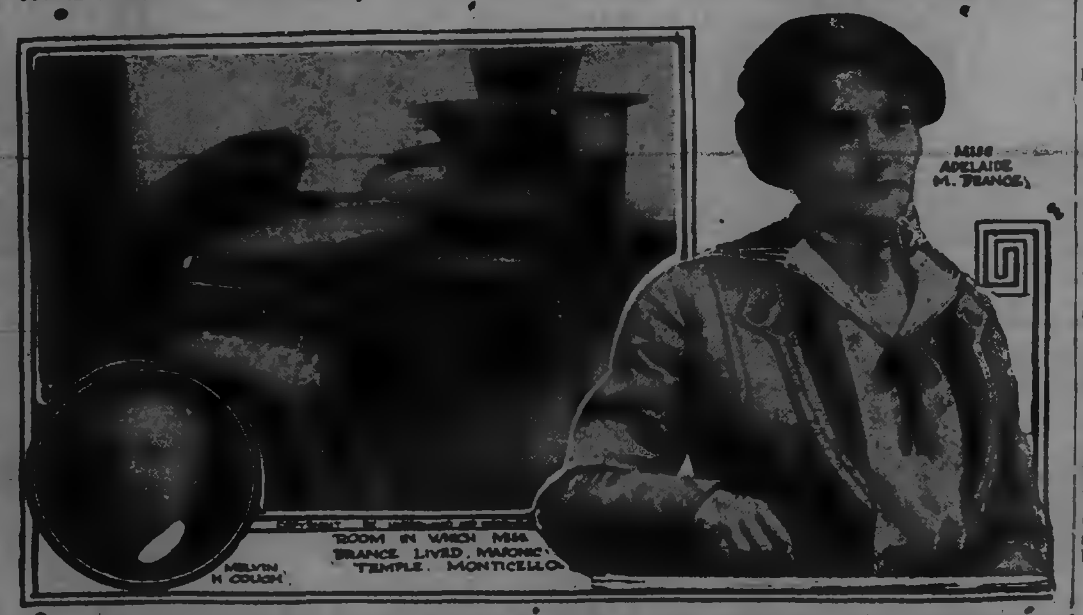
ADELAIDE BRANCE, LOVE SLAVE OF THE SECRET CHAMBER



MISS ADELAIDE M. BRANCE
ROOM IN WHICH MISS BRANCE LIVED, MASONIC TEMPLE, MONTICELLO
MELVIN H. COUCH

A fresh puzzle concerning the future of Adelaide M. Brance, the secret "love slave" of Melvin H. Couch, of Monticello, N. Y., whose death recently revealed a remarkable romance, was presented after H. O. Brance, the woman's half brother, returned to his home, in Hartwick, N. Y. Miss Brance said she would not go to her brother's home, and he gave an intimation that he had no desire that she should. He said he would have her placed temperarily in a sanitarium. In the meantime the strange position of the woman continues to excite interest and not a little pity among all classes.

PETERBOROUGH, WEDNESDAY, JAN. 7, 1914.

A POSTAL LIBRARY.

THE REVIEW has received particulars of a scheme called "the Postal Library." This is a suggestion that Post Office should take up the work of distributing books throughout the Dominion. The promoter of this scheme is Joseph P. Tracy, Commissioner of Commerce and Manufacture for the City of Lethbridge, Alta. It is an entirely new idea and the reasons given for its introduction into Canada are that the people throughout the country are poorly supplied with library facilities. Heretofore philanthropists such as Andrew Carnegie have been largely relied upon to supply the need of libraries. Dependence upon philanthropy is unworthy the great Canadian people. Besides the results of such dependence to date are very meagre and scattered. Grants by Provinces and cities and bequests by private individuals have provided some creditable libraries notably in Ontario. The reports however show that nearly one-half the people of Ontario are still out of reach of any library privileges. The other Provinces are far behind Ontario. Canada has a great frontier. The outlying and sparsely settled districts cannot expect adequate library privileges for generations at the present rate of progress. The Postal Library will supply the whole library need of all the people of every community in the country and that without delay.

The proposition is a very bold one and while admitting its novelty and ingenuousness we can see a great many objections which might be raised by the Postal officials, not to mention the often too much over-loaded postman. The only thing in favor of the scheme is that it would be very servicable in country districts where the people are out of touch with libraries of any capacity. But as a universal thing it would only complicate and over-burden unnecessarily the postal machine.

Mr. Tracy informs us that Mr. Borden has given his assurance that the Postal Library will be considered by the Government. We commend the scheme so far as it applies to outlying rural communities.

WHO IS TO BLAME?

THE CASE OF BIGAMY which was reported in The Review the other day, from Norwood, where a young woman was deceived by an Englishman who had a wife and children in England, is another instance of the laxity of either our marriage laws or of carelessness on the part of pastors. The young woman in this case was a Methodist and presumably she was married by a Methodist minister.

Had the couple been Roman Catholics and the officiating minister a priest such a marriage would never have been gone through, for the priest would require the man's credentials from the last parish he dwelt in. Too many of these trumped up marriages have occurred recently. And the officiating clergymen are not wholly innocent of the blame in the matter. Of course a young woman should be more careful whom she falls in love with, but most of them very foolishly leave themselves in the hands of the minister believing that whatever he does is right and proper. And so it ought to be.

STAGING A NATION.

THOSE WHO THOUGHT the Borden Government was asleep on the naval question ought to be surprised at the recent developments on the Pacific Coast. The Government has decided to construct a four-million dollar dry-dock, capable of handling the largest ocean liners and Dreadnoughts afloat. The significance of this move will be obvious to all those who have any working knowledge of naval or merchantile matters. If you are going to buy a horse the very first consideration is where you are going to keep it. You cannot keep a horse in a kitchen, you need a stable. The amusing blunder of the late Government was in thinking that all they had to do to build a navy was to get a few ships together, sing "The Maple Leaf Forever" over them and lo! we have a navy! They purchased two second-hand ships, cheap, and thought they had established Canada's claim to be called a nation.

Mr. Borden is evidently trying to profit by the mistakes of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and without any bombastic declaration of Canada's nationhood is endeavoring to turn what was mere rhetoric with Sir Wilfrid into a physical actuality. This is the difference between Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Borden, the former is histrionic, he is carried away with his sense of the dramatic. An actor does not need real things, his world is made up of dummies, painted scenery and stage properties. If he is playing a naval drama he has no need for real ships, anything in the shape of a Dreadnought will do, if it be only made of sheet-iron, his imagination and declamation will supply the rest. Sir Wilfrid did very nearly convince some Canadians that they had a navy when the Rainbow and Niobe loomed on the horizon at the back of the stage at Ottawa with Sir Wilfrid in the foreground striking an attitude which was a sort of combination of Nelson and Napoleon.

Sir Wilfrid is French, Mr. Borden is Scotch; that statement explains a great deal. The Britisher can do his share at bragging, and is not unmoved by the spectacular, but he is not satisfied with mere stage properties. He is generally sure of his ground, he sees to it that his gun is loaded before he make a threat. "Rule Britania" is perhaps one of the most egotistical and jingoistical national song that was ever written, yet it has stood the test of time and is as true to-day as when it was first sung. The Britisher has "made good" and has lived up to his claims. He is sure of himself because he is sure of his work, he has put his best into this Empire and he is ready to do his best to sustain it. The future of Canada depends upon men who are thorough and constructive, who are not content with an outside show. The nation that can live, or has any right to live, is the nation that is ready for all emergencies, either on land or sea, that stands four-square to every wind that blows.

This new dry-dock does not necessarily mean that Mr. Borden is contemplating the building of a great Canadian fleet. It may be but a part of a practical policy of co-operation. The feeling among most reasonable Canadians is that there are already too many navies in existence. The only practical and sane naval policy for the present is for Canada to CONTINUE under the very efficient care of the British Navy so far as her coast-line and commerce are concerned—and TO PAY FOR IT. That is indeed the only honorable way.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE GLOBE asks its readers: "Have you ever tried to catch a flee in the uncertain light of early dawn?"

Now that is a nasty, insinuating question!

THE RESULTS of the local option contests ought to satisfy the Dominion Alliance. Brockville booze had a narrow escape. Local optionists coming short of only 104 votes of the required three-fifths.

"FIFTY THOUSAND girls drop out of sight every year," says one newspaper. And we would add, "fifty thousand young men disappear about the same time." But we had thought there were far more weddings than that in a year.

THE Y.M.C.A. has now entered the mission field. Boys' camps have been established in China, conducted on Scout lines which have resulted in fifty conversions. Boys are boys whether white, black or yellow and the Scouts ought to get the little yellow fellows. By the way, there is a young Chinee lad in our own Y.

A MAN who was remanded at the police court in Toronto the other day is said to have written a book in which he claims to be an "imortalizer." He would be more acceptable in Canada if he had a fertilizer to sell. He would make a fortune in the Trent Valley District. But it appears that he wears a wig and is therefore unable to fertilize his scalp enough to raise a decent crop of hair. A man who cannot immortalize his own hair must be turned down as a fraud when he offers to preserve other people's bodies against the slow waste of time.

ONCE AGAIN we have to report the arrest of Sylvia, the report says: "Miss Sylvia Pankhurst, the militant suffragette agitator, was arrested tonight in the East End of London under the provisions of the "Cat and Mouse" Act. Miss Pankhurst was released from jail December 15, after having endured a hunger, thirst and sleep strike to the point of seeming collapse." There is a good deal of meaning in that "seeming collapse." Some silly young women are adepts at fainting away when they know there are strong arms ready to catch them. It would be a funny sequel if Sylvia married a policeman after all! She is certainly "keeping company" with the bobbies.

A MAN GAVE the people of Rome a shock the other day by circulating a rumor to the effect that the Pope was dead. This caused intense excitement for a time. The Vatican was overwhelmed with inquiries, but at that very hour the Pope was quietly conversing with Cardinal Basalius Pompipi, who had not long before congratulated the Pontiff on his vigorous appearance.

The police instituted an inquiry as to the origin of the rumoum, and learned that it was the work of a so-called practical joker, who had telephoned to a friend at one of the big hotels that he knew the Pope was dead.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

All Choirs Please Note.

Lethbridge Herald.

A Toronto minister was praying for reverence in the church and during the invocation he took a side glance at the choir. He hasn't announced that he caught some of the members turning over the book of anthems in preparation for the next item of the service, but that is more than likely what he observed.

The Naval Position.

John Bull.

Germany means mischief, and Mr. Churchill knows it! In inviting Germany to join us in a ship-building holiday he was merely preparing the ground for his speech on next year's Estimates—when he will say to the cranks sitting just below him, "Look how I have tried to cut expenses down—but they won't let me; therefore I am powerless. So please forgive me." And he may possibly quote Canon McLulich, for the last five years English Chaplain at Homburg, who, speaking at a meeting in the Isle of Wight a few days ago, said that "during five years' residence in Germany he had been brought into close contact with some of the most influential people in this country, and no one could get away from the fact that it was the opinion of the highly educated classes, apart from the Army and Navy, that the time was coming when Germany would fight for the command of the sea, but they might be certain that she would never make an aggressive move until she was practically certain that she would come out of the conflict top dog." And, not for the first time, he may even quote us. Wherefore let us repeat:—Germany means mischief—and Mr. Churchill knows it!

A NOVEMBER TRAGEDY.

"The Sorrow of the Skeffingtons" Passes Its Tercentenary

Just three centuries ago on November 4th there occurred a tragedy which set all fashionable London a-ringing, but it is probably now only remembered in the family of Lord Massereene and Ferrard, the representative of those mostly concerned. Sir William Skeffington, of the ancient Staffordshire family of the name whose seats at Skeffington and Fisherwicke rivalled every Midland mansion in hospitality, died and left a very handsome widow. After due mourning Lady Skeffington mixed again with the world, and, being well endowed, she had many suitors. Some most important would-be second husbands were rejected; then came the astounding news that the attractive and rich widow had married her own groom, Michael Bray.

The mesalliance was naturally particularly displeasing to the Skeffingtons, as Lady Skeffington had, under her husband's will, great power over the family estates. Disputes arose, and eventually there was a Chancery suit between Bray and Sir William Skeffington's brother John. Just before the case came on the litigants were persuaded to try and compromise, and a meeting was arranged at a Gray's Inn tavern. Matters seemed likely to be satisfactorily arranged, but Bray, preceding Skeffington downstairs, stopped at the bottom with sword drawn and inflicted a mortal wound on his fellow-litigant. The latter, on seeing Bray with sword in hand, drew his own, and in falling mortally wounded the ex-groom. In a few minutes both were dead. It was a deliberately-planned murder by Bray, but nothing could be done.

The family estates were inherited by the four sisters of the murdered John Skeffington and the deceased Sir William, one of whom married a relative, Sir John Skeffington, from whom the Viscounts Massereene are descended. For the rest of their lives the sisters bore about them a settled gloom, "the sorrow of the Skeffingtons," which deprived them of a beloved brother, making a lasting impression. The mother of these sisters was a Byron of Newstead, and when Lord Byron (the poet's great-uncle) was tried for the murder of Mr. Chaworth an attempt was made to draw a comparison between the two cases. The Skeffington pedigree states that Lady Skeffington's second husband was killed Nov. 4th, 1613, and under John Skeffington's name is the entry, "Killed by Michael Bray, Nov. 4, 1613. Ob. Coelebs," but history is silent as to what became, after the tragedy, of the lovely woman whose marriage to an inferior brought such sorrow to a noble family.

He Heard Plenty.

Farmer Parsnip had a good day at market. His cattle fetched good prices, and so he bought a nice piece of cloth to have made into a suit of clothes. But on his homeward way he lost it, a misfortune which annoyed Mrs. Parsnip very much. Overburdened with her grievance, she told a neighbor about it the next day, strongly condemning her husband's carelessness. A week later the neighbor met Mr. Parsnip. "Good morning, Mr. Parsnip," said the neighbor. "Heard anything yet about your cloth?" Parsnip smiled sadly. "Yes," he said solemnly and mournfully, yet philosophically, "I have—morning, noon and night!"—London Mail.

Up Two Stumps.

Little Johanny was in the habit of wanting more victuals put upon his plate than he could eat. His papa decided to break him of the habit. One day as Johnny insisted upon being served until his plate was well filled his papa said, "Johnny, if I give you this you will have to eat every bit of it or I will punish you." Johnny promised that he would, and bravely did the little fellow try to do so, but in vain. It was too much for him. He would try again and again and then look sorrowfully at his papa. Finally, laying down his fork, he said:

"Papa, if you was me which would you rather do, get a licking or bust?"

A SPLENDID HAZARD

By HAROLD McGRATH

(Copyright 910 by Bobbs-Merrill Company.)

He could not see her eyes very well—there was only one candle burning. Impulsively he snatched at her hand and kissed it. With his life, if need be—aye, and gladly.

Fitzgerald found himself alone with Ferraud again. The secret agent was confident.

"It all lies in the hollow of my hand. Breitmann made one mistake. He should have pushed me off the boat into the dark. He knows that I know. And there he confuses me. But I repeat he is not vicious, only mad."

"Where will it be?"

"It will not be." And M. Ferraud smiled as he livened up the burnt wick of his candle.

"Treachery on the part of the drivers? Oh, don't you see that you can trust me wholly?"

"Well, it will be like this." And reluctantly the secret agent outlined his plan. "Now go to bed and sleep, for you and I shall need some to draw upon during the next three or four days. Hunting for buried treasures was never a junketing. The admiral will tell you that. At dawn!"

Dawn came soon enough, yellow and airless.

"My dear," said Mrs. Coldfield, "I really wish you wouldn't go."

"But Laura and Miss von Mitter insist on going. I can't back out now," protested Coldfield. "What are you worried about—brigands, gunshots and all that?"

"He will be a desperate man."

"To steal a chest full of money is one thing; to shoot a man is another. Besides, the admiral will go if he has to go alone, and I can't desert him."

Coldfield chuckled. "I'll get behind him every time I think of it."

"Kiss me. They are waiting for you. And be careful."

It was only a little brave comedy. She knew this husband and partner of hers, hard headed at times, but full of loyalty and courage, and she was confident that if danger arose the chances were he would be getting in front instead of behind the admiral. A pang touched her heart as she saw him spring into the carriage.

The admiral had argued himself hoarse about Laura's going, but he had to give in when she threatened to hire a carriage on her own account and follow. Thus Coldfield went because he was loyal to his friend, Laura because she would not leave her father, Hildegarde because to remain without knowing what was happening would have driven her mad, M. Ferraud because it was a trick in the game and Cathewe and Fitzgerald because they loved hazard, because they were going with the women they loved. The admiral alone went for the motive apparent to all—to lay hands on the scoundrel who had betrayed his confidence.

So the journey into the mountains began.

Fitzgerald keenly inspected the drivers, but found them of the ordinary breed, in velveteens, red sashes and soft felt hats. As they made the noon stop one thing struck him as peculiar. The driver of the provision carriage had little or nothing to do with his companions. "That is because he is mine," explained M. Ferraud in a whisper. They were all capable horsemen and on this journey spared their horses only when absolutely necessary. They arrived at Carghese at 5 in the afternoon. The admiral was for pushing on, driving all night. He stormed, but the drivers were obdurate. At Carghese they would remain till sunrise; that was final. Besides, it was not safe at night without moonshine, for many a mile of the road lipping tremendous precipices was without curb or parapet. Not a foot till dawn.

In the little inn, dignified but not improved by the name of Hotel de France, there was room only for the two women and the older men. Fitzgerald and Cathewe had to bunk the best they could in a tenement at the upper end of the town; two cots in a single room, carpetless and ovenlike for the heat. Cathewe got into his pajamas and sat upon the bed. "Jack, I thought I knew something about this fellow Breitmann, but it seems I've something to learn."

The younger man said nothing.

"Was that yarn of Ferraud's fact or tommyrot?"

"Fact."

"The great-grandson of Napoleon! Here! Nothing will ever surprise me again. But why didn't he lay the matter before Killigrew, like a man?"

Fitzgerald patted and poked the wool filled pillow, but without success. It remained as hard and as uninviting as ever. "I've thought it over, Arthur. I'd have done the same as Breitmann," as if reluctant to give his due to the missing man.

"May I ask you a pertinent question?"

"Yes."

"Did he know Miss von Mitter very well in Munich?"

"He did."

"Was he quite square?"

"I am beginning to believe that he was something between a cad and a scoundrel."

"Did you know that among her relatives on her mother's side was the Abbe Fanu, who left, among other things, the diagram of the chimney?"

"So that was it?" Cathewe's jaws hardened.

Fitzgerald understood. Poor old Cathewe!

"Most women are fools," said Cathewe, as if reading his friend's thought. "Pick out all the brutes in history. They were always better loved than decent men. Well, good night," and Cathewe blew out his candle.

So did Fitzgerald, but it was long before he fell asleep. He was straining his ears for the sound of a carriage coming down from Evisa. But none came.

CHAPTER XVIII.

THE PINES OF AITONE.

BEFORE sunup they were on the way again. The two young women rode in the same carriage. Occasionally the men got down out of theirs and walked on either side of them. Whenever an abrupt turn showed forward Fitzgerald put his hand in his pocket. From whichever way it came he at least was not going to be found unprepared. Sometimes when he heard M. Ferraud's laughter drift back from the admiral's carriage he longed to throttle the aggravating little man. Yet soon the weight on Fitzgerald's shoulders lightened. If M. Ferraud could laugh, why not he?

"Isn't that view lovely?" exclaimed Laura as the Capo di Rosso glowed in the sun with all the beauty of a fabulous ruby. "Are you afraid at all, Hildegarde?"

"No, Laura; I am only sad. I wish we were safely on the yacht. Yes, yes; I am afraid of something, I know not what."

"I never dreamed that he could be dishonest. He was a gentleman somewhere in his past. I do not quite understand it all. The money does not interest my father so much as the mere sport of finding it. You know it was agreed to divide his share among the officers and seamen and the balance to our guests. It would have been such fun."

And the woman who knew everything must perforce remain silent. With what eloquence she could have defended him!

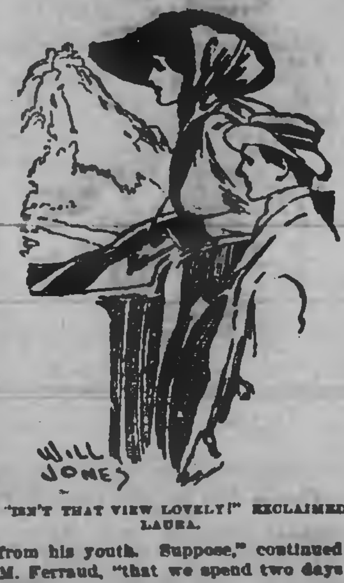
"Do you think we shall find it?" wistfully.

"No, Laura."

A carriage came round one of the pinnacled calenches. It was empty. M. Ferraud casually noted the number. He was not surprised. He had been waiting for this same vehicle. It was Breitmann's, but the man driving it was not the man who had driven it out of Ajaccio. He was an Evisan. A small butterfly fluttered alongside. M. Ferraud jumped out and swooped with his hat. He decided not to impart his discovery to the others. He was assured that the man from Evisa knew absolutely nothing and that to question him would be a waste of time. At this very moment it was not unlikely that Breitmann and his confederate were crossing the mountains, perhaps with three or four sturdy donkeys, their panniers packed with precious metal. And the dupe would go straight to his fellow conspirators and share his millions. Curious old world!

They saw Evisa at sunset, one of the seven glories of the earth. The little village rests on the side of a mountain, nearly 3,000 feet above the sea, the sea itself lying miles away to the west, V shaped between two enormous shafts of burning granite. Even the admiral forgot his smoldering wrath. Had he been given his way, the admiral would have gone out that very night with lanterns.

"Folly! To find a given point in an unknown forest at night—impossible. Am I not right, Mr. Cathewe? Of course. Breitmann's man knew Aitone from his youth. Suppose," continued M. Ferraud, "that we spend two days here?"



"ISN'T THAT VIEW LOVELY!" EXCLAIMED LAURA.

"What? Give him all the leeway?" The admiral was amazed that M. Ferraud could suggest such a stupidity. "No. In the morning we make the search. If there's nothing there we'll return at once."

M. Ferraud spoke to the young woman who waited on the table. "Please find Carlo, the driver, and bring him here."

Ten minutes later Carlo came in, hat in hand, curious.

"Carlo," began the Frenchman, leaning on his elbows, his sharp eyes boring into the mild brown ones of the Corsican, "we shall not return to Carghese tomorrow, but the day after."

"Not return tomorrow?" cried Carlo, dismayed. "Ah, but the gentleman does not understand. We are engaged day after tomorrow to carry a party to Bonifacio. We have promised. We must return tomorrow."

Fitzgerald saw the drift and bent forward. The admiral fumed because his Italian was an indifferent article.

"But," pursued M. Ferraud, "we will pay you 20 francs the day, just the same."

"We are promised." Carlo shrugged and spread his hands, but the glitter in his questioner's eyes disquieted him.

"What's this about?" growled the admiral.

"The man says he must take us back tomorrow or leave us, as he has promised to return to Ajaccio to carry a party to Bonifacio," M. Ferraud explained.

"Then if we don't go tomorrow it means a week in this forsaken hole?"

"It is possible." M. Ferraud turned to Carlo once more. "We will make it 50 francs per day."

"Impossible!"

"Then you will return tomorrow without us."

Carlo's face hardened. "But"—

"Come outside with me," said M. Ferraud in a tone which brooked no further argument.

The two stepped out into the hall, and when the Frenchman came back his face was animated.

"M. Ferraud," said the admiral testily, "my daughter has informed me what passed between you. I must say that you have taken a deal upon yourself."

"M. Ferraud is right," put in Fitzgerald.

"You too?"

"Yes. I think the time has come for M. Ferraud to offer full explanations."

The butterfly hunter resumed his chair. "They will remain or carry us on to Corte. From there we can take the train back to Ajaccio, saving a day and a half. Admiral, I have a confession to make. It will surprise you, and I offer you my apologies at once." He paused. He loved moments like this, when he could resort to the dramatic in perfect security. "I was the man in the chimney."

The admiral gasped. Laura dropped her hands to the table. Cathewe sat back stiffly. Coldfield stared. Hildegarde shaded her face with the newspaper through which she had been idly glancing.

"Patience!" as the admiral made as though to press back his chair. "Mr. Fitzgerald knew from the beginning. Is that not true?"

"It is, M. Ferraud. Go on."

"Breitmann is the great-grandson of Napoleon. By this time he is traveling over some mountain pass with his inheritance snug under his hand. You will ask, Why all these subterfuges, this dodging in and out? Thus. Could I have found the secret of the chimney—I worked from memory—none of us would be here, and one of the great conspiracies of the time would have been nipped in the bud. What do you think? Breitmann proposes to go into France with the torch of anarchy in his hand, and if he does he will be shot. He proposes to divide this money among his companions who, with their pockets full of gold will desert him the day he touches France. Do you recollect the scar on his temple? It was not made by a saber. It is the mark of a bullet. He received it while a correspondent in the Balkans. Well, it left a mark on his brain also—that is to say, he is conscious of what he does, but not why he does it. He is a sane man with an obsession. This wound, together with the result of Germany's brutal policy toward him and France's indifference, has made him a kind of monomaniac. You will ask why I, an accredited agent in the employ of France, have not stepped in and arrested him. My evidence might bring him to trial, but it would never convict him. Once liberated he would begin all over again, meaning that I also would have to start in at a new beginning. So I have let him proceed to the end, and in doing so I shall save him in spite of himself. You see I have a bit of sentiment."

Hildegarde could have reached over and kissed his hand.

"Why didn't he tell all this to me?" cried the admiral. "Why didn't he tell me? I would have helped him."

"To his death perhaps," grimly, "for the money was only a means, not an end. The great-grandson of Napoleon—well, he will never rise from his obscurity, and some time when the clouds lift from his brain he will remember me."

And this whimsical turn caused even the admiral to struggle with a smile. He was a square, generous old sailor. He stretched his hand across the table. M. Ferraud took it, but with a shade of doubt.

"You are a good man, M. Ferraud. I'm terribly disappointed. All my life I have been goose chasing for treasures, and this one I had set my heart on. You've gone about it the best you could. If you had told me from the start there wouldn't have been any fun."

"That is it," eagerly assented M. Ferraud. "Why should I spoil your innocent pleasure? For a month you have lived in a fine adventure, and no harm has befallen. And when you return to America you will have an unrivaled story to tell, but I do not think you will ever tell all of it. He will have paid in wretchedness and humiliation for his inheritance. And who has a better right to it? Every coin may represent a sacrifice, a deprivation, and those who gave it freely gave it to the blood. Is it sometimes that you laugh at French sentiment?"

"Not in Frenchmen like you," said the admiral gravely.

"Good! To men of heart what matters the tongue?"

"Poor young man!" sighed Laura. "I am glad he has found it. Didn't I wish him to have it?"

"And you knew all this?" said Cathewe into the ear of the woman he loved.

Thinly the word came through her lips, "Yes."

Cathewe's chin sank into his collar, and he stared at the crumbs on the cloth.

"But what meant this argument with the drivers?" asked Coldfield.

"Yes, I had forgotten that," supplemented the sailor.

"On the way back to Carghese we should have been stopped. We were to be quietly but effectively suppressed till our Napoleon set sail for Marseilles." M. Ferraud bowed. He had no more to add.

One of Wales' Wonders.

The tower of Wrexham Church (St. Giles') is one of the seven wonders of Wales. It is 135 feet high, and fifty-two statues adorn its niches. It was completed in 1506, although the church itself was erected in the reign of Henry VII. The church contains pictures from the brush of Rubens, and one of the Rubilliac's sculptured masterpieces is the memorial to Mrs. Mary Myddleton, showing a female figure starting from the grave at the sound of the last trump. In the churchyard are many quaint epitaphs.—Cardiff Western Mail.

LASSOING ALLIGATORS.

A Business Which Is Not Yet Overcrowded.

Shooting alligators is tame sport compared with the methods adopted by Mr. Lee and his two sons, who have an alligator business in Proserpine, North Queensland. If you fancy an alligator as a pet, all you have to do is to order one from Mr. Lee, who will deliver one of whatever age or size you wish. With lasso and dogs he captures them alive, but it is perilous and exciting business. There is no dish an alligator likes so much as a nice dog, and, knowing the reptile's weakness in this respect, Mr. Lee baits his trap with a yelping canine, who, however, suffers no injury.

On the sloping bank of a creek infested with alligators Mr. Lee constructs a trap, consisting of a barrier composed of sticks and brushwood, with a small hole like the entrance to a kennel. Behind the barrier he places a dog as bait, and the barking of the animal soon attracts the attention of one of the reptiles. As it scrambles towards the barrier the dog, which has been trained for the purpose, flies out and attacks the reptile, while Mr. Lee hurls a lasso over the alligator's head ere it has time to retreat.

Whipping the other end round a tree and securing it, Mr. Lee, armed with a forked stick attached to a rope with a running noose, tries to thrust it into the alligator's mouth. Every moment there is the danger of being seriously injured, if not killed, by a sweep of the powerful tail, or crushed in the reptile's jaws. Sometimes the struggle continues over an hour, but once the stick is thrust into the mouth of the exhausted alligator the rest is comparatively easy. The jaws and tail are rapidly trussed up with the rope, and the monster lies helpless.

To Mr. Lee belongs the credit of having caught alive in this fashion the largest alligator in Australia. The capture was made when executing an order for a live alligator for a firm in Melbourne. Though the tip of its tail was missing, the reptile still showed a length of 17 feet 6 inches, and turned the scale at 2,800 pounds.

Mr. Lee's expertness in catching alligators recently led to a bet that he could not recapture one fifteen and a half feet long, which he had sold to the layer of the bet, in ten minutes. Mr. Lee accepted the challenge, the alligator was set free in a creek, and Mr. Lee, assisted by his sons, caught it within five minutes.

Health Commandments.

Sir James Sawyer, a well-known physician, believes it is by no means a difficult matter for any human being to live to be 100 years old. He has recently declared that anybody can attain this age, unless killed by accident, if he or she will religiously observe the following "commandments of health":

1. Eight hours' sleep every night.
2. Sleep on your right side.
3. Keep your bedroom window open.
4. No cold bath in the morning, but a bath at the temperature of the body.
5. Exercise before breakfast.
6. Eat little meat, and be sure that it is well cooked.
7. Avoid intoxicants.
8. Allow no pet animals in your living rooms, for they carry disease germs.
9. Live in the country if you can.
10. Watch the three D's—Drinking water, Damp, Drains.
11. Have change of occupation.
12. Take frequent and short holidays.
13. Limit your ambition.
14. Keep your temper.

Lady Scott Was a Bore.

Lady Shelley, who, as appears from her diary, brought away from Abbotsford the impression that Sir Walter Scott's wife was "the greatest bore in Europe," was not alone in entertaining an unfavorable view of her hostess in the famous Tweedside house. In his "Journal" for May 2, 1837, Lord Cockburn, the Scotch judge, who loved and admired Scott, noted that he had finished reading the second volume of Lockhart's "Life of Scott," in which he declares that one of the most extraordinary revelations to the people of Edinburgh was "that there was a time when Lady Scott was pretty and agreeable."

Don't Be a Jack-of-All-Trades

The day of the "Jack-of-all-trades" is passed. This is the time of the specialist, of the man qualified to do some one thing to the queen's taste—which means to the satisfaction of a critical boss. No concern can afford to place a high-grade equipment in the hands of low-grade men. Competition forces employers to meet skill with skill.

To make it short, have you any special equipment? Is there anything in you to command big pay?

Every month upwards of 400 I. C. S. students write to Scranton to tell of positions secured or bettered—of earnings increased and prospects brightened—through study of I. C. S. Courses. Last month the number was 416. The letters come from every section and from all sorts and conditions of men. Some of the writers live in Ontario—some live in British Columbia; some began with no more education than ability to read and write—some were college graduates; some had a good deal of spare time—some had to figure on every spare minute; some were well-to-do—some were obliged to save the pennies.

ADVERTISING

A STORE'S importance is rightly judged by its advertising. Not altogether by the size of the advertisement, but by size and tone, and quality of announcement.

What the store has to say is one thing. Quite as important is how it says it.

Given that the clerical force is competent and up-to-date, it will say, over the counter, the very best to be said in reference to the goods enquired for. It may, and should, suggest other goods, not in the customers view.

This implies that the customer is in the store. But what brings him or her there? The wish to buy and the belief it is a good place to buy at.

How is this learned of?

By advertising. The advertisement is a message, an intelligent middleman, doing service between seller and buyer. The space talks to thousands, even while the store is closed for the night.

Use The REVIEW and tell the story of your store and its opportunities for good service.

McINTYRE DEMANDS THAT MOYES MAKE ACCOUNTING

At Close of Inquiry Into West Shore Railway Co's Affairs Head of the Board Delivers Pointed Remarks to Organizer of Defunct Railway.

TORONTO, Jan. 7.—That John W Moyes was the author of both the Ontario West Shore Railway Co. and the Huron Construction Co. was the opinion expressed by Chairman McIntyre of the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board at its sitting yesterday and he expressed with no uncertain voice his dissatisfaction with the strange disappearance of the papers and documents recording the transactions by which the money of several municipalities found its way out of the coffers of the West Shore and disappeared.

Mr. McIntyre demanded more energy in the recovery of the papers which were so badly needed in the enquiry.

"It is very unfair that some persons vitally interested in this matter should be obliged to grope about in the dark," began Chairman McIntyre. "Some things are clear, however. There is no doubt whatever that Mr. Moyes is the author of these two companies, the Ontario West Shore and Huron Construction. This has been brought home to him.

"Nominally and ostensibly large sums of money, for which towns are liable, were paid over to these two companies which are controlled and fathered by Mr. Moyes. The municipalities which guaranteed these bonds are entitled to a fair, candid, explicit account of these monies and those who controlled them.

"It has been shown here to-day that some of these monies went into his private account. It imposes on Mr. Moyes the additional obligation, under a moral law, of showing that they were diverted properly, and applied to the trust for which they were intended.

"These being plain facts it is a clear obligation of Mr. Moyes to be accurate in obtaining proof to show that these monies were honestly applied.

"In my opinion Mr. Moyes has not used the diligence and activity proper to providing that they were honestly and fully applied, and for the purpose for which they were voted I think that Mr. Moyes should see to this in an endeavor to satisfy the public and this board."

The efforts of counsel throughout the day were directed in vain towards gaining from the witness, the personnel of the Huron Construction Co.

"Who constituted this company?" demanded the court after a fruitless sitting.

"I did not," was the reply.

"Were they ghosts or real people?"

"They were real people with real money," answered Mr. Moyes significantly. He stated further that $370,000 worth of stock had been paid over to them, but the hand that gave, and that which received, he did not remember. He had attended none of their meetings.

Then came the disclosure that Mr. Moyes had shifted sums from the trust account of $383,000 into his own personal account.

"Did any of it go into your private account?" he was asked.

"Yes, sometimes drawn in lump sums to relieve indebtedness," he answered.

"Why did you mix it with your account," asked the chairman.

Witness replied that they were kept track of in the books and papers he had sent to Mr. Smoke. He could not remember the carrier.

"It is very important that Mr. Moyes should get these," commented the chairman.

Counsel produced a declaration signed by Moyes several years ago and presented to the Goderich bank to prove that he had the right to grant power of attorney for the Huron Construction. He claimed that he was the sole owner of that company at that time.

R. D. Little of the Sterling Bank produced records to trace the accounts which the companies had held during the years of operation.

In some of the data produced it was shown that Moyes at a meeting in 1908 received $15,000, part as salary and part as expense money on disbursements. His total receipts were to be totalled up at some future time. A check for the sum was produced in the hearing, but Moyes could not remember having ever received it.

The case will be resumed this afternoon with the local manager of the Dominion Bank in the box for examination.

ZABERN OFFICERS TESTIFY ON BEHALF OF FELLOWS

Evidence Given at Court-Martial of Col. Von Reuter and Lieut. Shad Charged in Connection With Alsatian Disturbances.

STRASSBURG, Germany, Jan. 7.—Testimony much more favorable for the accused army officers was given at the resumption yesterday of the court-martial on Col. Von Reuter and Lieut. Shad of the 99th Infantry, who are charged with making illegal arrests, willful assault and disturbance of the peace during the clash between the military and civilians of Zabern, Alsace, in November.

The evidence of officers of the regiment showed there had been a tumult, with hooting and offensive cries against the soldiery, both before the arrests and while they were being carried out.

This testimony was flatly contradicted by the state's attorney of Zabern and by other civilian officials, but was partially substantiated by the evidence of twenty-eight of the men who had been arrested by the soldiers on Nov. 28, and who had spent a night in the cellar of the barracks. Most of these admitted that others in the crowd had uttered insulting remarks, but declared they themselves had not committed any offence.

As Lieut. Baron Von Forstner, accompanied by two other officers, left the court-room last evening he was followed by several persons, who threatened him. The crowd grew rapidly into hundreds until the whole street was filled. The people howled insults at Von Forstner and shook their clenched fists at him. The officers, however, boarded a street car and escaped.

Crown Prince Defiant.

BERLIN, Jan. 7.—Crown Prince Frederick William has again struck a blow at his own popularity, the telegram which he recently sent to Lt.-Gen. Deimling and Col. Von Reuter, commending their stand in the Zabern affair, being made yesterday the subject of angry editorials in the leading Berlin newspapers.

The Liberal organs lament that the heir-apparent, in spite of his undoubted democracy, never ventures into politics without offending the popular sentiment. These newspapers call the latest appearances of the Crown Prince four grave mistakes, citing them as follows: The Crown Prince's attack on Gerhart Hauptmann's "Centenary Festal Play" at Breslau last June; his act in applauding the anti-British speech delivered by Herr Von Heydebrand, the Conservative leader in the Reichstag, in November, 1911; his protest against the accession of Prince Ernst August of Cumberland to the Duchy of Brunswick, and, finally, his congratulations to the soldiery for aggressiveness against the civil population of Alsace.

The last three cases are termed by the newspapers as demonstrations against the policy of the Imperial Government. The telegrams sent to the military commanders at Zabern received approval in Conservative and military circles.

CHURCHILL IS UPHELD

His Many Plans Are Supported by Many Londoners

LONDON, Jan. 7.—While the newspapers continue furiously to debate Lloyd George's disarmament proposals, sober opinion and a review of all the circumstances lead to the belief that there will be no change in the Government's naval program for this year.

Several bodies in the north of England have recently passed resolutions condemning the constant growth of expenditure on armaments, but on the other hand, preparations are proceeding in London for a meeting in favor of a strong navy, and to show that the huge taxpaying community comprised in the City of London realizes the vital necessity of a big navy for the protection of Britain.

Wholesale Hold-Up.

EDMONTON, Alta., Jan. 7.—Persons living in eleven shacks on the Hudson Bay reserve and a man in a buggy were held up at the point of a rifle, and the man believed to be responsible was arrested by Constable Gould after an hour's chase yesterday.

MR. SAUNDERS' MAJORITY 143

Mr. Joseph Saunders' majority in the contest for Alderman in the South Ward was 143. The returns for No 2 polling sub-division should have reported, giving Mr. Saunders 90 and Mr. Robinson 50.

HELPFUL ADDRESS BY EVANGELIST

The evangelistic service at Gilmour Memorial Church, last night, was a spiritual uplift to the gathering. Rev. Mr. Pugsley delivered a strong and stirring address, taking for his text, the scriptural passage "That people who know their God shall be strong and do exploits."

Music was given by the choir and Mrs. Jas. Young contributed a solo. The meetings will be held for the remainder of the week and next week, after which Rev. Mr. Pugsley goes to Selwyn to conduct union services.

YOUNG MEN JAILED.

They Are Charged With Committing Highway Robbery.

CHATHAM, Jan. 7.—George Kime of Mitchell's Bay, was held up by highwaymen on the River road, Dover Township, about a mile from the city, and relieved of about $12 in money and a quantity of personal effects. From all appearance the robbery was carefully planned.

Acting on information given by the complainant, the authorities arrested Jack Banks and David Grant, both local young men, on suspicion of being implicated in the affair.

On appearing before Magistrate Stanworth yesterday Banks and Grant pleaded not guilty to the charge laid and elected to be tried by a jury.

The magistrate remanded them for one week. Neither man will be allowed bail.

St. Jean Baptiste Dedicated.

NEW YORK, Jan. 7.—With all the ceremonial of the Catholic Church, the Church of St. Jean Baptiste was dedicated yesterday by Cardinal Farley. Built originally as the parish church of the French-Canadians of New York, St. Jean Baptiste has become celebrated locally for the annual pilgrimages for the Novena preceding the Feast of St. Ann, of whom this church possesses a relic, brought by one of the founders from France.

Moyer Is Going Back.

CHICAGO, Jan. 7.—Officials of the Western Federation of Miners, who are to discuss the copper miners' strike in Michigan, yesterday decided to take no action until Governor Ferris has announced the result of his investigation of the strike. President Moyer said that the announcement will determine the future action of the federation.

Mr. Moyer early last night said the wound received in Hancock was paining him more than for several days. He intimated that he expected to be called to Calumet during Governor Ferris' presence there in order to give his story of the deportation. He said he believed he was well enough to stand the trip.

Exhibition Train Not Popular.

LONDON, Jan. 7.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Canadian Press understands that British manufacturers are showing a lukewarm attitude towards the proposed exhibition train to tour Canada. Some firms are convinced their goods could not be adequately advertised under such conditions and in any circumstances it would have been surprising if the average British firm with inherited conservative instincts, had embraced such a proposal with enthusiasm.

Izzet Pasha's New Plot.

NEW YORK, Jan. 7.—A cable from London to The Herald says:

It is confirmed in diplomatic circles that Izzet Pasha has organized a plot to place a Mussulman prince on the Albanian throne.

It is feared that Turkish troops, headed by a well-known chief, will endeavor to effect a landing on the Albanian coast, for the purpose of bringing about this intention.

SIX GET NEW TRIALS.

Twenty-Four Convicted Dynamiters Lose Case and Will Appeal Again.

CHICAGO, Jan. 7.—The sentences of the twenty-four labor union officials convicted in Indianapolis of conspiracy to transport dynamite were confirmed yesterday by the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals of the seventh district. Six of the 33 who appealed were granted new trials. They are:

Olav A. Tveitmoe, San Francisco; William McCain, Kansas City; Fred. Sherman, Indianapolis; Wm. Barnhard, Cincinnati, O.; Jas. E. Ray, Peoria, Ill.; Richard H. Houlihan, Chicago. Counsel for the 24 within 30 days will petition the Court of Appeals for a rehearing on new legal points. If that is denied they will take the case to the Supreme Court of the United States. Pending final adjudication, it is understood that no attempt will be made by the Government to return to the penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kas., those of the convicted men who are at liberty under bond.

The appeal was heard by Circuit Judges Kohlsaat, Baker and Seamon. The decision was read by Judge William H. Seamon. It declared that conspiracy clearly was shown on the part of the 24 defendants, and that challenge of the conspiracy clearly was shown on the part of the 24 defendants, and that challenge of the conspiracy counts of the indictments was erroneous.

Counsel for the labor officials heard the decision with keep disappointment; E. N. Solins of the attorneys for the petitioners, however, stated that he already had prepared briefs on three important points which had been overlooked in the first appeal.

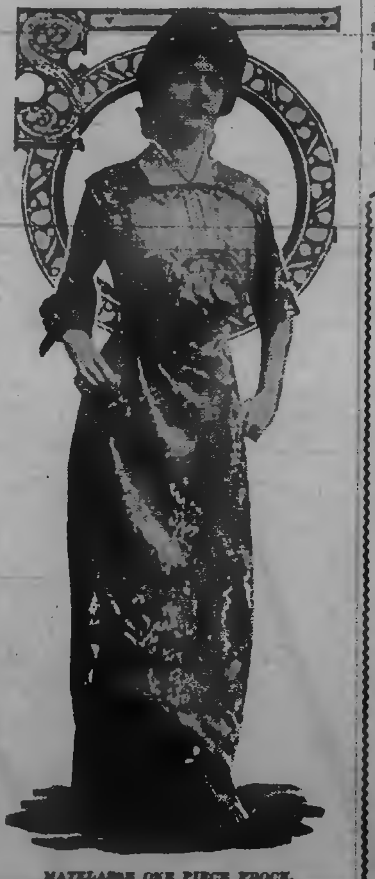
Voices Heard From Airship.

We wonder how many people realize the extraordinary extent to which it is possible to hear from an airship at night. A man snoring in bed can actually be heard from a great altitude, and at 4,000 feet, says a pilot, it is possible to hear "people talking, dogs, sheep, cartwheels, tramway cars, troops marching, transport, artillery, cavalry, and this without training." For scouting purposes, aerial craft, even in the present stage of their development, must thus be most extraordinarily valuable.—London Globe.

Scarcity of Good Looking, Inexpensive Fabrics.

Poplin and crepe de chine promise to be the most popular fabrics for the winter season because they are serviceable, practical and, what is more important, reasonable in price. One fashionable couturiere says that these fabrics are what she advises her customers to buy when they come to consult with her about new gowns.

She also says that never in her dressmaking experience has there been a season when materials of all kinds were so expensive and so hard to buy. For some reason there is a lack of the older materials, and the newer things that are brought out are so very elaborate that the price is entirely beyond the average woman's means. For instance, it is almost impossible to find a plain piece of silk chiffon, while the newer chiffons, with a velvety, rich appearance, range in price from $10 to $15 a yard. As they are only forty inches wide, it requires seven yards to make a gown.



MATELASSE ONE PIECE FROCK.

Then, trimmings in keeping with texture of this sort of material run to a pretty figure, too, and are hard to find. So, taking it all around, something less elaborate is more satisfactory.

The frock pictured is a delightful model in which a combination of materials may be used. The plaited skirt is of rust red silk and the drapery and bodice of a matelasse in which browns and dull tones of red are delightfully mingled.

MORE WORK NECESSARY

Penitentiary Discipline Would Improve Says Inspector

KINGSTON, Jan. 7.—That system in the penitentiary has been allowed to deteriorate on account of lack of labor was the statement of Inspector Stewart in giving evidence at the prison reform commission's session yesterday afternoon.

He declared he was a great believer in the "gospel of labor," as he referred to it, and that it was absolutely necessary to have labor to have discipline in prison. Asked for opinion as regards prison reform, he stated that labor was most essential; another point in bringing about reform was that of removal of insane convicts from the penitentiary to some other institution.

Although the inspector advocated the appointment of a qualified teacher, he held that it was not the duty of the state to provide education for a man sentenced to prison; it was merely a privilege given the convict.

In the line of manufacture, he advocated the making of furniture and the turning out of railway mail service supplies for the Government with all repair work.

Inspector Hughes declared that lack of a head for Kingston Penitentiary was the cause of much of the trouble in management. With a proper head, there would be no trouble. Politicians had the running of the prison.

Another weakness in management, said the witness, was that of lack of strict medical examination of all convicts upon their entering prison. Judges also showed weakness in some of the sentences imposed on young boys. There should be a better system of schooling.

"The striped suit is not degrading," declared Inspector Stewart. "It is no more degrading than the costume put on by a football player."

Bomb Outrage In Rochester.

ROCHESTER, N.Y., Jan. 7.—The front of the building on North street, in which C. Cappellino conducts a bank, express business and grocery store, was blown out by a bomb explosion yesterday morning arousing the neighborhood. Cappellino, his wife and three children were thrown from their beds by the shock. The police discovered remnants of a bomb on the front door step. An attempt to blow up Cappellino's business was made last March by black handers, and the same gang is suspected.

Sugar Injection For Heart.

PARIS, Jan. 7.—The injection of sugar into the veins of patients apparently dying from heart failure and exhausted from various diseases, not only restores the heart action, but produces a remarkable improvement in the general condition. Such is the substance of a communication from Dr. Enriquez of the Hospital De La Pitie to the Academy of Music last night. The results in many cases are said to have been almost miraculous, and no ill-effects whatsoever were experienced.

King George himself is leading the London fad of the moment for floral buttonholes.

Mr. A. E. Bryson, principal of Cobalt public schools, was in town on Tuesday, calling on friends.

At 83 Aylmer St., Peterboro, on Dec. 31st, there was solemnized the marriage of Miss Mary Ann McGill and Mr. Wellington Lowes. The matrimonial knot was tied by Rev. J. N. Clarry, in the presence of numerous friends, at the home of the bride's father. The bride was the recipient of many pretty and expensive presents, bespeaking her esteem and popularity. The groom is one of our most popular Omemee young men. The young benedicts will reside at Omemee.

The funeral of the late Mary Rutherford, beloved wife of Mr. Thos. Gardiner, took place on Tuesday, Dec. 30th, and was one of the largest processions ever seen in Cavan township. The Rev. Mr. Butler was the officiating clergyman; interment taking place at Shield's Cemetery. The deceased was in her 57th year, and was a wife and helpmate in the highest sense. Besides her husband, a brother, Charles Rutherford and a sister, Mrs. D. Blaylock of Omemee. She leaves a wide circle of other sorrowing relatives to whom sincere sympathy is extended.

Miss Jessie Lamb enjoys the unique distinction of being the recipient of a beautiful large size portrait of Colonel, the Honorable Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia and Defence. Mr. Josiah Best of Mount Pleasant, was in town on Friday.

The weather on New Year's evening was rather cold, and the roads none too good, and possibly these adverse conditions affected the attendance of the Presbyterian concert in Coronation Hall. Miss Webling and Mr. McRoye were frequently before the footlights, and presented dramatic sketches, playlets, narrations, etc., that were received with much appreciation and hearty encoring. Their delineations were of a high order. The narations by Mr. McRoye from L'Habitant being realistic and delivered with abandon. Literary critics were in ecstasy. Miss Logan of Peterboro appeared in a number of violin solos which were tastefully executed, and of a pleasing character. Mrs. Renwick of Peterboro, contributed a list of vocal selections which brought forth applause. Her style, interpretation, wealth and quality of voice stamp her as one of the most meritorious vocalists that ever appeared before an Omemee audience. Professor Renwick was the accompanist of the evening. He performed his part with proficiency and dignity. The Rev. D. H. Currie, pastor, was in the chair. The proceeds amounted to about $80.

Miss Mabel Boyd contributed a vocal solo which added to the enjoyment of the service.

COUNTERFEITING IS THE CHARGE

Two Men and Girl Taken by London Police.

LONDON, Ont., Jan. 7. — Three persons who are believed to have been busy in this city for the past week manufacturing 50-cent pieces, and who, it is alleged, successfully passed a number of them yesterday between 9.30 and 11 o'clock, were at 11.30 all locked in the London Police station, together with paraphernalia found in their possession. The trio give their names, occupations and ages, as follows: Valentine Phillips, electrician, English, age 24; Fred. Sutherland, carpenter, Canadian, aged 20; Mrs. Esther Sutherland, age 18. The girl is said to be Fred. Sutherland's wife.

Their arrest was sensational, the Sutherlands being captured by the detectives at the C.P.R. station, and Phillips being arrested as he was offering a bad coin for a purchase.

FIRST CONFERENCE FAILS.

Parley Between Premier Asquith and Bonar Law Breaks Down.

LONDON, Jan. 7.—The conference between Premier Asquith and the Opposition leader, Andrew Bonar Law, on the Home Rule question, has broken down, according to The Unionist Morning Post, which says there may possibly be another interview, but that any hope of a compromise must be abandoned. Mr. Asquith having refused to meet the demands of the Unionists for the exclusion, even temporarily of Ulster from the operation of the Home Rule bill.

The Post represents the Prime Minister as having been personally inclined to accede to the temporary exclusion of Ulster, but declares that he was overborne by John Redmond, Joseph Devlin, and John Dillon.

The Rt. Hon. Thomas Wallace Russell, speaking at Strabane, County of Tyrone, last night, warned the Unionists that if any trouble arose in Ulster, the Government would invoke the Crimes Act by giving 24 hours' notice. He added that the Home Rule bill would be passed by midsummer.

SIR JAMES WHITNEY MAKING PLUCKY FIGHT FOR LIFE

The Premier Has Begun to Show Interest in Political Affairs Again Although Physicians Discourage Tendency

NEW YORK, Jan. 7.—Sir James Whitney, the Premier of Ontario, who is ill with heart disease at the Hotel Manhattan, continues to hold his own. The bulletin issued at nine o'clock last night was brief, and not particularly illuminating. Dr. R. A. Pyne, the Premier's family physician, said merely: "Patient has had had another restful day, with no material change."

Horace Wallace, the Premier's secretary, decline to interpret the bulletin, but in his conversation, as well as in that of Dr. Pyne, during the day, there was apparent a note of hopefulness.

It was stated at the Manhattan yesterday that Sir James had shown some interest in public affairs during the day. While those in attendance discouraged this tendency, they regarded it as distinctly encouraging.

During the day Dr. Pyne left the hotel for a visit to some friends. This, too, was counted a hopeful sign, as since the Ontario Premier has had attacks of heart trouble, his colleagues have left him only for brief walks in the neighborhood to get a breath of air. Lady Whitney, howevr, has been unremitting in her attendance, and has refused all solicitations of the other members of the party who urged her to take some outdoor exercise.

The private car which was retained some days ago when it was expected that Sir James would be ready to leave in a day or two, is still kept in readiness in the New York Central yards, within a block of the hotel. It was stated yesterday, however, that it was out of the question to remove the distinguished patient for the present, as the least excitement might affect him seriously.

The members of the Premier's party here, including Lady Whitney, have been much touched by the interest being taken in Sir James' illness, though no news of the concern of Ontario was communicated to the sick statesman.

Lady Whitney has been unremitting in her watch at the bedside of her husband, and all attempts that have been made to get her to leave the hotel for a beneficial walk have failed. Lady Whitney, however, was bearing up splendidly and shared the hopes of the remainder of the party that Sir James would make rapid and successful recovery.

While those in attendance on Sir James did not minimize the very serious condition in which the attack of cardiac trouble had placed him; and while they admitted that with a man of his advanced age the worst was always to be expected, they were most hopeful. Throughout the stages of the illness which finally laid him low in the Hotel Manhattan, the Prime Minister put up a plucky fight, though amenable at all times to the advice of his medical attendants.

Sir James was acquainted with the serious nature of the trouble affecting him, and knew early in its stages that this iliness might be his last.

BIG FIRE IN MONTREAL

MONTREAL, Jan. 7.—Four St. Catharine street stores at the corner of McGill College avenue were destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon.

The heart of the uptown district on St. Catharine street was seriously threatened by fire which wrecked three business establishments with damage estimated at $150,000. The firms are: The T. H. Philbin Hardware Co., the Warness Feature Film Co. and an office of the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Co.

Evangeline Leblanc, a young stenographer, was rescued from the roof of a blazing building by firemen as she was about to jump after standing on the edge of the roof for five minutes screaming wildly for help.

TWO BARGES ADRIFT

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 7. — News reached the Maritime Exchange here yesterday that two barges, bound from New York for Norfolk, in tow of the tug Edward Luckenbach, had broken loose from their tug during the storm Sunday and were now drifting as derelicts somewhere along the coast. One of the barges is the Gen. Knox. The name of the other was not reported. Each had several men aboard.

A report was received at the exchange of the sighting of the Gen. Knox yesterday 60 miles east of the Delaware Capes, and still another report stated two barges, which may have been the missing craft, were seen off Willows Beach, Va., life-saving station.

SURVIVORS NOW SAFE

Twenty-two of Wrecked Tank Ship Reach Shore

NEW YORK, Jan. 7.—Six of the missing twenty-seven of the crew of the oil tank steamer Oklahoma, which broke in two off Sandy Hook early Sunday, were brought into port alive yesterday. They were picked up in a lifeboat Sunday afternoon by the Booth Line steamer Gregory, after having been adrift in the bitter cold for six hours.

The rescue of these five men and their story that six of their companions were lost from the lifeboat, accounts for twenty-two of the Oklahoma's crew of 38, eight having been rescued by the liner Bavaria, and three found dead in a lifeboat by the revenue cutter Seneca.

The five brought in yesterday confirm the story that the great tank ship parted amidships without warning. The weather was very stormy, and enormous seas were breaking aboard, when, with an agony of groans and creaks, the vessel buckled, apparently suspended on two huge waves at stem and stern.

HAVANA, Jan. 7—Theobaldo Gou, the former cashier of the Havana branch of the Royal Bank of Canada, was brought back yesterday on the steamer Olibette, in charge of the sheriff of Tampt. He was turned over to the Cuban authorities. Gou, who is only 19 years of age, is charged with having abstracted $6,600 from the bank. He refused to make any statement.

PUZZLED THE DRIVER.

Now He Believes the Policeman Is a Real Mind Reader.

A certain truckman in the habit of using the new Manhattan bridge on his morning trip to Brooklyn has abandoned that route because of superstition.

Several days ago while the truckman was taking a load of chicken crates to Brooklyn a fine cap flopped down before him just as his team had passed under the Manhattan tower. He looked around, and, seeing that none of the teamsters ahead of him or behind him was bareheaded, he picked up the cap and put it under the cushion of his seat.

Now, it chanced that the cap had been blown from the head of one of the engineers of the bridge department who was high up in the tower at the time. On reaching the tower base he called up the policeman at the Brooklyn approach on the telephone, described the teamster and his wagon and told how he had lost his cap.

As the long file of trucks passed by the policeman the latter halted the thieving driver, saying: "I'll trouble you to hand over that cap you picked up on the Manhattan side. It's a black and white check, and you've got it right there under your seat."

Amazed and frightened at the cop's demand, the driver pulled out his hidden find and tossed it to him. "Here you are," he said. "You're a mind reader or one of them guys what can see around corners."—New York Tribune.

MASSENET'S HOBBY.

A Story of the Composer and His Dear Friend, the Bookbinder.

In the recollections of Massenet a story is told, says the Hamburger Nachrichten, illustrating the composer's passionate admiration for beautiful bindings. Not a week passed without a visit from him to his bookbinder when he brought a new book or a new edition to be bound. In the course of time he and his bookbinder became the best of friends, and when Massenet arrived the talk was at first of everything on earth except the real object of his visit.

"Look here!" Massenet would say eventually, giving the man the volume to be bound.

"Splendid!" replied the bookbinder, and then for his customer and friend he would devise some fresh wonder in the art of binding.

One morning Massenet suddenly learned that his friend was giving up business. He hurried to his shop "Heavens! Is it true you are leaving Paris?" he asked.

"Why, certainly! I have bought a charming little country house near Nantes."

"What! A country house! And in the provinces!" And he added sadly, "Ah, my poor friend, I am partly responsible for that!"

Who Am I?

Last leap year I did not want to embarrass my best girl to make her propose to me, so asked her to be my wife, and she said, "I would rather be excused," and I, like an idiot, excused her. But I got even with the girl. I married her mother. Then my father married the girl. Now I don't know who I am.

When I married the girl's mother the girl became my daughter, and when my father married my daughter he is my son. When my father married my daughter she was my mother. If my father is my son and my daughter is my mother, who in thunder am I? My mother's mother (which is my wife) must be my grandmother, and I being my grandmother's husband, I am my own grandfather.—National Monthly.

A Bargain.

A young society woman met a count and fell in love with him. Her father was opposed to a match of this kind and declared the foreign nobleman was simply after his money.

"Count," said the young woman one evening, "you can't imagine how my love for you distresses my parents. My father told me he would give $10,000 if I would never see you again."

"Ah, darling," said the count, "see your fanaire in hees effees now, you fink?"—Chicago Record-Herald.

Very Complimentary.

Mrs. Gray (meeting two acquaintances on the parade)—Oh, I didn't know you were here, Mrs. Greene! Awfully pleased! You must come and spend an evening with us.

Mrs. Greene—It's very kind of you, but you must really excuse us. You see, we've never been in the place before, and we're only here for a few days, so, of course, we must make the best use of our time.—London Express.

Free and Equal.

"Do you truly and honestly believe that all men are born free and equal?" asked Jimyson of the genial philosopher.

"I sure do," replied G. P. "Free of all responsibility and equal to not less than three square meals a day."—Life.

A GARDEN ROMANCE

The Grand Lady and the Tiller of the Soil.

By BERNARD BRAINERD.

Tilling the soil was one of Earl Bently's hobbies. A gentleman tiller this young man might have been called, though the style in which he was dressed on this particular morning while working in his garden was no fanciful affair.

A faded coat, corduroy trousers, earth stained canvas leggings and an old broad brimmed hat composed his attire. Between his teeth he held a short brierwood pipe. So engrossed was he in his work that he did not hear the sound on the drive in front of the house nor the light footfall on the gravel walk.

When he glanced up at last he was startled to see a young woman but a few feet away. She wore a pretty costume and a huge picture hat. Bently, however, saw only the calm, beautiful face.

"She looks like a queen," was his thought as he arose and lifted his hat.

"What are these?" she asked, indicating the pretty buds with her tapering finger.

Bently described the variety of the rose. "It is a very rare specimen," he added.

"Break me off several, please."

Bently deftly served half a dozen bunches and handed them to her. She thanked him and moved away. Bently took out his handkerchief and mopped his brow.

"Well, if this isn't a puzzle! Shall I follow her again and speak to her? She seems to be perfectly at home and to regard me, gad, as the earth under her feet. I must find some way to ask this magnificent young person what her business is here."

His perplexity was dispelled for a time by the lady looking over her shoulder and calling softly, "Will you come here a moment?"

Bently was soon at her side.

"What is the name of that beautiful rose?" she asked. Indeed, that rose—the pride of his garden—was a splendid specimen which Bently had watched unfold in the hothouse, and only a short time before he had overseen it transplanted in the garden. Two beautiful blooms were on the stalk. He told her its name.

"Clip me off a rose, please."

She noticed Bently's hesitation and strange expression and said, "I suppose you know I am Miss Blaney?"

The name still left Bently decidedly in the dark, but he clipped a rose and presented it to her, with a bow.

"Miss Blaney, everything in this garden is yours," he said gallantly.

"I am glad you are aware of it," she replied as she pinned on the rose. "I thought you doubted my right."

"Not in the least," he said. "Your visit is too much of an honor. With your permission I will show you through the garden. Perhaps there is something else you would fancy."

His intended irony was lost on his fair visitor. She allowed him to walk by her side like a pet spaniel or a cat, not troubling herself to speak further. Bently pointed out and asked her to accept some of his most beautiful specimens, but every time she refused.

In a short time they had finished the inspection of the garden, and, looking up, she said, "Would you like to remain here, or have you other arrangements?"

Bently looked at her in surprise. "Well—I—certainly I would like to remain—that is, if you have no objection," he said, with a mocking smile.

Miss Blaney replied rather musingly: "No, I do not think I could do better."

Bently bowed low.

"I would like this question settled at once," she said. "Are you willing to engage?"

The humor of it all began to appear to Bently.

"But, Miss Blaney," he said, "it is my duty to warn you that I am a very high priced personage."

"I do not think you can take the advantage of me because I am a woman," she replied quickly, "for you will find that I am a good business woman, I can assure you. Your salary will be according to your service and no more." Then she added less emphatically, "But try to please me and you will find we will have no occasion to quarrel over your compensation."

Miss Blaney and Bently were now walking toward the house. Looking at her watch, she said: "I shall not have time to go into the house today. Thank you for showing me through the garden." Then quite pleasantly, "What is your name?"

"My name is Bently," he replied.

"Good day, Bently," she said. "I think we shall agree."

Carelessly nodding to him, she moved on in the direction of her carriage. The footman alighted and opened the door, and Bently watched her drive away.

Several mornings later Bently was out for a morning's ride on his favorite saddle horse when he saw a carriage approaching with two people in it. His heart beats quickened as he recognized Miss Blaney. The other person was a real estate agent named Hunt, with whom Bently was well acquainted.

As they approached he raised his hat to Mr. Hunt's salutation. Miss Blaney started and looked at him with eyes that expressed surprise and dismay.

Bently quickly turned up a lane and gazed intently after them. He saw her bend over and speak to Hunt in a hurried, anxious way.

He turned his horse's head and followed at a respectable distance, but not until he had given the carriage ample time to disappear. As he followed a turn in the road he saw it pass his own property and turn into the estate adjoining him. Then the light broke over him, and he saw through it all. He made a quick dash for home and to change his riding costume, having a presentiment that he was going to have a call from Miss Blaney.

"A lady called and asked for you, Mr. Bently. She would not come in, so I gave her a seat in the summer house while I hunted you up."

Bently sprang to his feet and hastened to the summer house. Before reaching the house he saw her approaching.

"Mr. Bently, I have discovered my mistake," she said before he could speak, "and have come to apologize for my inexcusable rudeness. I am certainly humiliated."

Her cheeks were crimson, and the expression on her face was one of genuine distress.

"Why, Miss Blaney," began Bently, "I consider it beneath any notice."

But she interrupted him. "No; please allow me to explain. About a year ago my uncle purchased the next property and made me a present of it. I saw it once, but for a few minutes only, just before we went east. Several days ago I returned to take possession. On Tuesday of last week I drove out to see it. I was to have met Mr. Hunt at Barclay station, but missed him. I never dreamed I would make a mistake in the place, but they are quite alike from the road. I drove in. The garden looked so inviting I sauntered in. You know the rest."

"Yes. You found a cranky looking fellow in rough clothes digging in the garden, and you naturally supposed him to be the gardener."

"The idea! Think of how I behaved; ordered—yes, ordered—you to cut me those flowers! Oh!" She covered her face with her hands for a moment.

"Wasn't that splendid?" The young man laughed joyously.

"But you were somewhat to blame yourself," she said, with an indignant flash of her splendid dark eyes. "You must have realized my mistake at once. You were very unkind not to tell me."

"My dear Miss Blaney, I had not the least idea who you were. It took me until this morning to realize the true state of affairs. On Wednesday I was at a loss to tell whether it was a queen of the royal blood or a fairy princess who so suddenly appeared before me. I only know that I was elated at her company and highly disappointed when she left."

Bently accompanied her to her carriage and handed her in.

"I hope you will not worry over our—our little comedy. Will you?"

"Not a bit. I felt bad for awhile, but I'm through with it. I am not seeking trouble."

Earl Bently passed a happy summer. All his horseback rides, sails, golf, tennis and little picnics were in company with her. It seemed to Bently that he had loved her from the first glance he got of her that morning in the garden. Many of their small parties also included Mr. Blaney, the father, and Miss Bently, Earl's sister. They made an ideal number. The former always went to sleep, and the latter lost herself in her fancy work.

One beautiful October night when the Bentlys were having a house party, Earl Bently, with a designing mind, invited Miss Blaney out on the veranda to take a look at the moonlight. The garden slept under the splendid light moon, and the waters of the stream were covered with a sheen of silver.

"It was there I saw you first, he said, pointing to a patch of white gleaming amid a dark green. "On that very spot we parted on that beautiful morning in June, and there you made me a promise."

"Me—a promise?"

By a light, graceful movement she drew back until her face came within the shadow of an overhanging woodbine.

"I can repeat your words, 'I believe we will agree.'"

"Ah, yes!" came from the shadow of the vine. "But that was to my gardener, not to the real landed proprietor who took his place."

"Your gardener has come back and asks to be your servant, your slave, anything you bid him, if you will let him love you. But remember," he added, "remember, I warned you I would be satisfied with no paltry sum for my wage. My price is the very highest imaginable—it is yourself."

"'Gardener' and 'slave,' but now—this sounds like 'master,'" she murmured.

"Let them all be merged into one word—lover!"

Two heads were in the shadow of the woodbine now, and the moon was behind a cloud.

Beau Brummel Reprimanded.

Beau Brummel once insolently replied to an invitation to take tea by remarking that he never "took" anything but physic.

"Yes, you do," frowned his hostess; "you take liberties."

HOAXING A PREMIER.

A Sequence of Practical Jokes That Riled M. Barthou.

M. Barthou, the French prime minister, is an excellent host, and his dinners always attract a select gathering of wit and talent. The other day an official looking personage visited a printer who does work for M. Barthou and ordered some invitation cards for a dinner to be given by the premier at his private residence. The man had all the appearance of an "attache de cabinet," and the printer executed the order without question. A few days afterward fifty of M. Barthou's friends received invitations, and thirty of them hastened to accept.

When the premier received the first acceptance he questioned his secretary who naturally knew nothing about it. Then other acceptances poured in, and M. Barthou reflected on what course to take. In the end he decided to hold the function which had been forced on him, and the other evening his thirty friends ate a good dinner at his expense. Over the coffee and cigars he told his story after every one had been wondering what happy occasion the dinner party was to celebrate. After the first shock of the news the diners, most of all M. Barthou, laughed heartily at the humor of the situation.

What is not amusing is that the practical joker was not satisfied with his first success, but has again sent out cards. This time M. Barthou fails entirely to see the joke and has placed the matter in the hands of the police.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Cold Sores.

The frequent occurrence of cold sores indicates a digestive disturbance which should be corrected at once. To check these little sores bathe them several times a day with spirits of camphor. After they are developed they can be relieved by being opened with a sterile needle. Then care should be exercised to prevent infection. Hydrogen peroxide is a good preventive and borated salve used after the hydrogen will afford relief.

Diverging.

Husband—I'm afraid I'm becoming cross eyed, my dear. Wife—The idea! Why do you think that? Husband—This thing of trying to look at my income and our expenses at the same time is slowly but surely getting its work in.—Chicago News.

Heartbeats.

The heart of a standing man beats eighty-one times a minute, of a sitting one seventy-one times. When the man is lying down its beats are reduced to sixty-six per minute.

Gaelic in Scotland.

Though the latest official report on the census of Scotland shows that the population is fully one million greater than in 1881, there is a decline in the number of Gaelic speakers. The enumeration of Gaelic speaking persons in Scotland was first instituted in the census of 1881. The census now under review gives the number at 202,398, as against 230,806 in 1901. Speakers of Gaelic alone numbered 28,107 in 1901

FRONTENACS HAD EVERYTHING NECESSARY; SPEED GALORE AND MID-SEASON CONDITION

Local Juniors Bumped Against Hard Proposition in Satherland's Seven—One of the Best Junior O.H.A. Games Seen at the Rink—Final Score 10-4

Too much speed and too much weight caused the local juniors to go down to defeat last night in Brock street rink, at the hands of Kingston Frontenacs, to the tune of 10-4, in the opening Junior O. H. A. game. The visitors had it on the locals in every stage of the game and scored almost at leisure in the second half. Their wings and defence were very heavy and this combined with great speed, makes them look every bit as good as the old champion Frontenacs. The team that will put them out of the running will step fast every minute of the hour.

In "Rube" Milan, their captain, the Kingston brigade have one of the lightest and fastest centre men ever seen in action at Brock street rink. He skates like lightning and his rushing and back checking is superb. His brother Norman at rover also played a good game and worked at his position to perfection. The wing men, Derrick and Cook are very speedy and being heavy, use their weight well.

In Goddard and Angrove, the visitors have a fast husky defence, who rush as well as "come back" quick. Mills, their goal minder, didn't appear very good in the first half but he blocked them out well in the last period.

Captain Halpin shone at rover for the locals, and worked hard, but the proposition his team was up against, was too great. Rose at centre, and Barrie at left, both played good hockey, but their checks were too strong. Little Knapman at right wing had Derrick, who weighs over 165 pounds, to check, and the little fellow was the victim of several hard body checks. He came back gamely though and was going strong at the final gong.

Long and Richardson played a fairly good game at defence, but the former did not use his weight half enough and his shooting was also weak. Richardson played about the best game of any of the locals, his rushing was fast and for a light man, he used his weight well. For a youngster his size, he hands out quite a few rides and is very promising if he gets a trifle heavier. Darling in goal, showed class in the first half but weakened a little in the second period when a few easy ones beat him.

The teams lined up as follows:

Kingston—10		Peterboro—4
Mills	goal	Darling
Godard	right defence	Long
N. Millan	rover	Capt. Halpin
Rube Millan (Capt.)	centre	Rose

The Play

Kingston won the toss and chose to defend the north goal. The play started with a terrific pace, both teams working hard. Richardson drew a penalty for tripping "Rube" Millan, and was closely followed by Derrick, who was sent to the box for slashing. Long made a nice rush and secured the first shot on the nets, Mills cleared nicely however, and N. Millan took the puck up the boards. He and Long collided and the latter wrenched his knee. In a few moments play was resumed and Richardson who just returned from the penalty box, made a nice rush. Barrie was penalized for holding Cook's stick and as he went off Derrick returned. Cook and "Rube" Millan broke away and the latter beat Darling on a close one. Time, 2 minutes, Peterboro-0, Kingston-1.

Two minutes afterwards with Barrie back on the ice, the forward line broke away but were stopped and the puck slammed down the ice to Long, who made a nice rush and shot on the nets. Halpin slammed the rebounding puck in. Peterboro -1, Kingston-1.

The play centred around the local net for the next few minutes and finally Derrick beat Darling with a low one. Time 2 minutes. Peterboro-1, Kingston-2.

CECIL RICHARDSON.

He played a useful game at left defence for the Junior Petes.

Inside of 30 seconds Capt. Halpin scored on a long high shot from mid-ice. Peterboro-3, Kingston-2.

With everybody on their toes and the pace extra fast, Barrie made a beautiful lone rush and passed to Halpin, who scored. Time 3 minutes. Peterboro-3, Kingston-2.

It didn't take Kingston long to tie it up however, for inside of two minutes Godard got away and beat Darling from close in. Peterboro-3, Kingston-3.

A minute afterwards "Rube" Millan started from his own net and snaked the puck right up the centre of the ice and scored. Peterboro-3, Kingston-4.

The boys were slowing up a trifle at this point of the game and the puck was in the corner most of the time. A pass from the side of Peterboro's goal struck Knapman and the puck bounded past Darling. Time 1 minute. Peterboro-3, Kingston-5.

The play was at centre ice for the next few minutes and Rose and Barrie produced some nifty stick handling. N. Millan tried to get away but was checked by Rose who took a long shot which easily passed Mills. Time 4 minutes. Peterboro -4, Kingston-5.

The crowd excitedly urged the locals to tie it up and in an effort the defence come out. When N. Millan got away nobody stopped him and he scored. Time 4 minutes. Peterboro-4, Kingston-6.

Shortly after N. Millan and Long collided and the former was carried off and Knapman dropped to even up. Richardson drew a penalty for riding Derrick, and the half time whistle blew just as Millan and Knapman were returning.

Second Half

In a few seconds Richardson was back on the ice and he marked his presence by a nice rush only to be tripped by Godard who was penalized. Once again N. Millan and Long met and the former was knocked out. In a few minutes he revived and the play continued. Godard returned only to have his place taken by Cook for holding Knapman's stick. After seven minutes of play Godard scored on a long shot from the side. Peterboro-4, Kingston-7.

The puck went up and down, and the wonderful back checking of Kingston's forwards was in great evidence. Shortly after Rose and N. Millan were benched for slashing at each other, and they were closely followed by Long for hooking. Just after Rose and N. Millan returned, the latter's brother slammed one past Darling from a scrimmage in front of the nets. Time 9 minutes. Peterboro-4, Kingston-8.

Inside of 20 seconds "Rube" scored again on a lone rush from centre ice. Peterboro-4, Kingston-9.

N. Millan was put off for slamming and he was closely followed by Long for a foul body check. While they were off, Cook beat Darling on a long slow one. Time 5 minutes. Peterboro-4, Kingston-10.

This ended the scoring.

First Half
Rubo Millan	Kingston	2 min.
Capt. Halpin	Peterboro	2 min.
Derrick	Kingston	2 min.
Halpin	Peterboro	30 sec.
Halpin	Peterboro	3 min.
Godard	Kingston	2 min.
Rubo Millan	Kingston	1 min.
Knapman	Kingston	1 min.
Rose	Peterboro	4 min.
N. Millan	Kingston	4 min.
Second Half

MERCANTILERS MEET TO-NIGHT

To Deal With Draft of Schedule and Other Matters.

A very important meeting of the Mercantile League is called for tonight in The Review office at eight o'clock. The draft of the schedule is to be confirmed, and final arrangements for the opening night are to be made. The clubs are also reminded that it would be of great convenience if they would pay their entrance fee tonight. The time expires Saturday evening.

PUCKERINGS FROM PUCK

puckerings from ETAION EATION

The M. N. S. Club accept the challenge of the R. U. W. Club to a game of hockey to be played on Brock street rink any night next week.

Van Horne was with the Frontenacs and spent most of his time gazing vacantly at the south-east corner of the rink where he and Crowley mixed it in the days of yore.

When the score was nine to four, some cruel one standing near the press-box murmured, "Well at that we have the handsomest forward line in the O.H.A."

Rose did some nifty stick handling at centre ice and gave "Rube" Millan an awful chase.

Frank Barrie was on the hop all the time and worked as hard as any man on the ice. His check had too much weight.

The forward line that beat us last night is the same forward line, which with the Senior Frontenacs defence, defeated Detroit 6—1.

The boys are by no means discouraged and fans must remember it is no disgrace to be beaten by a team of that calibre.

The Intermediates will hand one to Oshawa on Friday night. That's the way the game goes.

The Boston Exploits forward line is worthy of notice.

The Mercantile League opens next Monday evening.

Tart Criticism.

A gentleman of antiquarian tendencies who loved the drama of another day and another school was lured to New York and inveigled into a theater where a much discussed play dealing with sociological problems was being performed. He stuck it out to the end, and when he was asked to give his opinion of the work he said, "I think that over the door of the theater there might well be hung one of the old English inn signs, 'Entertainment for man and beast.'"—New York Tribune.

GAMES TO-NIGHT

The opening games of the Junior City League tonight in Brock Street Rink, should prove a big attraction. At eight o'clock the oBston Exploits clash with the Wanderers and at nine o'clock the Alerts play the Y. M. C. A. Some very fast youngsters are on the line-up. The games will be worth seeing. Mayor Buller will face off the puck in the first game and officially declare the league open. Fred Kelly will referee.

Helping Oneself.

Remember that every man at times stumbles and has to be helped up; if he's down you cannot carry him. The only way in which any man can be helped permanently is to help himself.

Shooting Fish.

The shooting fish, a native of the East Indies, has a hollow cylindrical beak. When it sees a fly on plants that grow in shallow streams it ejects a single drop of water, which knocks the fly into the tide.

Successful.

A young Welshman applied to the head of a big drapery firm in London for a job. "Where do you come from?" he was asked. "From Llanpumpsaint." What may that name mean?" "It means the place of the five saints," was the ready answer. "Are there five saints there still?" "There are only four since I left," said the young Welshman. As the head of the firm came from the same neighborhood, the young man got the situation.—London Mail.

Why She Kept Quiet.

A nervous matron was upbraiding her negro maid and the servant remained silent. This exasperated the mistress, who shouted:

"Mandy, why don't you say something? Why do you keep quiet?"

"'Cause, missy," replied Mandy meekly, "it takes two to make a fight, an' it ain't propah foh ladies to fight."

His Sorrow.

"You know that box of cigars you gave me on my birthday, dear?" said a man to his wife.

"Yes."

"Well, I took them down to the office, and some one stole them."

"I'm awfully sorry."

"So am I—for the thief!" was the cruel remark.

An Advantage.

"There's an advantage in a phonograph."

"What is it?"

"It doesn't matter who's singing, you can go right on talking."

JERRY COUGHLIN PASSED BY O.H.A.

He Retains Certificate to Play With Ingersoll Team.

Jerry Coughlin with several other players in the Ingersoll Intermediate O. H. A. team, appeared before the O. H. A. Executive yesterday.

The players satisfied the committee that there have been no arrangement regarding hockey and as a result they keep their certificates.

Devotion Tested.

"Are you sure that young man loves you?" asked the cautious mother.

"Yes," replied Gwendolyn.

"Have you sung, played, recited and painted in water colors for him?"

"Yes."

"Then, my child, if he still desires to marry you, do not doubt his affection."

Nothing But Tragedy.

"Yes, I'm back from playing repertoire on the kerosene circuit."

"Tragedy or comedy, old chap?"

"Straight tragedy. We never had over $40 in the box office."

Experience.

"How did you come out of that deal in Wall street?"

"I got several thousand dollars' worth of experience. But the price on experience has gone away off, with no chance that I can see of recovering."—Exchange.

Ocean Depths.

Scientists have found fifty-six areas in the oceans where the water is more than three miles deep, ten where it exceeds four miles and four where the bottom is further than five miles down.

CATHOLIC ORDER OF FORESTERS

Installation of Officers and Address by Bishop O'Brien.

The annual meeting of the installation of officers of St. Peter's Court No. 225 of the Catholic Order of Foresters was held last night in their hall on Hunter Street. In the presence of a large number of members who taxed the hall to its capacity, Deputy High Chief Ranger J. P. Shevlin installed the following officers:

P.C.R.—Wm. Lynch.
C.R.—Wm. Perdue.
V.C.R.—H. Gilman.
Rec. Sec.—Jas. O'Brien.
Fin. Sec.—F. Eano.
Speaker—N. Trombley.
Treas.—James Clancy.
Trustees—John Halpin, Wm. McAuliffe and Chas. Meyett.
Sr. Con.—Wm. Garvey.
Jr. Con.—Peter Collins.
Sentinel—S. Anglesey.

The meeting was further marked by the presence of His Lordship Bishop O'Brien D.D., Very Rev. Dean McColl, Rev. J. J. O'Brien and Rev. C. J. Phelan, Chaplain of the Order. Chief Ranger Wm. Perdue tendered an address of welcome to Bishop O'Brien and His Lordship replied stating that he was pleased to note the rapid growth of the Catholic Order of Foresters both in this city and in Canada. The local order has assumed a membership of over 400, which was indeed very creditable. He spoke very complimentary of the past officers and was positive that with the managerial reigns in the capable hands of the new officers, the good work the C. O. F. has done in this city in the past, would continue and the membership at the end of the present year, would be greatly increased. In closing Bishop O'Brien complimented their Chaplain, Rev. Father Phelan on his untiring efforts to bring the order to its present high standard.

The other clergymen also gave short addresses complimenting the officers and members on the good work accomplished in the past and urging the members to unite with the new officers and make 1914 a banner year in the history of the society. Among the other speakers were: D.H.C.R. Shelvin, C. H. Pennefather, V. J. McElderry, N. Trombley and J. P. Bryson.

The Catholic Order of Foresters has now a total membership of over 150,000 in the entire order, and have paid out since the organization in 1882 over $18,000,000 in death claims and some $2,000,000 in sick and funeral benefits. They are organized in 22 States in the Union and 7 provinces of Canada. The society carries an insurance of $150,522,000 and their reserve fund totals over $3,500,000.

COMMITTED ON THEFT CHARGE

John Findley Says John Doig Stole $16 From Him.

At police court this morning John Doig was committed for trial before Judge Huycke. G. N. Gordon defended the prisoner who pleaded not guilty. The Crown was ably represented by Mr. Joseph Wearing M.A., who recently entered partnership with Mr. R. E. Wood.

John Findley, the complainant, claims that on the 1st of November, while in a state of intoxication Doig the defendant, had stolen the sum of $16 from him.

Evidence from Mrs. Tillie and Mrs. Doig was to the effect that Findley had given Mrs. Doig the money to keep or to buy coal and that she had handed it over to Mrs. Tillie, her sister, who in turn gave it to Doig. He had asked her for that amount which was required by him (Doig), for the expense of erecting a stable upon the property of Findley.

In her evidence Mrs. Doig told how her husband had left her about a week ago and had not been home since then, and she had not seen her until this morning in court.

THE STANDING AT NORWOOD

Mr. Squire's Majority at 31 Over Reeve Breault Was Big Surprise

NORWOOD, Jan. 7.—The results of the elections held here on Monday had a few surprises for the ratepayers.

The general opinion was that the contest for reeveship would be very close. In fact it was generally felt that it was almost anybody's election. But when the results of the poll showed Mr. Squire's majority to be 31 over Mr. Breault, his best supporters were surprised.

It was expected the members of last year's council would be re-elected which proved to be the case. Mr. Portway was the dark horse in the councillor contest, defeating the next lowest candidate by nine votes.

Mr. E. H. Scott surprised the electors when it was known that he was only four votes below the highest man. This result in a field of seven candidates, all of whom were counted strong men, was certainly a surprise.

The result of the polls was as follows:

Reeve—
B. W. Squire	125
A. Breault	94
Councillors—
Thos. Morrison	158
W. E. Packenham	157
Stanley Hendren	113
Wm. Portway	106

THE ROMANTIC CAREER OF HARRY LINDLEY

Nearly all the older generation of theatregoers will remember with kindly feelings Harry Lindley, who after fifty-five years on the stage, recently passed away in Suffolk, Va. His was a romantic and varied career, which included long years on the stage in England, Scotland, and Canada, and he was still playing in his seventy-fifth year, when death overtook him.

The veteran actor is survived by his second wife, Mrs. Luella Beckwith Lindley, and by five daughters, most of whom are now in Hamilton. Mrs. Mystic Alman, Mrs. Ethel Proshaw, Miss Patricia Lindley, Miss Helen Lindley, Miss Frances Lindley, and two sons, Walter and William Lindley, of New York City. All of his children except one are on the stage.

Mr. Lindley sailed for America on a blockade runner and landed in Wilmington, N.C., in 1861, and under General William Mahone, served through the war as a confederate soldier. He was a Mason and a Knight of Pythias.

He played in Suffolk forty-five years ago. He claimed friendship with noted actors long since dead. In 1869 he was stage manager for Edwin Booth; he managed Denman Thompson's Old Homestead, and played in 1869 with James O'Neill.

He claimed to have been the pioneer showman of the Canadian west, having played every town from North Bay to Skagway, and every mining camp in the Rockies. He was proud of the fact that he was born on the same day and year as the late King Edward of England. Among his friends of others days, whose letters and messages are to be found in a much-treasured scrapbook owned by the deceased, were Gen. A. P. Hill, and Joaquin Miller. He was the author of several plays, among them The Castaways, The Sky Pilot, and The Girl From the Klondyke.

MEAN AND COWARDLY SAYS MAGISTRATE

His Worship Reserves Judgment in Case of Louis Bourbonasis.

Magistrate Dumble reserved judgment for one week in the case of Louis Bourbonasis, charged with assaulting his wife and causing her bodily harm by the means of a razor. Bourbonasis pleaded guilty to the charge through his counsel, G. N. Gordon.

"It is a selfish, mean and cowardly action for any man to do, you may say he was drunk, but when he takes a razor and uses it with such violence, causing his wife to be seriously injured in the struggle to save her life, it is very serious," was the strong opinion expressed by his Worship, at the conclusion of the evidence given by Dr. Amys as to the condition of the wife and her general health which at present is very bad.

The couple are both young and have five children, the oldest being about ten.

Tripoli now has a population of 57,000.

SOME SMILES IN THE DIRECTORY

Entertainment to be Found by a Perusal of its Pages.

The average individual does not regard the city directory very interesting or inspiring reading. We are however all ready to admit that we should be very loathe to try to do without it, owing to the many useful purposes it serves, but when we are seeking for entertainment, we do not instinctively reach for the city directory for Peterboro.

And yet to the person with an imagination and an idle hour on his hands, there is a good deal of amusement in the city directory to be procured from a brief study of the listed names therein.

It is easy to imagine how such names as Black, Green, Brown, White, Gray and Grey can be applied to certain men, and such names as Fox, Wolf, Coon and Hare may have arisen out of the characteristic of the bearer of the name, which made him resemble one of these animals, but it is rather more difficult to explain how such names as Leadbetter, Cable, Cann, Card, Church, Chrow, Childs, Cobb, Coates, Cocks, Cole, Close, Colley, Cook, Common, Cosh, Copper, and numerous others came into being.

The suffix "man" occurs very often, thus we have the names of Youngman, Veenman, Waterman, Whatman, Tubman and Whiteman.

The four points of the compass are represented in the directory with the words North, South, East and West, and we have Winter, Summer, Fall and Spring, while numerous names such as Long, Short, Strong, Weeks, Love and Meeks can be found.

One might go on indefinitely with conjectures as to the derivation and the meaning of the names in the directory, even in the smallest directory of a village, while the names in larger cities are most amusing, as similar to a hotel register, when some very extraordinary names are found.

But enough of these have been given to show what a variety of names we have and those sufficiently interested, who have the time, can amuse themselves by studying the directory.

MOSBY FLED WITH HIS MEN.

An Attack That Wholly Demoralized the Partisan Rangers.

Colonel John S. Mosby, commander of the Partisan rangers, who gave such dashing service in the southern cause, told of an amusing incident in which he figured.

In the summer of 1864 when General Phil Sheridan was in the valley of the Shenandoah he found himself much harassed by Mosby, who was continually cutting off his supply trains. An army cannot fight on an empty stomach, and Mosby knew it. One bright morning Mosby heard that a long supply train was winding its way down the valley. By noon the rangers in their gray uniforms were gathered at the forks of the valley pike, watching for the head of the wagon train to appear.

Presently a cloud of dust was seen rising far up the road, and as the wind blew it aside the Confederates caught sight of a line of men in blue escorting a caravan of lumbering wagons drawn by mules. Instantly Mosby gave the order to run a little howitzer up on the side of a hill and unlimber it. As soon as the gun had opened fire the rest of the men were to make a cavalry charge and throw the train into confusion.

The rangers jerked the gun into position and began to swab it out. Suddenly the man with the swab gave a shrill yell, seized the seat of his pantaloons and fled down the hill and out into the road. Almost in the same moment the other man at the gun abandoned it. He seemed to be fighting at the air as he disappeared over a stone wall.

The sutler's wagons were creeping nearer, and Mosby did not know what to think of such extraordinary conduct. He ordered four more men to the gun, but hardly had they reached it when they, too, yelled, began to beat the air madly with their hats and took to flight.

Spurring his horse over the stone wall, Mosby rode toward the gun, but his stay was short. The howitzer stood just over a hornets' nest, and those busy insects were resenting the intrusion. They had repelled the invaders on foot, and now they swarmed on Mosby's horse till the maddened animal tore off down the pike on a run. Then they turned their attention to the rest of the troop.

Their attack was so vicious that the rangers gave up any idea of standing by the gun. They scattered far and wide, and it was an hour before they returned. When they did the wagon train had safely vanished in the distance. So the hornets saved the day for Sheridan.—Youth's Companion.

Where Science Fails.

Science has wrought many achievements, but it has not cleared up a single elemental mystery, and it has created a thousand lesser mysteries that never were imagined until science came. Science has demonstrated that this oak of a world used to be an acorn, but how that acorn came into existence or whence it obtained the latent elements that now have become an oak science has not suggested. Science has made it possible for a manufacturer to cut down three trees in his forest at 7:25 in the morning, to have them made into paper at 9:34 and to have them selling on the street as newspapers at 10:25, but whether the manufacturer himself is a brain that has a mind or is a mind that has a brain science cannot even guess.—Atlantic Monthly.

PREMIER SLEPT THROUGH NIGHT

Failure of Patient to Make Improvement Has Been Disappointment to Those at His Bedside

New York, Jan. 8.—The condition of Sir James Whitney, long critically ill from heart trouble at Manhattan Hotel, was reported at seven o'clock to-day to be apparently unchanged and it was decided by those attending, not to give out any definite information about the Premier's complaint until after the regular ten o'clock consultation of his doctors.

NEW YORK, (eleven o'clock)—The doctors have issued the following bulletin: "Sir James Whitney had an undisturbed night's rest, but he continues weak."

Canadian Press Despatch

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—Despite the anxiety of the physicians to announce definite improvement in Sir James Whitney's condition, they could do no better this morning than to state he had enjoyed a night of undisturbed sleep, adding a most important reservation that he still continued weak. Sir James' failure to make progress has been a disappointment to those around him, although they have shown wonderful hopefulness and have been encouraged by the Premier's own patience. Since Monday, Sir James has been practically his old self and has conversed about his affairs from time to time, occasionally asking questions about the details of his office left unfinished when he started on his holiday trip, but he is always satisfied with the replies given. Those in attendance have taken care not to raise any contentious subject. The Premier still enjoys his food, taking light meats and easily digested vegetables. This diet has been supplemented by drugs aimed to steady or accelerate the heart action, and while these continue to be administered, the patient's condition must be considered critical and it is an even question whether they are not necessary to keep him alive. One worry, Sir James has is his hatred of hotel life and a desire to get home.

BEAUTIES AT POULTRY SHOW

Sicilian Beauties and Blue Orpingtons on Exhibition.

"You see here one of the best, if not the best collection of birds in Ontario," said one exhibitor to The Review this morning, when a representative visited the Poultry Show this morning.

There is to be seen an exhibit of three Sicilian Buttercups, for the first time in Peterborough. They are beauties and visitors at the show to-night should not fail to see them. Ask one of the attendants. The record for eggs is 200 eggs in one year for one hen. The comb is formed in a circle and like the petals of the flower from which the name is derived.

Chas. Ansell, of Port Hope, is showing a pen of four Blue Orpingtons. This is another pointer for visitors.

F. Wales, of Milton, exhibits a first national Black Cochin Bantam. The mother sold for $100 at the Madison Square Gardens in 1912, to Dr. Cummings, of Galt.

WEDDED AFTER THIRTY YEARS

The Nuptial Knot is Tied at St. George's Church.

A courtship extending over a period of thirty years, culminated yesterday afternoon in marriage at St. George's Anglican Church Miss Mary Jane Vincent, being lead to the altar by Mr. John Smith. Both the bride and groom have resided in Brownton.

The ceremony which was performed by the Rev. James Price, was doubly interesting, as a marriage at St. George's Church has so far, been a rare happening. Mr. Price's popular expression has been "We have no deaths, or marriages, and in fact, we have nothing to worry us."

The bride and groom have been in Canada for over thirty years. They came from Wiltshire, Eng.

Mr. Smith is sixty years of age and his bride is 70. Both have been blessed with a goodly share of this world's goods. They will reside in Brownton.

MR. RACKHAM IS ON THE BOARD OF EXAMINERS

Besides Being Issuer of Licenses for Automobiles.

The following is from the Canadian Motorist, the official organ of the Ontario Motor League:

Fifty per cent. of the motorists in Peterboro are members of the Association, thanks to the energetic membership campaign carried out by the boosters. Plans have been made for a bigger year in 1914 and with everybody working the Peterboro Association should assume a position even more prominent than that which it now holds in the O. M. L.

Motorists in the Peterboro District will have the convenience of having a license issuer among them. Mr. G. K. Rackham, secretary of the Association, has been appointed to that position by the Provincial Secretary's Department. This is doing away with a lot of the trouble that has prevailed in former years.

The Board of Examiners for the new Chauffeurs' Examinations has been appointed and is composed of the Chief of Police, Mr. T. W. Appleby and Mr. Rackham.

The members of the local club gave the inmates of the three orphan institutions a rare treat when an amateur play was put on in the opera house under the auspices of one of the churches. The children were driven to the theatre and called for again after it was over. The members who took part in this expressed themselves as being better pleased than even the kiddies.

A GOOD FIND.

While returning home last night along Charlotte street, a Review man overheard a small boy say he just found a parcel of meat and brandished it in the air. In these days of Liberal high-cost-of-living cries very few cities are so plentifully provided with food that a boy can pick up meat in the streets. By the same token dogs here must also be well fed.

J. P. MORGAN FIRM MEMBERS WHO QUIT BIG CORPORATIONS

J. PIERPONT MORGAN
WILLIAM HENRY PORTER
H.P. DAVISON
THOMAS W. LAMONT
GEORGE F. BAKER
CHARLES STEELE

J. PIERPONT MORGAN, FOUR OF HIS PARTNERS, AND GEORGE F. BAKER, PRESIDENT OF THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK.

J. P. Morgan announced recently that he and his four partners had retired from the directorate of thirty corporations in which the banking firm had for years had a strong voice. The retirement, he added, was in deference to a decided change in public sentiment and for their own convenience.

The "change in public sentiment," it is understood, is the direct sequel of the agitation against interlocking directorates, of which the Pujo committee made so much in its hearings in the latter part of 1912. Since that time there have been many movements in Congress to amend the various acts, including an attempt to incorporate a clause in the currency bill so as to prohibit interlocking directorates. Up to now nothing specific has been accomplished because of the press of other business, but it is a matter of common report that the message the President is preparing will urge legislation toward this end.

Mr. Morgan severs his connection with eighteen corporations, Henry P. Davison with four, Thomas W. Lamont four, William H. Porter two and Charles Steele two.

It is understood that additional resignations from national banks will be held off pending possible amendment to the currency law.

INCREASE IN POPULARITY OF HISTORY, TRAVEL AND SOCIOLOGY AT LIBRARY

1102 New Books During the Year—673 New Members —The Annual Report

Mr. F. M. Dela Fosse, Librarian at the Public Library, submitted the following annual report to the Library Board last night:—

The Chairman Public Library Board,

Dear Sir,—I beg herewith to present my report on the work accomplished in the Library during the past year.

It has been a satisfactory year in many ways, as there has been a steady influx of visitors throughout the whole period and interest taken in the Library and the museum by our own citizens as well as strangers to the city has been very gratifying.

There has been a falling off in the reading of fiction, but in this we are experiencing the same state of affairs as exists in other libraries, the trend of present day reading pointing markedly to sociological works as well as books dealing with history or travel. Our readers are not behindhand in this respect as will be seen from the fact that whereas in 1912 the total amount of sociological reading was 458 volumes, in 1913 it had increased to 750. There has also been a great increase in the circulation of magazines and periodicals, as will be seen by the tabulated statement given below.—

Fiction 44,988, biography 555, philosophy 173, religion 356, sociology 750, philology 31, natural science 577, useful arts 455, fine arts 202, literature 958, travel 763, history 751, magazines 726.—Total, 51,285.

Last year there were no figures available for magazines, but there is no doubt that during the past year there was a greater run on this branch of reading than in former years.

READING AND REFERENCE ROOMS.

The reading rooms and the reference rooms have been better patronized than in the preceding year as also has the boys' department, which gives every promise of becoming a very important factor in the library as soon as arrangements can be made for increasing the accommodation.

DONATIONS OF BOOKS.

Through the kind offices of Mr. Burnham, the library is now in possession of as complete a set of the Patent Office Records as it is possible for us to procure. The Department of Education at Washington also, has added this library to its mailing list and during the past year we have been in receipt of some very valuable educational literature from this source.

We have been in receipt of a few books from individual friends of the library and also of two pictures from Mr. F. H. Dobbin, for our men's reading room. These now hang on the walls and form a very welcome addition to the decorations.

BOOKS ADDED TO THE LIBRARY.

During the year 1102 volumes were added to the shelves, the different departments being represented as follows:—

Adult fiction 435, juvenile literature 107, reference works 18, religion 8, sociology 55, biography 34, useful arts 91, natural science 80, literature 54, travel and description 47, fine arts 29, history 49, magazines 80, philosophy 13.—Total 1102.

TICKETS ISSUED.

Six hundred and seventy-three tickets were issued to new members, and of these about ninety were juveniles. The total number of tickets issued since the library was opened to the public amounts to 3990.

FINES, ETC.

The amount received in fines was fifteen dollars less than in the preceding year, which may be accounted for in measure perhaps by the fact that the public are getting more used to the system and taking care to bring in their books in good time.

BOOKS LOST OR WITHDRAWN.

Under the open shelf system it is impossible to say exactly how many books have been deliberately taken from the shelves. Undoubtedly some have been taken without the formality of having them entered at the desk, but only one volume of value has been missed this year. The book in question, "The Cyclopaedia of Receipts, Notes, etc., compiled by A. A. Hopkins and published by the Scientific American, was lent to the library by the Educational Department. Its value is placed at $5. Presumably the Library Board will have to make this loss good to the Department if the book is not returned. Every effort has been made to trace its whereabouts but so far without result.

About 350 volumes have had to be withdrawn owing to wear and tear. All but twenty-two of these belong to the old library and very few indeed showed a circulation of less than twenty. The high water-mark of circulation attained by any book was 98.

There is one point on which I would like to lay special emphasis and that is the importance at as early a date as possible, of having the children's department separated from the adults. It is absolutely impossible with the shelves arranged as they are at present to prevent the children from obtaining access to the adult departments. The consequence is that they often take away books of fiction to which they are not entitled and help to swell the grand total of adult reading at the expense of their own department.

THANKS TO THE NEWSPAPERS.

I would be ungrateful if I were not to take this means of thanking the newspapers for the very great help they have always accorded in placing the aims of the library before the public. They have shown themselves to be thoroughly imbued with the feeling that this institution is for the benefit of the public as a whole and have disinterestedly aided us in every way possible.

In conclusion, sir, I desire to thank you and each member of the Board, on behalf of my assistants and myself, for the hearty support that has been accorded to us throughout this year.

Fred. M. DELA FOSSE,
Librarian.

Jas. Baptie, of Springville, takes the special for best female bird and the White Wyandotte cup goes to Archie Brault. Joseph Kelly, secretary of the Association, won the cup for White Rocks and A. O. Kidd had the most points in his exhibit in Barred Rocks. Other winners will be announced to-night.

Among the heaviest exhibitors are Thos. Bottell and Son, Bowmanville; F. Wales, Milton; Point Fortune Poultry Yards, Quebec; Jas. Baptie and Sons, Springville; Harry Lush, City; R. H. Crosby, Markham; S. Oliver, Lindsay.

Competition has been very keen. In the case of the Wales' entries, which made enviable showing in Guelph, some of the exhibits were below birds shown at the market hall and others were above. Mr. Wales, however, is quite satisfied with the decisions.

ICE CREAM REAL FOOD

This is the Opinion of Judge Morson in Appeal Case

TORONTO, Jan. 8.—"No one objects to a man eating a meal in a restaurant on Sunday, but a certain class of people raise their hands in horror when ice cream replaces the meat. It seems to me that our ideas should broaden with the times, but apparently they are becoming narrower among a certain sect." Such was the statement of Judge Morson at the City Hall yesterday, who declared that ice cream is as much a food as meat or potatoes, and that if the seller of ice cream on Sunday is a bona-fide restauranteur he is committing no breach of the by-law by allowing customers to consume "food" on his premises.

The occasion was the hearing of arguments in an appeal taken by Emil Brooker, the lessee of Wolf's Park, Sunnyside, from his conviction in the Police Court by Judge Cohen recently for selling ice cream on Sunday. "I think the conviction should be quashed," said His Honor, "but the information laid at the Police Court states that he had no license."

Mr. O'Connor, who appeared for the appellant, stated that it had been mislaid. He was [illegible] a copy from the License Department.

An enlargement of the case was granted to permit County Crown Attorney to communicate with the Attorney-General, who, he thought, would want to carry the case further.

PETERBOROUGH, THURSDAY, JAN. 8, 1914.

A FIELD FOR ENTERPRISE.

IN ANOTHER COLUMN we publish a letter we have received from a gentleman in Hastings County referring to the articles which have from time to time appeared in this column on the development of industries in Eastern Ontario. So far as The Review is concerned the chief object in agitating for some movement in the development of these districts is a social one. But as the social status of any people is largely dependent upon industry. We believe that the low standard of life in certain parts of the Trent Valley district is due to the lack of industries. Furthermore we believe that this need not be the case. Distributed throughout Eastern Ontario generally are many deposits of minerals which will yield the raw material necessary in the manufacture of a number of important products.

Most of this mineral wealth is now easily accessible by reason of recent railway extensions and the transportation question which for years has retarded the development of the district has now been solved.

The cost of power has been in a number of places wonderfully reduced by the installation of hydro-electric plants and many important water powers yet remain undeveloped and available to the prospective manufacturer.

In addition to the mineral wealth the northern portion of the district contains large areas of hardwood capable of supplying material for a number of the different woodworking enterprises and also for the manufacture of methyl alcohols, charcoal, acetic acid, and acetone.

The minerals available are as follows :—Iron pyrites, arsenical pyrites, talc, fluorspar, feldspar, actinolite, mixtures of actinolite, fibrous hornblende and talc, barytes, hematite, magnetite, galena, zinc blende, marble, apartite or phosphate of lime, silica, mica, graphite and marl. Within the next year it is expected that two more rare and important minerals, hitherto not known to occur in the Dominion will be added to this list and mined with a considerable profit.

The district already produces the following manufactured material, i.e., sulphuric, nitric and hydrochloric acids, ground talc, white arsenic, pig lead, cobalt and nickel, oxides, cement, lime and cinder residues from the acid works.

The actinolite, fibrous hornblende, and talc mixtures may be worked up into a large variety of fire resistant, nonconducting and insulating products, more especially roofings, floorings, and wall plaster. Non radiating compositions for pipes, furnaces and boilers can also be made from these minerals. A highly refractory fire-brick suitable for lining furnaces and commanding a large market is composed of an actinolite-asbestos mixture with a little talc, and a proportion of hydraulic lime and sand. Wood pulp, and saw dust for admixture can be procured locally, and if magnesite or calcined magnesia is needed this can be obtained from the Township of Grenville, on the north shore of the Ottawa River. Gypsum can be got from Western Ontario, and both raw marls and manufactured cement are close at hand. The field for fire resistant floorings and wall plasters is enormous especially those of a flexible character and these magnesian minerals will all soon be of incalculable value.

The new line of the Canadian Northern to Ottawa passes through a stretch of country that contains some of the best phosphate mines known. Phosphate of lime or apatite is used in the manufacture of superphosphate, an invaluable fertiliser. The price of raw phosphate has lately risen to the figure at which the old mines of Ontario and Quebec formerly made good profits, 30 to 40 years ago, and with cheap sulphuric acid (from the acid works at Tweed) close at hand the manufacture of fertiliser should be a highly profitable business and one that must inevitably grow to enormous proportions.

Then apart from the mines and works of the Nichols Chemical Co., at present the only producers in Canada of sulphuric acid there are numerous deposits of high grade sulphur ore ready to supply other factories. The greater number and the most inportant of these are situated in the Townships of Madoc and Hungerford, all of them being within a short distance of either the Canadian Northern or the Canadian Pacific Railways and some close to both lines. There are other deposits further north, west and east in the counties of Frontenac, Lennox and Addington, Leeds, Lanark, Peterborough and Haliburton.

Sufficient has been said to awaken an enquiring interest into the vast possibilities of the districts named. We have only hinted at some of them. As our correspondent remarks, we ought to turn our attention homeward. The west has been very clamorous and even the United States have lured much of our spare capital over the line which will never come back again. If we are to lose our money in speculation it is better to lose it at home than abroad. But money spent at home judiciously is never lost, and in this case there is a certain profit to be gained if the enterprise is taken up by responsible and reliable men. Better leave it alone than to tamper with it. There has been too much tinkering. Companies have been formed by men with no other object than the selling of shares, raking off a few thousand dollars and getting out.. If this work is to be done properly it must be taken up by men who are willing to stand or fall by the proposition and who are inspired by a vision of the industrial and social regeneration of Eastern Ontario. Such men are scarce, but it is to such that we appeal to, at least, look into this matter and see if there is not a great incentive to profitable enterprise in these northern counties.

WINSTON AND RANDOLPH.

IT WOULD BE a case of history repeating itself in the one family for two generations if Winston Churchill should make a break with his colleagues just now. It will be recalled how his father, Lord Randolph, kicked over the traces when yoked with Lord Salisbury. "Randy" got the worst of it, for the stolid Cecil went on with his Government and "cut out" the young rebel. Lord Randolph never looked up afterward. Churchill is a "chip of the old block," but as he has written the life of his father and admitted his mistake it is not likely that he will follow in his sire's footsteps to the extent of jeopardizing his political future. He could hardly go back to the Tories after all that has happened, but one never knows. He has had many hair-breadth escapes since he was a boy and seemed to get out of them with an increased reputation. His own account of his escape from the prisoner's quarters in Pretoria during the Boer war made excellent reading at the time and it is, at least, possible that he may have some equally exciting adventures in the future.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

HUERTA IS STILL "about to quit his post." But Huerta has not quitted. He seems to be playing "I'm the King of the Castle," while Wilson is crying, "Come down you dirty rascal !"

IT MUST BE GRATIFYING to Canadians to see the universal interest taken in the welfare of Sir James Whitney, prostrate almost unto death in New York.. His crowning achievement a clean administration, is the greatest title to confidence and esteem. The public seems to favor the hero of Hydro as his successor.

AN ARCTIC WAVE is reported to have hit Europe within the past few days, lakes and reservoirs have been frozen over in Lisbon. The South of France has also been affected. In the Alps a number of persons have died from cold. Yet the thermometer has never fallen lower than eighteen degrees below freezing point. We are a hardy race in Canada..

CONVICTS sent New Year greetings to Dr. J. G. Gilmour and Hon. W. J. Hanna, from the farm colonies at Whitby. They might have extended their felicitations to the judges. A better understanding between these two classes should be encouraged, for they are complementary. If there were no criminals there would be no judges, and if there were no judges there would be no convicts—and that would never do, for what would the warders do then, poor things?

THE CROWN PRINCE of Germany whose escapades have been a source of anxiety to his father is again in a "scrape." It is reported that he has been degraded in his army rank for publicly condemning Colonel Von Reuter for his conduct at Zabern. If this is the Prince before he comes to the throne, what will he be when he becomes Kaiser? The present Kaiser is said to be a man of peace. It may be that he is building his present big army and navy for his son. It would appear that he is a likely boy to use them when he gets control.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

The Native Born.

Montreal Gazette.

One set of figures in the latest volume giving details of the census of 1911, deals with the origins of the people. It is noticeable that, in spite of the heavy immigration, of the total increase in population in ten years of 1,835,328, more than one-half, or 947,867, were people born in Canada. The figures are:

Total population 7,206,643
Born in Canada 5,619,682

The emigration, which in some directions, is constant all the year round, and towards Europe in the fall months is notably large, seriously reduces the gain that a simple study of the number of new comers would lead the observer to expect. The figures of the total population and the number born in Canada are given as follows:

	Total.	Native.
Ontario	2,523,274	2,015,445
Quebec	2,003,232	1,856,699
Nova Scotia	492,338	456,083
Saskatchewan	492,432	248,751
Manitoba	455,614	264,828
Alberta	374,663	162,237
New Brunswick	351,889	333,576
British Columbia	392,490	169,322
P. E. Island	93,728	91,164
Yukon, etc.	39,993	31,307

It will be noticed that in all the provinces except British Columbia and Alberta people born in Canada are in the majority, but in these, when all born in the British Empire are taken, the foreign-born are in a decided minority. Naturally in the West the proportion of native-born is smallest. The later created provinces draw not only the immigrant but people from the other Canadian communities. In a way the proportion of people from outside is also an evidence an evidence of progress. This is noticeable in the case of the cities. Levis, which has been something of a stand-still community, has 98.75 per cent. of its people classified as born in Canada. Sorel has 98.35 per cent., and Quebec 93.32 per cent. Halifax has 97.36, St. John 96.62, Kingston 96.20, Hull 99.42, Sherbrooke 94.71, Three Rivers 97.81, Charlottetown, P.E.I., 98.49, and so on. Toronto, contrary to what might be expected, has a smaller percentage of native-born than Montreal the figures for the two cities being 91.13 and 90.81 per cent. On the other hand Winnipeg has only 44.08 per cent. of its population native-born, Vancouver showing even less, with 43.39 per cent., which is within a shade of Calgary's figure. The lowest figure is that for Nanaimo, 33.44 per cent. It is not noticeable that some of the places with the smaller proportions of native-born are emphatic in asserting their Canadianism. The home counts for more than the birthplace.—Montreal Gazette.

ENGINEER ENDORSES REVIEW'S COMMENTS

On Development of Canadian Industries.

To the Editor of The Review :

Sir,—I have read with a great deal of interest your remarks on the development of the back Townships of Eastern Ontario and the effect this would have in bettering the living conditions throughout these sections.

I may say that I thoroughly agree with you and believe that the operation of our mineral deposits and the utilization of the vast amount of raw material they contain is really the only practical solution of the problem.

Eastern Ontario powers are all of incalculable value on account of the minerals that have to be mined and treated. I seriously think that the development of a number of the smaller powers that are scattered throughout the district would do more good than the installation of a single long transmission scheme, but anyway if conservation is carried out properly all powers will be benefited.

Another point that I should like to bring to your notice is this. An enormous amount of money goes out of the front Townships every year, sunk in foolish wildcat speculation, both in mines and Western real estate.

Within the past year the farmers of this section have been bled to the extent of over $50,000 for an undeveloped and totally worthless property in the Western States. Another Northern Ontario wildcat has had its pickings and the Western subdivision shark has discovered the easiest gulled community in the Dominion. Cannot our neighbors be persuaded to spend a portion of their capital at home with profit to themselves and such valuable results in the country? I have known amounts invested (?) by a single person that would have been ample to finance several small mining and industrial businesses here without any risk whatsoever.

Yours truly,
ENGINEER.

Hastings.

A Trade in Mummified Cats.

There were 180,000 cats mummified in the hope of nine blessed hereafters once found by a laborer who dropped into a pit at Beni Hassen, about 100 miles from Cairo. At the bottom of the pit he discovered that he had chanced upon a cat cemetery. An Alexandrine speculator brought the lot, for the Levantine merchant will traffic in anything. He shipped them in the steamers Pharos and Thebes, consigned to order in Liverpool. Here they were sold at auction by Leventon & Co., being knocked down in ton lots at a figure that averaged 10 cats for a penny. The ultimate utilisation of the sacred animals was to enrich the English fields.

Slighted His Chance.

At a singing contest at Frankfort, Kaiser Wilhelm, who attended, was served by several high school boys as pages. According to Jugend, he was attracted by the bright face of one of them and asked his name.

"Korner, your majesty," said the boy.

"And your first name is Theodore?" said the emperor, thinking of the patriot poet Theodore Korner, whose war songs stirred Germany.

"I'm sorry," replied the uncourtier-like youngster, "but it's only Wilhelm."

When Kaiser Wilhelm broke into a hearty laugh at the answer the page realized his missed opportunity.

Her Little Confidence Game.

"We're playing railroad train," she said as she pulled her father's paper away, "and I'm the conductor. Tickets, please."

He took a card from his pocket and handed it to her. She looked at it intently for a minute and then handed it back. "That was issued yesterday," she said, "and isn't good to-day. You'll have to pay cash or get off the train."

He gave her a dime. He knew he had been "worked," but what else could he do?

A SPLENDID HAZARD

By HAROLD McGRATH

[Copyright 910 by Bobbs-Merrill Company.]

The admiral shook his head. He had come to Corsica as one might go to a picnic, and here he had almost toppled over into a gulf!

The significance of the swift glance which was exchanged between M. Ferraud and Fitzgerald was not translatable to Laura, who alone caught it in its transit. An idea took possession of her, but this idea had nothing to do with the glance, which she forgot almost instantly. As Laura was of the disposition to walk down by the cemetery, to take a final view of the sea before it melted into the sky, what was more natural than that Fitzgerald should follow her? They walked on in the peace of twilight, unmindful of the curiosity of the villagers or of the play of children about their feet. The two were strangely silent, but to him it seemed that she must presently hear the thunder of his insurgent heart. At length she paused, gazing toward the sea, upon which the purples of night were rapidly deepening.

"And if I had not made that wager!" he said, following aloud his train of thought.

"And if I had not bought that statuette!" picking up the thread. If she had laughed nothing might have happened. But her voice was low and sweet and ruminating.

The dam of his reserve broke, and the great current of life rushed over his lips, to happiness or to misery, whichever it was to be.

"I love you, and I can no more help telling you than I can help breathing. I have tried not to speak. I have so little to offer. I have been lonely so long. I did not mean to tell you here, but I've done it." He ceased, terrified. His voice had diminished down to a mere whisper and finally refused to work at all.

Still she stared out to sea.

He found his voice again. "So there isn't any hope? There is some one else?" He was very miserable.

"Had there been I should have stopped you at once."

"But"—

"Do you wish a more definite answer, John?" And only then did she turn her head.

"Yes!" his courage coming back full and strong. "I want you to tell me you love me and while my arms are round you like this. May I kiss you?"

"No other man save my father shall."

"Ah, I haven't done anything to deserve this!"

"No?"

"I'm not even a third rate hero."

"No?" with gentle raillery.

"Say you love me."

"Amo, amo, amiamo"—

"In English. I have never heard it in English."

"So," pushing back from him, "you have heard it in Italian?"

"Laura, I didn't mean that. There was never any one else. Say it."

So she said it softly. She repeated it as though the utterance was as sweet to her lips as it was to his ears. And then, for the first time, she became supine in his arms. With his cheek touching the hair on her brow they together watched, but did not see the final conquest of the day.

"And I have had the courage to ask you to be my wife?" It was wonderful.

Napoleon, his hunted great-grandson, the treasure, all these had ceased to exist.

"John, when you lay in the corridor the other night and I thought you were dying I kissed you." Her arm tightened as did his. "Will you promise never to tell if I confess a secret?"

"I promise."

"You never would have had the courage to propose if I hadn't deliberately brought you here for that purpose. It was I who proposed to you."

"I'm afraid I don't quite get that," doubtfully.

"Then we'll let the subject rest where it is. You might bring it up in after years." Her laughter was happy.

He raised his eyes reverently toward heaven. She would never know that she had stood in danger.

"But your father!" with a note of sudden alarm. And all the worldly sides to the dream burst upon him.

"Father is only the 'company,' John."

And so the admiral himself admitted when, an hour later, Fitzgerald put the affair before him briefly and frankly.

"It is all her concern, my son, and only part of mine. My part is to see that you keep in order. I don't know; I rather expected it. Of course," said the admiral, shifting his cigar, "there's a business end to it. I'm a rich man, but Laura isn't worth a cent—in money. Young men generally get the wrong idea that daughters of wealthy parents must also be wealthy." He was glad to hear the young man laugh. It was a good sign.

"My earnings and my income amount to about $7,000 a year, and with an object in view I can earn more. She says that will be plenty."

The course of true love does not always run so smoothly. A short distance up the road Cathewe was grimly fighting for his happiness.

"Hildegarde, forget him. Must he spoil both our lives? Come with me. Be my wife. I will make any and all sacrifices toward your contentment."

"Have we not thrashed this all out before, my friend?" sadly. "Do not ask me to forget him; rather let me ask you to forget me."

"He will never be loyal to any one but himself. He is selfish to the core. Has he not proved it?" Where were the words he needed for this last defense? Where his arguments to convince her? He was losing. In his soul he knew it. If his love for her was strong, hers for this outcast was no less. "I have never wished the death of any man, but if he should die"—

She interrupted him, her hands extended as in pleading. Never had he seen a woman's face so sad. "Arthur, I have more faith in you than in any other man, and I prize your friendship above all other things. But who can say nay to the heart? Not you. Not I. Have I not fought it? Have I not striven to forget, to trample out this fire? Have you yourself not tried to banish me from your heart? Have you succeeded? Do you remember that night in Munich? My voice broke miserably, and my public career was ruined. What caused it? A note from him saying that he had tired of the role and was leaving. It was not my love he wanted, after all—a slip of paper which, at any time, would have been his for the asking. But I cannot argue more—I weary!"

"He will tire of you again," desperately.

"I know it. But in my heart something speaks that he will need me, and when he does I shall go to him."

CHAPTER XIX.

THE DUPE.

THE next morning Fitzgerald found Cathewe's note under his plate. He opened it with a sense of disaster:

My Dear Old Jack—I'm off. Found a pony and shall jog to Ajaccio by the route we came. Please take my luggage back to the Grand hotel, and I'll pick it up. And have my trunk sent ashore too. I shan't go back to America with the admiral, bless his kindly old heart! I'm off to Mombasa. Always keep a shooting kit there for emergencies. I suppose you'll understand. Be kind to her and help her in any way you can. I hope I shan't run into Breitmann. I should kill him out of hand. Happiness to you, my boy. And maybe I'll ship you a trophy for the wedding. Explain my departure in any way you please. CATHEWE.

The reader folded the note and stowed it away. Somehow the bloom was gone from things. He was very fond of Cathewe, kindly, gentle, brave and chivalrous. What was the matter with the woman anyhow? How to explain? The simplest way would be to state that Cathewe had gone back to Ajaccio. Fitzgerald was gloomy till that moment when Laura joined him. To her, of course, he explained the situation.

Neither she nor Hildegarde cared to go up to the forest. They would find nothing but a hole. And, indeed, when the men returned from the pines, weary, dusty and dissatisfied, they declared that they had gone not with the expectation of finding anything, but to certify a fact.

M. Ferraud was now in a great hurry. Forty miles to Corte. Night or not they must make the town. There was no dissension; the spell of the little man was upon them all.

• • • • • • •

Racing his horses all through the night, scouring for fresh ones at dawn and finding them, and away again, climbing, turning, climbing round this pass, over that bridge, through this cut, thus flew Breitmann, the passion of haste upon him. By this tremendous pace he succeeded in arriving at Evisa before the admiral had covered half the distance to Carghese.

How clear and keen his mind was as on he rolled! A thousand places wove themselves to the parent stem. He even laughed aloud, sending a shiver up the spine of the driver, who was certain his old master was mad. The face of Laura drifted past him as in a dream and then again that of the other woman. No, no. He regretted nothing, absolutely nothing. But he had been a fool there. He had wasted time and lent himself to a despicable intrigue. For all that he outcried it. There was a touch of shame on his cheeks when he remembered that had he asked she would have given him that scrap of paper the first hour of their meeting. Somewhere in Hildegarde von Mitter lay dormant the spirit of heroes. He had made a mistake.

Two millions of shining money, gold, silver and English notes. And he laughed again as he recalled M. Ferraud, caught in a trap. He was clever, but not clever enough. What a stroke—to make prisoners of the party on their return, to carry the girl away into the mountains! Would any of them think of treasures, of conspiracies, with her as a hostage? He thought not. In the hue and cry for her these elements in the game would fall to a minor place. Well he knew M. Ferraud. He would call to bear on for the safety of Laura. Love her? Yes. She was the one woman. But men did not make captives of women and obtain their love. He knew the futility of such coercion. He had committed two or three scoundrelly acts, but never would he or could he sink to such a level. No. He meant no harm at all. Frighten her, perhaps, and terrorize the others, and mayhap take a kiss as he left her to the coming of her friends. Nothing more serious than that.

Two millions in gold and silver and English notes! He would have his revenge for all these years of struggle and failure, for the cold and callous policies of state which had driven him to this piece of roguery. On their heads be it. Two thousand in Marseilles, ready at his beck and call, a thousand more in Avignon, in Lyons, in Dijon and so on up to Paris, the Paris he had cursed one night from under his mansard. In a week he would have them shaking in their boots. The unemployed, the idlers, thieves, his to a man. If he saw his own death at the end little he cared. He would have one great moment, pay off the score, France as well as Germany. He would at least live to see them burrying each other's throat. To declare to France that he was only Germany's tool, put forward for the sole purpose of destroying peace in the midst of a great military crisis. He had other papers, and the prying little Frenchman had never seen those—clever forgeries, bearing the signature of certain great German personages. These should they find at the selected moment. Let them rip one another's throats, the dogs! Two million of francs—enough to purchase 100,000 men.

"Ah, my great-grandsire, if spirits have eyes yours will see something presently. And that poor little secret agent thinks I want a crown on my head! There was a time— Curse these infernal headaches!"

On, on; hurry, hurry. The driver was faithful, a some time brigand and later a harbor boatman, and of all his confederates this one was the only man he dared trust on an errand of this kind.

Evisa. They did not pause. They ate their supper on the way. With three Sardinian donkeys, strong and patient little brutes, with lanterns and shovels and sacks, the two fared into the pines. Aitone was all familiar ground to the Corsican, who, in younger days, had taken his illegal tithe from these hills. They found the range soon enough, but made a dozen mistakes in measurements, and it was long toward midnight, when the oil of the lantern ran low, that their shovels bore down into the precious pocket. The earth flew. They worked like madmen, with nervous energy and power of will, and when the chest finally came into sight, rotten with age and the soak of earth, they fell back against a tree, on the verge of collapse. The hair was damp on their foreheads, their breath came harshly, almost in sobs.

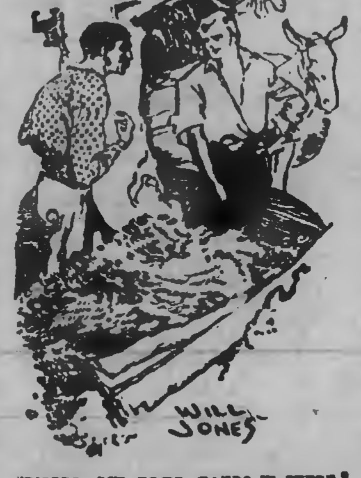
Suddenly Breitmann fell upon his knees and laughed hysterically, plunged his blistered hands into the shining heap. It played through his fingers in little musical cascades. He rose.

"Pietro, you have been faithful to me. Put your two hands in there!"

"I, master?" stupefied.

"Go on! Go on! As much as your two hands can hold is yours. Dig them in deep, man, dig them in deep!"

With a cry Pietro dropped and burrowed into the gold and silver. A dozen times he started to withdraw his hands, but they trembled so that some of the coins would slip and fall. At last, with one desperate plunge, the money running down toward his elbows, he turned aside and let fall his burden on the new earth outside the shallow pit. He rolled beside it, done for, in a fainting state. Breitmann laughed wildly.



"PIETRO, PUT YOUR HANDS IN THERE."

"Come, come; we have no time. Put it into your pockets."

"But I have not counted it!" naively.

"Tomorrow when we make camp for breakfast. Let us hurry."

Quickly Pietro stuffed his pockets, jabbering in his patois, swearing so many candles to the Virgin for his night's work. Then began the loading of the sacks, and these were finally dumped into the donkey panniers.

"Now, Pietro, the shortest cut to Ajaccio. First your hand on your amulet and oath never to reveal what has happened."

Pietro swore solemnly. "I am ready now, master."

"Lead on, then," replied Breitmann. Impulsively he raised his hands high above his head. "Mine, all mine!"

He wiped his face and hands, pulled his cap down firmly, lighted a cigarette, struck the rear donkey, and the hazardous journey began.

• • • • • • •

Seven men more or less young, with a genial air of dissipation about their eyes and a varied degree of recklessness lurking at the corners of their mouths—seven men sat round a table in a house in the Rue St. Charles. They had been eating and drinking rather luxuriously for Ajaccio. The Rue St. Charles is neither spacious nor elegant as a thoroughfare, but at that point where it turns into the Place Letizia it is quiet and unfrequented at night. A film of tobacco smoke wavered in and out among the guttering candles and streamed round the empty and part empty champagne bottles. At the head of the table sat Breitmann, still pale and weary from his herculean labors. His face was immobile, but his eyes were lively.

"Tomorrow," said Breitmann, "we leave for France. On board the moneys will be equally divided. Then for the work." His voice was cold, authoritative.

"Two millions!" mused Picard from behind a fresh cloud of smoke. He picked up a bottle and gravely filled his glass, beckoning to the others to follow his example. At another sign all rose to their feet, Breitmann alone remaining seated. "To the day!"

Breitmann's lips grew thinner. That was the only sign.

To be continued.

Between Friends.

"Isn't Percy Greener the most polite man you ever knew? He'll go out of his way any time to say sweet things about people."

"Yes, but I don't believe he's at all sincere."

"Of course he isn't. Why, only yesterday he told me what a perfect figure you had."

A Protracted Service.

They must have long church services in a certain town where a paper announced of a certain church, "The regular services will commence next Sunday at 3 p.m. and continue until further notice."

A White Jackjaw.

A jackjaw, pure white all over, including the beak and legs, has been shot on Mr. Buckenham's farm, The Firth, Billericay.

UMBRELLAS ARE ANCIENT.

But They Were Ridiculed When They First Appeared In London.

Umbrellas were described in early dictionaries as "a portable penthouse to carry in a person's hand to screen him from violent rain or heat."

Umbrellas appear in the carvings at Persepolis. Niebuhr saw a great Arabian prince returning from a mosque, he and each member of his family having a large umbrella carried by their side. Old chinaware shows the Chinese shaded by umbrellas. They were first used in this country in Baltimore, brought from India, in 1772. It is said that the first person who commonly carried an umbrella in London was the benevolent Jonas Hanway, who died in 1786.

John McDonald, a London footman, who wrote his own life, said that he had "a fine silk umbrella which he brought from Spain," but he could not with any comfort to himself use it, the people calling out: "Frenchman! Why don't you get a coach?" The hackney coachmen and chairmen were clamoring against their rival. The footman says he persisted for three months till they took no further notice of this novelty. Foreigners began to use theirs and then the English.—Kansas City Star.

DENTISTRY FOR TREES.

All Cavities Should Be Treated as Soon as They Appear.

Whether it is a shade or fruit tree a little judicious treatment of a cavity will often save the tree for many years of usefulness. Whether it be a branch or the main trunk the treatment will be the same. First all decayed or apparently decaying or diseased wood should be removed with a sharp chisel or knife until perfectly sound heartwood is exposed. Immediately wash the wound with a solution of copper sulphate in the proportion of one pound of sulphate to five gallons of water.

As soon as this has been done fill the cavity with a thin mortar made by mixing one part of cement with three parts of clean sand. When it has become stiff, but not hard, face it on the outside with thin cement, using a trowel to smooth the cement over all parts that have become injured. If a cavity or split should occur near a fork of the tree it would be an additional safeguard to put a long bolt through both branches so as to hold them together. When the cement hardens in a cavity the trunk will be perfectly solid, and decay will be arrested.—Farm and Fireside.

Table Manners In Old France.

Could we restore for half an hour the dinner table of old France and obtain half a dozen instantaneous photographs of a royal banquet at any era between the reigns of Francis I. and Louis Quatorze such a "cataract of laughter" would be heard as might disturb the serenity of Louis in paradise. The duchess, her napkin tied securely round her neck, would be seen mumbling a bone, another fair creature scouring her plate with her bread, a gallant courtier using his doublet or the tablecloth as a towel for his fingers and two footmen holding a yard of damask under a lady's chin while she emptied her goblet at a draft. During a feast of inordinate length it was sometimes necessary to substitute a clean cloth for the one which the carelessness or bad manners of the guests had reduced to a deplorable condition.—"An Idler In Old France."

London In 1784.

In 1784 M. La Combe published a book entitled "A Picture of London," in which, inter alia, he says, "The highroads thirty or forty miles round London are filled with armed highwaymen and footpads." This was then pretty true, though the expression "filled" is somewhat of an exaggeration.

M. La Combe in another part of his book exclaims: "How are you changed, Londoners! Your women are become bold, imperious and expensive. Bankrupts and beggars, coiners, spies and informers, robbers and pickpockets abound. The baker mixes alum in his bread. The brewer puts opium and copper filling in his beer. The milk woman spoils her milk with snails."

Don't Be a
Jack-of-All-Trades

The day of the "Jack-of-all-trades" is passed. This is the time of the specialist, of the man qualified to do some one thing to the queen's taste—which means to the satisfaction of a critical boss. No concern can afford to place a high-grade equipment in the hands of low-grade men. Competition forces employers to meet skill with skill.

To make it short, have you any special equipment? Is there anything in you to command big pay?

Every month upwards of 400 I. C. S. students write to Scranton to tell of positions secured or bettered—of earnings increased and prospects brightened—through study of I. C. S. Courses. Last month the number was 416. The letters come from every section and from all sorts and conditions of men. Some of the writers live in Ontario—some live in British Columbia; some began with no more education than ability to read and write—some were college graduates; some had a good deal of spare time—some had to figure on every spare minute; some were well-to-do—some were obliged to save the pennies.

If you are a "live wire"—if you wish to make sure of the job you want—there is an I. C. S. way for you. To find out all about it without cost, mark and mail the coupon. Doing so will commit you to nothing, place you under no obligation, and may prove to be the turning point in your career.

ADVERTISING

A STORE'S importance is rightly judged by its advertising. Not altogether by the size of the advertisement, but by size and tone, and quality of announcement.

What the store has to say is one thing. Quite as important is how it says it.

Given that the clerical force is competent and up-to-date, it will say, over the counter, the very best to be said in reference to the goods enquired for. It may, and should, suggest other goods, not in the customers view.

This implies that the customer is in the store. But what brings him or her there? The wish to buy and the belief it is a good place to buy at.

How is this learned of?

By advertising. The advertisement is a message, an intelligent middleman, doing service between seller and buyer. The space talks to thousands, even while the store is closed for the night.

Use The REVIEW and tell the story of your store and its opportunities for good service.

THE WYANDOTTE WHAT IS IT ?

Review Apologizes to Mr. Paxman for Mixing the Breeds.

The Review writer committed a serious error in his article on the Poultry Show in yesterday's issue. He stated the Wyandotte breed was derived originally from the crossing of the Cochin and the Hamburg. This was incorrect and a great number of Review readers who knew the facts, assailed Mr. Paxman for giving The Review such erronious information. Mr. Paxman is entirely innocent in the matter, the writer of the article was led astray by his own inauguration. He got the breeds mixed. We are now in the proud position to state definitely that the Wyandotte breed of fowl is derived from the mating of a dark Brahma with a silver Hamburg.

We trust that this apology will be acceptable to Mr. Paxman, and also to the Wyandotte birds that happened to read The Review article or overheard the heated discussion on the libel upon their ancestors. Fowls like men and women, are very touchy on this matter of breeding.

CHAIRMAN SAYS HE WILL NOT TOLERATE EVASION

Head of Ontario Railway Board Delivers an Ultimatum to Promoter of West Shore Line and Latter Has Promised to Present a Statement Giving His Side of the Case at Next Session.

TORONTO, Jan. 8.—Chairman McIntyre of the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board did not mince words in his remarks to John W. Moyes, late head of the defunct Ontario West Shore Railway, at the resumed inquiry into that concern's failure yesterday.

"You need not put on an air of innocence," declared the chairman. "This board is entitled to an account of affairs and will get it. There is no use in being shifty and evasive.

"You had the books explaining these things, and said you turned them over to Mr. Smoke, a man now dead, and whose mouth is closed. It is absurd to talk of these sums in that way. We are entitled to know, and the people are, and we will know

"The only piece of activity that you have displayed is to secure certain documents that we were going to place our hands on," said the chairman, testily.

The outburst came at the end of a dramatic sitting yesterday, when the board and counsel had exhausted every effort to secure the facts they wanted from the head of the railway which has eaten up so much money advanced by various municipalities along its route.

At the conclusion of the hearing yesterday Moyes promised to produce a statement giving his side of the case. This statement will probably be laid before the board when the enquiry is resumed Saturday week.

There was also a discussion about two checks which Mr. Moyes had secured on Tuesday from the Dominion Bank, which had been referred to in the inquiry, and about which the bank officials were to be examined. Mr. Moyes had secured these checks from the bank, and under questioning by Mr. Proudfoot was unable to tell at what time of the day he got them.

"What time of the day did you get these checks yesterday?" asked Mr. Proudfoot.

"I do not remember, I think it was the morning."

"Why was it necessary to take the checks; you could have taken the information from them?"

"I took the checks because I was given them. On Monday I went and asked for the amount of the checks."

"At what time yesterday?"

"I would not be positive."

"It is a strange thing that Mr. Moyes' memory on things that happened yesterday is so defective," said Mr. Kittson, "and so accurate on things that happened some time ago."

As to the disposal of the unsecured bonds Mr. Moyes was equally vague. He thought he had handed them to Mr. Smoke, although an officer of the trust company testified that they had been turned over to him.

Pressed for some definite answer, Mr. Moyes said, "I am positively unable to give evidence to-day.'

GREAT INTEREST DISPLAYED IN THE POULTRY SHOW

Miss Yates Demonstrates With a Carving Knife and a Chicken

There was an exceptionally large attendance at the Poultry Show in the Market Hall last evening. At one time the coops were stormed with eager gazers, at the various types of birds displayed.

Secretary Kelly informed The Review that from every point of view this had been the best exhibition for many years, the number of birds entered being over thirteen hundred, every available space being occupied.

Miss Yates was announced to give an address on "Winter Egg Production," but found it impossible to do so on account of the din of the crowing roosters. Instead of the lecture she gave a demonstration upon "how to carve a chicken."

As to winter egg production, Miss Yates strongly recommends the formula given below as the best method. This is not authorized by the Canadian Government, but is issued by the New York State College of Agriculture at the Cornell University.

1-5 days

Mixture No. 1, moistened with sour skimmed milk, fed five times a day. Mixture No. 2 in shallow tray containing a little of No. 3 (dry) always before chicks. Shredded green food and fine grit and charcoal scattered over food.

5 days-2 weeks

No. 2 in light litter twice a day. No. 3 moistened with sour skimmed milk, fed three times a day; No. 3 (dry) always available.

No. 3 and No. 5 hopper fed. One meal a day of moist mash if it is desired to hasten development.

Further Directions

1. Provide fine grit, charcoal, shell and bone from the start.
2. Give grass range or plenty of green food.
3. Have fresh, clean water always available.
4. Feed only sweet, wholesome foods.
5. Avoid damp and soiled litter.
6. Disinfect brooders frequently.
7. Test all beef-scrap before feeding.
8. Keep chickens active by allowing them to become hungry once daily.
10. Keep dry mash always before the chicks.

CORNELL RATION FOR LAYING HENS

The following whole grain mixture is fed morning and afternoon in a straw litter.

By weight winter	By measure winter	By weight summer	By measure summer
60 lbs. wheat	32 qts. wheat	60 lbs. wheat	32 qts. wheat
60 lbs. corn	36 qts. corn	60 lbs. corn	36 qts. corn
30 lbs. oats	30 qts. oats	30 lbs. oats	30 qts. oats.
30 lbs. buckwheat	20 qts. buckw't

The following mash is fed dry in a hopper kept open during the afternoon only.

By weight winter and summer	By measure winter and summer
60 lbs. corn meal	57 qts. corn meal
60 lbs. wheat middlings	71 qts. wheat middlings
30 lbs. wheat bran	57 qts. wheat bran
10 lbs. alfalfa meal	20 qts. alfalfa meal
10 lbs. oil meal	6 qts. oil meal
50 lbs. beef scrap	43 qts. beef scrap
1 lb. salt	½ qt. salt

The fowls should eat about one-half as much mash by weight as whole grain. Regulate the proportion of grain and ground feed by giving a light feeding of grain in the morning and about all they will consume at the afternoon feeding, (in time to find grain before dark). In the case of pullets or fowls in heavy laying, restrict both night and morning feeding to induce heavy eating of dry mash, especially in the case of hens. This ration should be supplemented with beets, cabbage, sprouted oats, green clover or other succulent food, unless running on grass covered range. Grit, cracked oyster shell and charcoal should be accessible at all times. Green food should not be fed in a frozen condition. All feed and litter used should be strictly sweet, clean and free from mustiness, mold or decay. Serious losses frequently occur from disease due to the fowls taking into their bodies through their intestinal tract or lungs, the spores of the fungus causing molds.

Points for Mothers

Jimmy's Hands.

We will presume that Jimmy is quite young—if he is past ten the charm is apt to be less effective—and that Jimmy, despite your constant care, seems to prefer having his hands a darker shade than his face. Don't you ofttimes wonder what to do about it?

But come to think of it, why not offer Jimmy inducements? Inducements in this instance do not mean bribes or rewards. Progressive mothers know that the old time bribes and rewards did more harm than good. Towels are a part of the inducements Jimmy is to have—small towels for his own particular use and embroidered in a bright color, to please his artistic eye. You might embroider across one end a border of ducks, waddling one after the other, Indian file. Have the ducks yellow, with red bills, black eyes and red feet. You might have the ducks swimming in blue water, which would be even more appropriate. Brown rabbits make a good border. Scampering dogs, even a football—there are any number of designs to catch a boy's fancy and one can usually get them stamped ready to work. Don't forget to have one towel embroidered with a sailboat. If you run out of designs, a red "Jimmy" embroidered on one end will answer the purpose.

The next inducement? It is to praise Jimmy's clean hands when they are clean and shut one's eyes to the fact when they are not clean—that is, when possible. Soon Jimmy will be glad to get that word of praise. He'll think too, that you're acting pretty "square" not to nag at him when his hands are off color. Constant nagging upon this purely boyish fault sometimes arouses a resentment that really prevents him from doing that which he knows would please.

To Keep Baby From Falling.

When baby first began to walk, said a young mother, I was always frightened lest he should fall downstairs Of course I had a gate at the top of the stairs, but I was terrified lest someone should leave the gate open or if he was downstairs he would try to walk up.

Then some one suggested that I should teach him how to go up and down stairs by himself as the best remedy against his falling.

I put him in a jumper and, taking up my position behind him, encouraged him to crawl up on hands and knees. Of course I kept close behind him all the time. If he attempted to walk up by holding on to the banisters I quietly but firmly unclasped his fingers and put them down on the stair instead.

At the top there was a pause for breath and a little praise. Then, still keeping close behind him, I taught him to go down the stairs in the same way, crawling on hands and knees backward, grasping the stairs above him one by one as he descended. This lesson was given every day for a few minutes, and very soon baby could go up or down quite easily.

I still am very careful to keep the gate at the top closed, of course, but I am not nearly so frantically afraid lest it should be left open, because I know that, even if it is, baby will probably come to no harm.

Why Not Start a Mending Club?

Why not start a mending club among your girl friends? You have no idea how jolly and beneficial it will be. We have one, and we meet once a week at the home of the different members, taking our mending, such as stockings, torn underwear, a garment to rip for remaking or anything that needs attention by hand. These are the things we find so tedious to do when alone, and they seem to take so long a time. In this way we accomplish a great deal and often darn and mend holes and rents which otherwise would be left undone. Darning the stockings for the family isn't anything like a hardship if others are doing the same thing. While we sew we either chat or else one of the girls who has not much to do reads some interesting thing to us. Later in the evening refreshments are served, which are limited to certain courses. When we go home with our bundle of mended clothes we feel that the evening has been profitably as well as enjoyably spent.

Test For Flat Feet.

The intelligent mother will, if her child evinces the slightest sign of rheumatism, take the precaution to reduce the amount of sugar in the child's diet and to cut down the supply of red meat to but twice or three times a week, substituting fish and poultry. Nowadays these pains, formerly laughed at as an evidence of growth, are also recognised as indications of a tendency to flat foot. The wise mother will do well under such circumstances to take an impression of her child's feet.

While this may be done in a playful way, she can ascertain beyond a doubt whether there is anything wrong. Thoroughly wet the soles of the child's feet and let him stand on a piece of brown paper. The imprint will tell the story. If there is no dry spot at the place where the arch should be no time should be lost in taking the child to a specialist.

GUNS TO STOP LAUGHTER

German Fire-eater Said Troops Would Shout if Crowd Laughed.

STRASSBURG, Germany, Jan. 8.—The readiness of Col. Von Reuter of the 99th Infantry Regiment to reply to the laughter of the citizens of Zabern with a raking fire from his machine guns was demonstrated in the testimony given yesterday before the court-martial sitting to try him and Lieut. Schad, a junior officer of his regiment, on charges of illegal assumption of authority.

District Commissioner Mueller of Zabern swore that when Col. Von Reuter was requested to withdraw the military patrols from the streets of the town, as they were merely irritating the populace, he curtly refused even to discuss the subject.

The colonel was then reminded that the civilians were merely standing about, to which he responded:

"I intend to prevent this standing about at any cost. I do not intend to let the people laugh in this way. If it continues I shall order the troops to shoot."

TO FIGHT QUINTON.

Vedrines Refuses Duel With Roux But Will Take Shot at President.

PARIS, Jan. 8.—A duel is in prospect between Jules Vedrines, the aviator, and Rene Quinton, president of the French Aerial League. M. Quinton said last night: "I am awaiting M. Vedrines' seconds."

According to the announcement made Tuesday Vedrines, who recently made a flight from Paris to Cairo, was ordered by M. Quinton to give satisfaction immediately to Henry Roux, his rival, who had made a similar flight, and who challenged Vedrines to a duel after Vedrines had struck him in the face.

A telegram was received by M. Quinton from Vedrines yesterday reading as follows:

"I will not fight the anti-Frenchman Roux, but will fight you as soon as I return to Paris."

Quinton affirms that he did not send an order to Vedrines to fight or return to Paris. He merely telegraphed a friend at Cairo, asking him to suggest to Vedrines that it would be well to accord the reparation demanded by Roux.

LONDON APPLE COMBINE.

Movement on Foot to Get Justice For Canadian Exporters.

LONDON, Jan. 8.—(C.A.P. Cable.) The Canadian Press learns that a movement is on foot among those concerned with the sale of Canadian apples in the London market to break down the combine which exists among the London dealers, under which Canadian apples are sold at practically any price the combine choses to fix.

Arrangements are being made on behalf of the apple shippers of New Brunswick, Ontario and British Columbia to institute an independent sale centre in London solely for Canadian apples.

Investigations are also being made into the allegations that recent consignments of apples have been tampered with wholesale at the port of entry, inferior articles of English growth being mixed in large numbers with Canadian apples.

LABOR BUREAU ASKED.

Delegation Waits on Premier Roblin Seeking Reforms.

WINNIPEG, Jan. 8.—Headed by J. V. Johnson, president of the Trades and Labor Council, and a delegation representing organized labor in Winnipeg, waited upon the members of Government yesterday morning in the interest of securing legislation of advantage to labor men. The delegation was received by Sir Rodmond Roblin, Hon. Dr. Montague and Attorney-General Howden. Among the questions presented to the Government was that of establishing a bureau of labor, amending the liquor license law regarding the granting of licenses to bartenders, the issuing of licenses to barbers, amendment to the Building Trades Act, the use of convict labor and the abolition of the requirements for a political candidate to make a deposit.

This Man Has Aspirations.

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—Al J. Jennings, once a notorious train bandit, announced here yesterday that he will attempt to come back in Oklahoma politics, this time as the Democratic candidate for governor.

"No self-respecting outlaw can associate with the political thieves of my state," said Jennings, adding that he meant the present Democratic leaders. "I'll fight 'em to the finish."

Jennings was nominated in 1913 for county attorney, but was defeated.

Drenched In Alcohol.

JERSEY CITY, N.J., Jan. 8.—That her invalid husband, Peter Rooney, had poured alcohol on her and then set her "on fire with a match," was the ante-mortem statement made by Mrs. Mary Rooney, 43 years of age, who died in a hospital here last night as the result of burns received Tuesday night. Rooney, who had been held by the police for "atrocious assault," is now in detention on the charge of murder.

Say Thaw No Menace.

CONCORD, N.H., Jan. 8.—The release on bail of Harry K. Thaw would not menace public safety, is the opinion expressed by two of his custodians yesterday at a public hearing before the commission appointed by the Federal Court to pass upon the matter of Thaw' mental condition in its relation to his liberation under bonds.

SHE HATED LOTS OF THINGS.

And Jenny Lind Abhorred the Very Name of Barnum.

In January, 1866, Mrs. Charles Moulton met Jenny Lind in France and tells her experience in her book "In the Courts of Memory."

Mrs. Moulton describes the singer as "neither handsome nor distinguished looking—in fact, quite the contrary—plain features, a pert nose, sallow skin and very yellow hair." Jenny Lind asked Mrs. Moulton to visit her on the following day, and she did so. Mrs. Moulton writes:

"I wish you could have seen her. She was dressed in a white brocade trimmed with a piece of red silk around the bottom, a red, blousy waist covered with gold beads sewed fantastically over it, perhaps odds and ends of old finery, and gold shoes! Just fancy, at 11 o'clock in the morning!

"We talked music. She hated Verdi and all he had made; she hated Rossini and all he had made; she hated the French; she hated the Americans; she abhorred the very name of Barnum, who, she said, 'exhibited me just as he did the big giant or any other of his monstrosities.'

"'But,' said I, 'you must not forget how you were idolized and appreciated in America. Even as a child I can remember how they worshiped Jenny Lind.'

"'Worshiped or not,' she answered sharply, 'I was nothing more than a show in a showman's hands. I can never forget.'"

SAVED HIS TREASURE.

Clever Ruse of a Blind Man Who Had Been Robbed.

"My great-uncle, who was blind," said a Frenchman, "once buried $4,000 in gold louis under a pear tree in his garden. His neighbor saw him do it and in the dead of night came and stole the money, replacing the earth carefully.

"Some days later my uncle brought fifty more louis down to the pear tree for burial. He soon discovered his loss, and, silently weeping, he, too, replaced the earth.

"He knew whom to suspect, and that night he called on his neighbor. He seemed thoughtful and distrait, and the neighbor asked him what oppressed his mind.

"'Well, I'll tell you,' said my great-uncle frankly, 'I have 1,000 louis hid away in a safe place, and today a tenant paid off a mortgage, and I have another 1,000 louis in cash on my hands. I don't know whether to seek out another hiding place for this money or put it where the other is. What do you advise?'

"'Why,' said the neighbor eagerly, 'if your first hiding place is safe—and you declare it to be so—I should certainly put this money there too.'

"My great-uncle said firmly that that was what he would do on the morrow. It was the wisest course. Then he took his leave.

"And when next day he went to the pear tree again there, sure enough, was his lost 1,000 louis, all put back again."—Exchange.

Landseer's Persistent Wooer.

Charles Landseer was a brother of Sir Edwin "and for some years," says the writer of "Leaves From a Life," "was the victim of the most extraordinary persecution that I should think any man ever met with. An eccentric woman fell desperately in love with him and used to pester him first with the most extravagant love letters and then by lying in wait for him whenever he left the house. Finally she issued invitations to the wedding, prepared breakfast and an enormous cake and called for poor Mr. Landseer in a carriage and pair, the horses decked out with white satin streamers and she herself dressed most gorgeously as a bride. But that was the end of the persecution. Her friends took her away, and Mr. Landseer remained a bachelor to the day of his death."

Alike In One Way.

"He's quite wealthy and prominent now," said Mrs. Starvem, "and they say he rose practically from nothing."

"Well, well!" remarked Mr. Boarder. "That's just what I rose from—at the breakfast table this morning."—London Answers.

GETS FIVE YEARS

BRANTFORD, Jan. 8. — William Murray, the colored man who ran amuck with a gun, was sentenced to five years on each of the six charges preferred against him; sentences to run concurrently. Each of the six charges against him was sufficient for a life sentence. Prisoner's counsel pleaded in extenuation that Murray was crazed with drink, otherwise nothing would have occurred. Magistrate Livingstone pointed out that that plea of drunkenness at the time of the offence was no excuse. It might take the edge off the intent to commit crime, but it was no excuse in the eyes of the law.

METHODIST TO WAIT FOR PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Changes in Basis of Union Are Not Vital and Survey Would be of General Advantage Say Committee of General Conference.

TORONTO, Jan. 8. — That the changes in the basis of church union proposed by the Presbyterian Church did not present any insuperable obstacles in the way of consummation was the decision reached last night by the Methodist General Conference special committee. The committee put itself on record as being in favor of co-operating with the other churches in a survey of church conditions throughout the Dominion. The next meeting of the general conference will be held in the Dominion Church at Ottawa on Sept. 23.

The resolution passed by the committee with regard to church union was, in part, as follows:

"While the committee are of the opinion that the proposals present some vital changes in the principle of the basis of union, and that the proposed survey would be of advantage to the future work of our church or churches; in view of the fact that our general conference and all our lower courts have taken action on the present basis, and that our general conference will meet next September, we do not feel at liberty to take further action to pass forward the proposed changes in the basis to our general conference with an expression of our opinion that they do not present any insuperable difficulties in the way of consummating union; nor should they involve any delay in reaching a final conclusion on the question of union.

"In view of the intimation contained in the letter of Rev. Principal Gandier that the information which may be made available through a church survey is desired by their committee on church union for use at the next general assembly of the Presbyterian Church, we are prepared to render all such assistance as lies in our power to secure this result, and we hereby appoint Rev. T. Albert Moore, D.D., and Rev. W. B. Creighton, D.D., as our representatives to co-operate with the Presbyterian and Congregational Churches in this work."

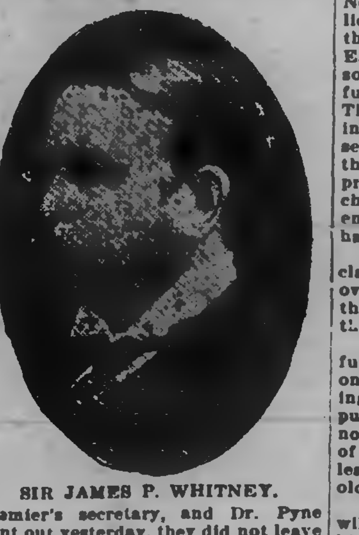
PREMIER TALKED OF THE GLORIES OF BRITISH EMPIRE

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—While the official bulletins issued from the apartments of Sir James Whitney, Premier of Ontario, yesterday continued to indicate little change in his condition, there was less of the hopeful feeling among those in attendance about his apartments at the Hotel Manhattan.

During he day Dr. R. A. Pyne said that his patient was resting comfortably. An earlier bulletin, issued during the forenoon, after an examination and consultation in which Dr. Pyne and Dr. Herman Biggs, the neurologist, participated, a bulletin was issued, indicating that the condition of the patient was still serious.

Dr. Pyne issued a bulletin last night, about nine o'clock, and about an hour later stated that the conditions were still the same. The night bulletin read: "Practically no change in Sir James Whitney's condition during the last twelve hours."

While both Horace Wallace, the Premier's secretary, and Dr. Pyne went out yesterday, they did not leave the apartments at the same time and last night Dr. Pyne remained within the hotel instead of taking a stroll outside, as he has usually done, even during the trying period following the Premier's collapse on Friday last.



SIR JAMES P. WHITNEY.

The Premier sank into a restful slumber before midnight on Tuesday, and it was hoped that he would experience a refreshing night's sleep. About four o'clock in the morning, however, he awakened and shortly thereafter it became evident he was in a more weakened condition. He lay with his eyes open, but with none of the usual light in them, and seemed for the first time to be in great pain. For two hours he lay thus, moaning continually. Just after daybreak he called one of the nurses and asked her where he was. "Still in New York, Sir James," the young woman replied.

"Oh, yes, New York," he murmured, and lay silent for a few moments.

Then, true to life conviction, he insisted for several minutes in assuring the nurse that great as was New York and the American Republic, it was a still greater and grander thing to be a citizen of the British Empire. While he was talking something of the old flashing forcefulness was manifested for the time. Then he lay back apparently cogitating on words. He was not in any sense delirious, but was evidently thinking out problems which oppressed him. Dr. Pyne told of one characteristic touch. He had apparently been reviewing some line of happenings or conduct.

"Mongrel, that's the word," he exclaimed suddenly, repeating the word over and over again to conclude with the emphatic admonition: "Be one thing or the other."

All morning Sir James rested fitfully, cognizant of all that was going on about him, and at time murmuring to himself, nearly always about public problems. Early in the afternoon came the first real rallying flash of the day. He turned to his colleague, his eyes lighting up with the old-time impetuosity.

"Ah, Pyne," he exclaimed, "this will never do," evidently alluding to his condition and his determination to "get up steam again."

DAIRYMEN IN SESSION

Eastern Ontario Association Opens at Cornwall

CORNWALL, Jan. 8. — Cornwall was invaded yesterday by a very large number of leading dairymen from all over eastern Ontario. The gathering is the thirty-seventh annual convention of the Dairymen's Association of Eastern Ontario. Sessions will continue until to-morrow afternoon.

The convention opened yesterday morning with the delivery of the president's address by G. A. Gillespie of Peterboro, who gave an interesting resume of his tenure of office and the work undertaken and accomplished since the association last met in annual convention.

Senator Derbyshire, of Brockville, and John Hyatt, of Picton, each gave a brief address.

One of the features of the day was a passage in the remarks of Mr. Hyatt.

"We are doing the wrong thing in Prince Edward county," he said, "we are selling all our cattle. We are not trying to sell them, but people are coming in and blinding our eyes with gold and taking them. This should not be. We on the farms are at the parting of the ways. Our cattle are going. What are we to do?" Mr. Hyatt argued that the farmers should not sell their dairy cattle, as there would be money in selling their milk and cream for butter and cheese. It was just as great folly to sell calves as to sell seed wheat, even if offered $40 each for them, for the calves were the seed of the cattle industry.

At the afternoon session addresses were delivered by C. F. Whitley, dairy commission staff, Ottawa; Prof. J. H. Grisdale, director experimental farm, Ottawa; by Prof. H. H. Dean, B.S.A., Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

Red Tape.

One of His Majesty's ships collided with another while clearing out of the Portsmouth docks and had her bowsprit carried away. The captain promptly notified the disaster to the Admiralty in a despatch as follows:—

"My lords, I regret to have to inform your lordships that H.M.S. —— while leaving the harbor came into collision with another vessel, and her bowsprit has been carried away.

"Awaiting instructions from your lordships, I have the honor to remain," etc.

Promptly came an Admiralty wire in reply, "Report who carried away bowsprit and where it has been placed."—London Mail.

DOES HIS DUTY TO
SUFFERERS

If you suffer from Rheumatism and don't read this advice, then the terrible disease must have robbed you of your power to be fair to yourself. Read it:

"I, John Barhorst, Justice of the Peace of McLean Township, Ft. Loramie, Ohio, do certify that after treatment by three doctors without result, I have been cured of a very bad case of Rheumatism by using two bottles of RHEUMA. It is now two years since I used the remedy, and I am still as well as ever. Previous to using RHEUMA I was a cripple, walking with crutches, and I feel it my duty to let other sufferers from Rheumatism know what it will do. The result seems almost miraculous to me. I have advised RHEUMA to at least a dozen persons, and each one speaks as highly of it as I. I will advise any one suffering from the disease if a two-cent stamp is enclosed."—May 31, 1912.

You can secure a bottle of RHEUMA for only 50 cents at the Warne Drug Co., and they say, if not as advertised, money back. It's just as good for Gout, Arthritis, Lumbago and Sciatica.

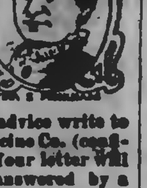
EXPERIENCE OF MOTHERHOOD

Advice to Expectant Mothers

The experience of Motherhood is a trying one to most women and marks distinctly an epoch in their lives. Not one woman in a hundred is prepared or understands how to properly care for herself. Of course nearly every woman nowadays has medical treatment at such times, but many approach the experience with an organism unfitted for the trial of strength, and when it is over her system has received a shock from which it is hard to recover. Following right upon this comes the nervous strain of caring for the child, and a distinct change in the mother results.

There is nothing more charming than a happy and healthy mother of children, and indeed child-birth under the right conditions need be no hazard to health or beauty. The unexplainable thing is that, with all the evidence of shattered nerves and broken health resulting from an unprepared condition, and with ample time in which to prepare, women will persist in going blindly to the trial.

Every woman at this time should rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism.



In many homes once childless there are now children because of the fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound makes women normal, healthy and strong.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Pink Pearls For Polly

Or, What Became of Her Birthday Gift

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"It is to be my birthday present," babbled Polly Newton as she paused with young Dr. Mills before the jeweler's window. "Father allowed me to select what I wanted, and I chose the pearls. "Aren't they lovely?"

Frank Mills looked long and earnestly at the string of delicate pink pearls, perfectly matched, lying on a bed of white velvet. He was not a judge of gems, but it happened that these particular pearls were famous, and he had heard their value discussed at his club, where it was said they were worth $10,000.

To a physician whose heart was wrenched with the bitter needs of the suffering poor in a great city it was a sinful price to pay for jewels.

"I shall wear them at my birthday party," went on Polly as they turned away from the window. "You are coming, Dr. Frank?"

"With pleasure, unless something happens. I may have a call. You know, Miss Newton, that my evenings are at the disposal of my poor people. Somebody has to look out for them."

"Oh, yes," said Polly, vaguely conscious that a slimy gray veil had dropped over the roseate happiness of the moment. "I suppose Dr. Rudd takes care of them occasionally."

"Dr. Rudd is very busy just now, and I try not to call on him to help me out with these evening cases."

"PLEASE GIVE THOSE TO YOUR POOR PEOPLE."

"Ah, but you are busy, too," she cried impulsively. "Father says you are the hardest worked man in New York, and yet you sacrifice your precious evenings to them."

"It is not such a sacrifice as you think. They need my help." He smiled down at her.

"I suppose they do," murmured Polly in a troubled tone.

When Dr. Mills left her at the door of the great house where she lived Polly had a sudden presentiment that something would happen to keep Dr. Frank away from her birthday party. Some dark eyed foreign born baby would be attacked by croup, and away Dr. Frank would go and forget all about her! She could not down the fear that clutched at her heart, the terror that perhaps he did not care for her at all and that never could she swerve him from his allegiance to his poor people.

Of course Polly was in love with Dr. Frank or she would never have cared a jot whether he came to her party or not, and she had surmised in a vague, delicious way that the earnest young physician had lost his heart to her.

There had been nothing said, no question asked or answered, no promise given, but there was a sweet, uncertain understanding between them. Benjamin Newton liked the young doctor and, poor though he was, would have sanctioned the match.

Yet the specter of the poor people came between them, and Polly felt instinctively that Dr. Frank would always be loyal to his patients in the profession he had chosen, and pretty, spoiled Polly hated to think that she would not be omnipotent in her husband's esteem.

Two days later came Polly's birthday and with it the wonderful string of pink pearls. During the day there arrived many other gifts, among them a huge box of flowers from Dr. Mills. These Polly placed in a tall cut glass vase in her own room.

"I do hope he will come," fluttered Polly's heart as she dressed for the occasion.

But Dr. Frank did not come. All through the gay evening Polly watched the door for a glimpse of his fine head and broad shoulders above the crowd of dancers, but hours passed, and still he did not come. Somebody murmured of a great fire down on the east side, and Polly guessed at once that her doctor was down there.

The thought did not bring any warmth of feeling just then. She felt angry with him and jealous of his poor people, who always stood between them.

Polly's bright spirits flagged. She was looking lovely in her simple white satin gown, with the string of pink pearls about her throat and one of Frank's pink roses tucked in her dark hair.

Other suitors might whisper how charming she appeared; other girls might regard her with envy; even her parents might tell her that never had she looked so nice. Polly yearned for the quick light of appreciation in Dr. Frank's eyes.

When the guests had all departed and Polly had kissed her father and mother and assured them that she had had the loveliest time of her life she was left alone in the great drawing room.

On every side gold framed mirrors repeated the reflection of her charming person until she appeared to be the center of a bevy of lovely girls gowned in white satin and wearing pink pearls.

"But he didn't come," whispered Polly to herself with quivering lips. "He didn't care enough. He would rather go to his poor people. I don't believe he cares for pink pearls or any other kind of jewels. He seems to like just people. I suppose he would like me just as well if I wore pink glass beads."

It was a very thoughtful Polly that lay awake with wide eyes the next morning. She wondered what was the need of these poor people that they had such a hold upon Frank Mills.

They were confessedly poor, but her father could help them. He gave thousands to help the poor. Just then there came half forgotten words to Polly's recollection:

"I was sick and in prison, and ye comforted me not."

Polly sat up in bed.

"It is the personal touch that helps almost as much as the money. If we don't visit them how can we know their needs? Dr. Frank knows their sufferings, and it is breaking his heart because he cannot help them. He does the best he can. But what am I doing?"

With this question Polly Newton hopped out of bed and dressed in a whirl of enthusiasm.

After breakfast she found her father alone in his study.

"Father, dear, I just love the pink pearls, and I know I chose them for my birthday, but do you care if I sell them and do something else with the money?"

Mr. Newton looked at her blushing downcast face, on which was its first troubled expression, and his indulgent heart took fire at once.

"What is it, Polly, girl? Keep your pearls and let me write a check for whatever you want." He dipped a pen in the ink.

Polly's fingers covered his. "No, father; it's something I want to do with the pink pearls. I want to sacrifice them for something. You don't care?"

"Not in the least, darling. I only want you to be happy."

"I am so grateful, father, dear," and Polly kissed him soberly and went away.

That afternoon found her at Dr. Mills' shabby office. He came radiantly to meet her, looking tired about the eyes and drawn about the mouth, but glad—glad to see her.

Polly sat down in a worn old chair and looked contentedly around at the book lined walls and the desk littered with papers, index files, boxes and bottles.

"It smells awfully druggy." She wrinkled her pretty nose at him; then, as if suddenly recollecting her errand, Polly drew out a leather case and laid it on the cluttered desk.

"Please give those to your poor people," she said gravely.

"Miss Newton—Polly— I can't! It is sweet of you, but they are yours and"— Polly's hand went out in an appealing gesture.

"Ah, please, please, Dr. Frank! I never knew before, and I've been thinking a lot about it. Won't you show me how to feel just as you do toward them? I am missing something out of life, something more than pearls."

A glad light came into the doctor's eyes. His first impulse was to give the jewels back to her, for he knew their great value, and he knew that they gave Polly happiness, and he loved her. His second impulse was to drop the case into the inner pocket of his coat.

"I cannot thank you for this generous gift, Polly," he said gravely, "but will it make you happy to know that the pearls will help to build a vacation home for little children and their mothers? Do you realize that your gift will save hundreds of lives and make others happy and influence still others for lasting good?

"Do you know that hundreds of mothers and sickly children, who have never seen the real country, never tasted the joys of country life and freedom from the sickening city streets, will be happy and bless you for your gift?" His voice broke suddenly.

Polly was crying softly. "I want you to tell me all about it," she quavered presently.

"I will," said Dr. Frank. And he did. But first he told her an old, old story, and he added that the pink pearls had been a barrier between them.

"Now I am on the other side of the barrier with you and your poor people," murmured Polly contentedly.

"Our poor people, dear," he corrected.

SUFFERED AGONY WITH NEURALGIA

Nothing Helped Her Until She Tried "Fruit-a-tives"

CAMPBELLVILLE, ONT., May 5th. 1913.

"I cannot speak too highly of "Fruit-a-tives". For over thirty years, I have suffered from Chronic Neuralgia and Constipation, experiencing untold agony. The Neuralgia settled in my lungs and I took bottle after bottle of medicine without relief. The doctor told me I would not get better but "Fruit-a-tives" proved that the doctor was wrong, by giving me quick relief and finally and completely curing me.

I would not have my present health if it was not for "Fruit-a-tives" and I am glad of the opportunity of giving you this letter about such a splendid remedy as "Fruit-a-tives", for the guidance of other women who may be similarly affected"

Iron Mold Stains.

Iron mold stains spread in any fabric they come in contact with in the wash. To remove them stretch the stained part over a basin nearly full of boiling water, so that the steam may penetrate the fabric, and apply with a feather a teaspoonful of salt dissolved in a dessertspoonful of lemon juice. When the marks disappear dip the material well into the hot water, afterward rinsing very thoroughly in cold water.

Proved It Was Simple.

In a registration booth in San Francisco an old colored woman had just finished registering for the first time.

"Am you shore," she asked the clerk, "dat I's done all I has to do?"

"Quite sure," replied the clerk; "you see, it's very simple."

"I'e ought to knowed it," said the old woman. "If these fool men folks been doin' it all dese years I might 'a' knowed it was a powerful simple process."—Life.

"What do you mean by I won't be an epidemic any longer?" asked the catcher.

"I'll send you to the bench," returned the umpire, "and then you won't be catchin'."—Pittsburg Press.

"I'll have to arrest you," said the policeman.

BAFFLED THE BEAR

Exciting Domestic Event In the Early Days of Vermont.

TALE OF AN ALL NIGHT SIEGE.

An Ugly Visitor That Gave Herself a Warm Reception in a Settler's Cabin, a Quick Retreat by the Inmates and a Display of Presence of Mind.

Two of the first English settlers in the town of Addison, Vt., were John Strong and Zadok Everest. Early in the fall of 1776 Strong and Everest had to go to Albany for provisions. Pioneer women seldom worried, but for some reason Molly Strong felt uneasy after her husband had gone. She and her sons got in a good supply of fuel and did the chores early.

When they came back to the cabin the baby was crying for his supper, and Mrs. Strong gave him a cup of warm milk and sat him down in front of the fireplace. She had just swung the kettle of samp from the fire when she heard a noise. Looking round, she saw the blanket that served for a door swing aside as a great bear thrust her head into the room. The children screamed, and the bear backed out in haste, but Molly Strong knew that she would return.

"Quick, children!" she said as she caught up the baby. "Climb the ladder. Let sister go up first, now Johnnie, now Frank—hurry, hurry!"

When the others were safe in the loft Mrs. Strong climbed up with the baby and drew the ladder after her. She laid it across the hole, and then she and the children sat down and waited. The floor of the loft was made of round poles laid closely together, but not fastened. It was dangerous to move about on it.

Peering down through the pole floor, they listened and watched for the bear to come back. They could hear her moving round the house, and once a big paw crashed through the oiled paper at the window hole. Finally she came to the door and, after blinking uncertainly at the fire, walked in. Two cubs followed her. The old bear presently upset the pan of milk on the table, and the cubs began to lap it up eagerly.

"I'd like a taste of that myself," Frank whispered.

"So would I," Johnnie replied. "I'm awful hungry."

Next, the bear found the pudding kettle and took a mouthful of the boiling samp. Jumping back with a cry of pain and rage, she broke the pot with a swift blow of her paw, and then sat up on her haunches, growling and whining, and began to dig the pudding out of her mouth. The cubs sat and watched her in grave wonder.

That was too much for the children, who burst into laughter. Instantly the bear gave a loud roar and rushed toward the hole with the ladder across it. Mrs. Strong gave hurried orders:

"Get me a pole, Frank, quick! Now, get another. Punch her if she tries to climb up. Be careful. Don't fall through."

The baby, awakened by the noise, began to wail, and Mrs. Strong soothed him with one hand while with the pole in the other she warded off the bear. The little girl clung crying to her mother's skirts, but the boys each had a long pole and prodded the bear through the rungs of the ladder. The big brute finally shuffled off toward the door. She pulled down the blanket and tore it into shreds; then she went out, followed by her cubs.

"She's gone!" Johnnie said. "Do you think she'll come back, mother?"

"I expect she will, son, but we can manage her—if we keep awake."

"I won't go to sleep!" groaned Johnnie. "I'm too hungry!"

Nevertheless, the silent wait in the dimly lighted loft made them all drowsy, and before the bear returned Mrs. Strong knew by their heavy breathing that the children were asleep. It was near midnight when the bear came in and renewed her efforts to reach the loft. Mrs. Strong rapped her sharply with her pole, and there was a roar that brought the boys to their feet.

Dazed and only half awake, Johnnie ran across the loft. His foot slipped into a gap between the poles, and as he fell other poles spread apart. Down he went into the room with the bear and her cubs. The bear did not see him fall, but she faced about at the noise and started toward him.

Quick as a flash, Mrs. Strong brought her pole down on the nearest cub and pinned him to the floor. The bear turned to rescue her squealing offspring, and Frank drew his brother up into the loft unharmed.

No injury to herself could have weakened the old bear's courage like the attack on her cub, and although at intervals she slouched in and out of the cabin, she made no further attempt to reach the loft. As it grew light, Mrs. Strong, watching through the chinks in the wall, saw her lead her cubs across the clearing into the woods.

As soon as she thought it safe she lowered the ladder and the family came down. They saw no more of the bear, and when Mr. Strong came home he made the cabin secure with a door made from basswood slabs and hung on wooden hinges.—Youth's Companion.

Beware of the man who does not return your blow. He neither forgives you nor allows you to forgive yourself.—George Bernard Shaw.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Jan. 7.—At the C. P. R. live stock market, offerings for sale this morning consisted of 400 cattle, 200 sheep and lambs, 925 hogs and 100 calves.

The trade in cattle today was more active, there being a better demand from both butchers and packers for supplies, which were small, and the feeling was firm. Best steers sold at $8, and the lower grades from that price down to $5 per cwt. Butchers' cows brought from $4 to $7, and bulls from $4 to $7 per cwt.

Sheep and lambs were weaker, and prices declined 50c to $1 per 100 pounds, owing to the fact that the demand was limited, as butchers in most cases have ample supplies of frozen stock on hand to supply their wants. Sales were slow; lambs at $8 to $8.50, and sheep at $4 50 to $5 per 100 pounds. The tone of the market for hogs was strong, under a good demand and small offerings, and sales of selected lots were made at $9.75 to $10 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars.

Demand for calves was fair at prices ranging from $3 to $15 each, as to size and quality.

BODY SNATCHERS.

Fate of Hare, the Last of His Odious Tribe in London.

The skeleton of the last of the body snatchers treasured in King's college hospital recalls that there must be Londoners still living who remember Hare, who, with his accomplice, Burke, first substituted murder for resurrecting corpses in order to supply subjects for the dissecting rooms. Burke, whose method of smothering the victims gave his name as a new verb to the language, was hanged on the testimony of his accomplice, for Hare turned queen's evidence and was released.

Forty years or so ago Hare was a well known figure in London streets, for Sergeant Ballantine in his "Life" describes him as one of the most persistent blind beggars on the streets about 1870. Few people recognized the cold blooded murderer in the middle aged stout man, clad in a white smock and led about by a dog. His blindness he owed to the fact that on leaving prison Hare found work in some lime kilns. The laborers discovered his history and threw him into a pit of lime. It was a terrible vengeance, for it destroyed his eyesight. And as it is not fifty years since he was a striking figure in London streets some people should recall him.—London Spectator.

Lightning Cures.

Some have had physical reasons to rejoice that they had been struck by lightning. De Quatrefages mentions the case of a telegraph employee at Strassburg who was struck senseless and remained paralyzed until the next day, but thereafter enjoyed better health than ever before. In Martinique a M. Roaldo was deprived by lightning of the use of his limbs for three hours, but, having previously been a man of weak health, was much stronger from that time on. Several authors refer to cases in which rheumatism was cured by lightning. And in this respect also trees seem to be as men. Arago saw a poplar, one of an avenue of 1,500 near Tours, which, having been struck, developed such vigor that its trunk soon far surpassed in dimensions those of all its neighbors.

He Knew the Moment.

The last time Augustus Thomas, the playwright, went to a dinner of the Hoboken Chowder club (noted for its hospitality more than its views on national questions) he was assigned to the rear of the speakers' list to "bring up the retreat from Moscow," as he put it. One of the speakers made a stab at politics, and the chairman turned to Thomas.

"I'm going to call on you next," he whispered hoarsely.

"Don't do it," begged Thomas.

"I will," insisted the chairman. "It is the proper zoological moment!"—New York Tribune.

Why the Cook Left.

There was a dead silence in the kitchen, and the mistress felt that the work was not progressing as it should. She walked quietly along the passage and found the cook reading a novelette. "Why are you wasting your time like this? What is this rubbish that keeps you from your work?" demanded the mistress. Her eyes fell on the title of the novelette. It was called "Married to the Master."—Manchester Guardian.

A Wicked Prisoner.

A perfectly formed hard shell crab about the size of the end of a person's thumb was found in an oyster shell. The crab had evidently been swallowed by the oyster, but presumably the crab proved too much for the oyster, as there was no oyster in the shell when it was opened.

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

EXPLOITS AND Y.M.C.A. WERE WINNERS IN OPENING GAMES OF JUNIOR CITY LEAGUE

Youngsters Play Fast Hockey — Scores Were 10-2 and 2-1

The Junior City League opened last night at Brock street rink with the Boston Exploits playing the Wanderers and the Alerts playing the Y.M.C.A. Both games were very fast and if the remaining contests are of the same class, there should be a good crowd on hand every Wednesday evening. The fans were out in goodly numbers last night and everyone was satisfied with the class of hockey.

The first game between the Boston Exploits and Wanderers was won by the former to the tune of 10—2, but notwithstanding the fact that the game was very interesting. The Exploits have a forward line that will take a lot of beating and had the ice been a trifle harder there is no doubt but that the score would have been larger. The shining star was Graham, the little rover from Lakefield. His fast skating soon won the following of the fans and the way he sailed into the husky Wanderers with his little bit of weight was surprising. It is to be hoped that the local junior O.H.A. management will allow no inducement to be the means of this lad severing his connections with this city. Butcher at centre was a good second, and together with Graham look to be in about the same class as the two Millans, of the Kingston Frontenacs. Most of the goals were the result of the good way in which Butcher played his position. The wings, Rose and Rogers, also played good hockey as did the defence, Phelan and Regan. Latimer in goal put up a great game and on more than one occasion saved what appeared to be scores.

For the Wanderers May and Revoy starred, the former's persistent back-checking being in great evidence. Brotherston and Revoy were accountable for the two counters.

Before the game Mayor-elect Buller gave the boys a little talk on clean sport and stated how the stars in fast company to-day all started in a similar class to the Peterboro' Junior City League. He also dropped the puck between the blades of the two centre men, thus starting the game.

The teams lined up as follows:

Exploits—10.		Wanderers—2.
	Goal
Latimer		Clarke
	R. Defence
Phelan		Revoy
	L. Defence
Regan		Guerin
	Rover
Graham		May
	Centre
Capt. Butcher		Patterson
	R. Wing
Rogers		Stewart
	L. Wing
Rose		Brotherston

Second Game.

In this fixture the Y.M.C.A. defeated the Alerts in a very hard battle, which is signified by the small score of 2—1. The ice was decidedly heavy and fast hockey, combination or good stick handling was an impossibility. The "Y" had it on their opponents as regards condition and their team play was a little better. The game was very exciting and especially in the last half, when the score was 2—0 against the Alerts and Capt. Davidson had all his men excepting the goal minder, on the forward line. The old Midland style worked well and resulted in one and nearly two tallies. The puck went in alright, but Stewart, the goal umpire, didn't have enough of the "college spirit," as the boys call it, and did not raise the flag. So sure were the Alerts that it was a counter they skated away and gave the Y.M.C.A. defence a chance to bring the puck out.

Knapman at right wing for the winners, set out a nice brand of hockey and the two goals were made by shots off his stick. Quinn and Stevenson also were in the limelight. Heath, Capt. Davidson and Lowes were the pick of the losers. The Alerts' goal minder, Legros, pulled off a few circus stops and was very steady. The teams were:

Y. M. C. A.—2.		Alerts—1.
	Goal
Hamilton		Legros
	R. Defence
R. Smyth		Davidson
	L. Defence
Cranfield		Legrendre
	Rover
Stevenson		Bartley
	Centre
Jackson		Lowes
	L. Wing
Quinn		Heath
	R. Wing
Knapman		Galvin

Fred Kelly refereed both games and performed his duties to the satisfaction of everyone.

PETES WILL HAVE STRONG TEAM AGAINST OSHAWA

PETTS WILL HAVE.

The fans will have an opportunity to size up the Intermediates at full strength tomorrow night, when they lineup against the fast Oshawa team at Brock Street Rink.

In the future, a big effort will be made to start the teams away sharp at 8.15 as there is no real excuse for a late face-off. All the teams in this district are due here at 5.30.

The Oshawa seven have started off well with two wins. Their second victory was against Cobourg and there was nothing uncertain about the manner in which they put away their opponents.

WALTER MILLER FOR THE SENATORS

Montreal, Jan. 8.—Walter Miller, of the Wanderers Hockey Club, has been sold to Ottawa. He was wanted by two of the clubs in the Maritime League, and Ottawa refused to waive claim on him, so that it is up to the club from the capital to purchase his contract, which they have done. The terms are not made public. Miller will join the Ottawa team at once.

DENISON HOME.

Fred Denison has returned to the city and will be available for the line-up to-morrow night against Oshawa.

Death of Dr. J. D. Balfour.

LONDON, Jan. 8.—Dr. J. D. Balfour, one of London's best known doctors, died at six o'clock yesterday morning of pneumonia. Exposure to Saturday night's storm is thought to have brought on his illness. He was 57 years of age, and had practiced here for many years. He was former superintendent of Victoria Hospital, and a lecturer at Western University, where he received his medical education. He leaves a wife and family of four, two of them grown up.

Smallpox Hits U. S. Sailors.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Jan. 8.—The third death from smallpox among men exposed on the battleship Ohio, which took the the infection on the recent Mediterranean cruise, was recorded here yesterday. It was that of a coal-passer named Ackerman. He died in quarantine.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8. — Thirty-two more cases of smallpox were reported from Guantanamo naval station among sailors exposed on the battleship Ohio. The station has been quarantined.

Counterfeiters Guilty.

Mrs. Sutherland pleaded not guilty. The men said that they came here from Hamilton.

EGGS BY THE YARD.

Korea Also Produces Oysters That Weigh Ten Pounds Each.

While in the orient a correspondent had occasion to call on friends who lived near Seoul, the principal city of Korea. He tells the following story:

One morning my hostess, while giving orders for the necessary things from the market for the day, mentioned four yards of eggs. I accompanied the steward that day on his marketing trip, and when the eggs were asked for the grocer reached down in a barrel and brought out the end of a large straw rope. He measured off the required length on the counter, just as a dry goods store clerk would measure off cloth, rolled it up and put it in the basket without a smile. The eggs were inside of this hollow straw rope, with a string tied on the outside of it between each egg. This effectually protected the eggs from being broken while handling.

Another day my hostess ordered two "small" oysters for dinner. This order caused me to wonder a little, for I knew that there would be seven to dine, besides the servants, but when the oysters arrived all was explained, for one weighed four and a half pounds, and the other five pounds. On inquiry I was informed that some of the oysters on the northern side of Korea weigh as much as ten pounds.—Christian Science Monitor.

Bathing and Bellowing.

Primitive man boiled his water with hot stones. That was not the only use he made of them, at any rate, if he was a Scythian. The Scythian practice described by Herodotus has been claimed by some as the first recorded case of smoking. Having spoken of a kind of hemp that grew in the country, Herodotus proceeds: "Now, the Scythians, taking the seed of this hemp, go into their tents and then throw the seed upon the stones heated white hot. As it is thrown on it is burnt into smoke, producing so much that no Greek vapor bath could surpass it. And the Scythians, delighting in it, bellow. This takes the place of washing for them." It seems as though they had discovered the Turkish bath and the cigarette.

The Widow's Dower.

It is certain that "dower," the estate for life which the widow acquires at her husband's death, was not known among the early Saxons. In the laws of King Edmund the widow is directed to be supported wholly out of the personal estate. Dower is generally ascribed to the Normans, but it was first introduced into the feudal system by Emperor Frederick II., who was contemporary with the English Henry III., about 1250.

FOE OF THE FLYING FISH.

Albacore Actually Jump Out of the Water to Catch Them.

The home of the flying fish is along the path of the north Atlantic trade winds. In "Memories of the Sea" Admiral Fitzgerald of the English navy says that in sailing down the trades you find the sea fairly alive with these fish, which are relentlessly pursued by the albacore, the largest of the mackerel family.

From my commanding position at the end of the jib boom I could look straight down on the strange scene. There was a shoal of some dozen albacore swimming along ahead of the ship. Sometimes one or two of them would dart off on either bow or right ahead for thirty or forty yards and then drop back again until they were straight under where I was sitting. The ship was going about seven knots. As it sailed along the flying fish would rise out of the water before it, spread their wings and soar away to the right or left. Often I could see exactly what happened. As the flying fish rose one of the albacore darted off in pursuit and kept almost underneath him until he dropped into the water again; then there was a splash like the rise of a salmon, and the flying fish flew no more.

But the albacore did not always wait for the flying fish to touch the water. On several occasions I saw them actually take their prey in the air by making a huge jump out of the water.

There's nothing which so undeceives a man as to a woman's virtues as to discover that she has an overweening fondness for fried onions.

One Reason.

Frederick Townsend Martin, writer and social leader, was asked at a dinner in New York if he could account for the enormous number of bachelors.

Mr Martin stroked his mustache and smiled.

Embarrassing.

"Mamma," said Mary, eight years old, "I'm glad I'm not a boy."

WHAT THEY SAY OF THE LITTLE DAMOZEL

To a well filled house at the Avenue Theatre last night, Lawrence Brough and his company of English players presented Moncton Hoffe's comedy, "The Little Damoezl" which comes to The Grand next Wednesday, Jan. 14th.

It is a very lovable human little damozel, as played by Miss Olga Esme, assured that she is pretty enough to deserve a rich husband, flattered at the prospect of being a married person, outraged in her vanity at being jilted by Capt. Partington, ready to accept consolation in the offer of Recklaw Poole to marry her, happy as a child with her irresponsible husband whom she learns to love, and finally outraged in her affections at learning that her husband had accepted money from Partington to marry her out of his way. The little child-hearted damozel became a woman in an instant in that dramatic moment at the close of the second act.

As Recklaw Poole, Mr. Lawrence Brough gave a finished presentation of that frail but happy-go-lucky hero who at the close tried to make amends in his own peculiar way to the little damozel of the Cafe Angelique, and brought back her happiness and his.

The Bohemian atmosphere of the setting gives much opportunity for the unusual. The play owes much to the splendid support of that sterling actor and actress, Alfred Hemming and Amy Singleton, who as Walter Angel, proprietor of the Cafe Angelique, (where the little damozel is employed as a harpist), and as Mamma Bartholdy, the leader of the cafe orchestra, gave finished presentations of character work. Rule Pyott, as Hon. Fitzroy Locke, had an entertaining part which he made the most of, contributing greatly to the humor of the occasion.

There are many clever epigrams in the play, one of the most telling being Poole's remark at the wine supper, "Whenever I see three men drinking champagne together, I think one of them is being taken in by the others."

REFERENDUM ASKED FOR

On the Naval Issue — Grain Growers Important Resolutions

BRANDON, Man., Jan. 8. — The eleventh annual grain growers' convention convened here yesterday. The morning session handled the president's and secretary's report. Inter-municipal hail insurance raised the most discussion. The Saskatchewan Act was criticised, and officials were proposed to the projected Manitoba bill which will come before the present session of Parliament.

Among the more important resolutions to come up are: "Whereas, the policy of the political parties favors the spending of millions of the peoples' money on a navy; resolved, that in the opinion of this convention, before this expenditure is authorized by Parliament it should be submitted to the people through a referendum.

"That in the opinion of this association the money that is asked to build naval vessels might better be applied to the establishing of a merchant fleet, to give relief to the Canadian people from the extortion of the steamship combine."

Hudson Bay Railway, tax exemptions to manufacturers and electoral corruption will also come up.

Yes, he said he didn't realize what hard times meant until he saw the grieved look on his wife's face when she discovered she could get no money to go January bargain hunting.

SANITARY INSPECTOR ADDRESSES THE NURSES

The Graduate Nurses Association held their regular monthly meeting in the physicians' board room of the Public Library yesterday afternoon. Miss Bertha M. Mowry occupied the chair. Beside the regular routine of business, the meeting was marked by the following address by Mr. Spence, the local Sanitary Inspector:

The efforts of Public Health administered are not limited merely to the prevention of death or even of disease, but embrace the promotion of health, and to secure those conditions of the health of a community that shall enable it to display the utmost activity of its physical and intellectual energies. It is the duty of the state and of local authorities to concert the public measures requisite in order to obtain these desiderata and to enforce them by statute and municipal law for the protection of the community. These measures are embraced as a whole in the modern term "sanitation."

"To Be Well"

"Life is not to live, but to be well," said Martial, who lived in the first century, when Rome was in the full enjoyment of her aqueducts, baths, gymnasia, public lavatories, pavements, scavenging system, and sanitary laws, and it is a question whether Peterboro would compare favorably as regards sanitation with the Rome of twenty centuries ago.

It is said that most of the diseases prevalent among mankind are preventable, and the question naturally arises in our minds, "if preventable, why not prevented?" In reply, it may be said that apathy and ignorance on the part of the public are mainly responsible, and until the people wake up to the fact that without their assistance our efforts to stamp out contagion will not avail much, little advance can be made.

Peterboro Lowest Death Rate

Like the health of the individual, the health of the community is mainly measured by negative results, the minimum mortality and morbidity, that is the fewer deaths and the fewer sufferers from disease per thousand per annum, of the population, sex, age and other factors, being equal, the healthier the community. And if we take this view we may well congratulate ourselves on the fact that Peterboro for the past year, shows the lowest death rate of any of the cities of Ontario. But the infant death rate is a more reliable standard and of this I shall have more to say later on. To revert to the former statement of Peterboro's position in the annual death rate, it would be interesting to compute what it costs us in cold cash for this honor. Of course you need not take the following figures seriously, but they will set us thinking nevertheless.

Some Interesting Figures

There are, I believe, somewhere about 28 doctors and 8 druggists in the city, and putting their average annual income at the very moderate figure of $2,000 this gives us a sum of $72,000. There are also about 30 nurses whose earnings must be considered, which with other expenditures, one cannot detail on the spur of the moment added to the aforementioned sum, would probably give us a total amount of $100,000. Taking the population at 20,000 this means that we are spending about five dollars per head per annum.

Infant Mortality

It has been truly said that one of the best tests of the sanitary state of a district, is its infant death rate, first because the statistics being calculated upon the births are not depended upon what may be a mistaken estimate of the population and secondly because infants are as a rule, more susceptible to disease that specially arise from unsanitary surroundings. I wish I could give reliable statistics from this standpoint, because whenever I read an obituary notice, especially of a child I feel a personal interest, I was almost going to say, responsibility, in the sad intelligence.

There were, I think, about 280 deaths altogether during the past year in this city; of this number 84 or nearly 30 per cent. were of children 5 years old, or under, and of these 84, 33 or nearly 40 per cent. were stillborn, or died at birth. I don't know how this compares with other cities, but it seems an appalling number of little lives needlessly nipped in the bud—a veritable slaughter of the innocents.

More Light Needed

Another point that should be more generally known by the public, is the value of light in our homes, and some standard should be set by law as to the amount of light necessary when issuing a building permit. Light is stimulant, darkness sedative. It may be generally stated that the absence of light directly causes in the healthy depression of mental and vital activity, leading to a general debilitated condition and in the convalescent, delays recovery bodily and mentally.

Mr. Spence was tendered a hearty vote of thanks to which he briefly replied.

At a recent meeting Miss Howson resigned as secretary treasurer of the Association, and her position was taken by Miss M. Shaver. Miss Brown was appointed recording secretary. The next meeting Dr. Neal will address.

TO MEET IN TORONTO

Prison Reform Commission Will Hear Labor Men

KINGSTON, Jan. 8—The taking of local evidence in the Kingston Penitentiary probe has been concluded, the last of the testimony being secured yesterday afternoon when the commission adjourned to meet in Toronto, Jan. 16, in the Parliament Buildings.

A session is being held at Toronto so that the members of the commission can meet prominent labor men and discuss labor questions at the prison. James Simpson, of Toronto, and Patrick Draper, of Ottawa, have been mentioned as among those who will be called as witnesses.

In addition to securing the evidence of prominent labor men while in Toronto, the commission will meet the members of the parole board of the penitentiary in order to get evidence in regard to the working of the parole system and get views of the members on prison reform.

REDUCE SIZE OF THE SHIPS

This Would Cut Down Naval Race Expenditure.

LONDON, Jan. 8.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Rt. Hon. C. H. Hobhouse, M.P., whose speech last night on the naval question was looked forward to with considerable interest, said that while he himself wasn't a naval expert, he had ample opportunity of consultation with those who were. There was no doubt in his mind that much of the increases in our armaments were due to the creation by England of greater ships than she had ever possessed before.

If it were possible to reduce the size, power and cost of those ships, he was informed by naval officials that past history and precent experience would lead to other nations reducing the proportionate size of their ships, and if that, which was not a Utopian hope, came true we should have at once in our power the way to reduce these costly armaments without affecting our margin of safety.

VICTIM'S BODY FOUND.

Man Is Arrested as Slayer of Syrian Peddler at Sheet Harbor, N.S.

HALIFAX, N.S., Jan. 8.—Charles Asaff, a Syrian peddler, was murdered and his body buried within a few hundred yards of the house in which he lodged at Sheet Harbor on the night of Dec. 9.

The body was found last night. There was an ugly gash in the head and the body was otherwise badly battered. A searching party found the body and an inquest was held before the coroner at Sheet Harbor, the jury returning a verdict that the deceased came to his death from an axe wound, caused by a person or persons unknown. The body is being brought to Halifax and an autopsy will be held here.

Detective Hanrahan and Chief County Constable Umlah are on the way to Halifax with Edward Cook in custody. On arrival here he will be charged by the crown prosecutor with the murder of Asaff.

Drastic License Changes.

QUEBEC, Jan. 8.—Drastic amendments to the license law were urged by a large temperance delegation, which was received in private by the Prime Minister yesterday morning. Sir Lomer Gouin, in replying to the delegation, made it clear that the licensing bill, as was forecasted some weeks ago, will provide for the reduction of hotel and restaurant licenses in Montreal to 350 (as was recommended by the commission on licensing). The present number of hotel and restaurant licenses in Montreal is 473.

Parcel Post Soon.

OTTAWA, Jan. 8. — Hon. L. P. Pelletier, Postmaster-General, will return to Ottawa at noon to-day. It is understood that the negotiations between the Department and the railway companies are nearly completed, and an announcement is looked for at a very early date, first as to the price to be paid the railways for carrying the mails with the new parcel post in operation, and, second, as to the parcel post rates themselves.

Wilson's Message on Trusts.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—When President Wilson returns to Washington early next week he will find Attorney-General McReynolds prepared to take up in detail all the proposed "trust legislation" which has appeared in the form of bills in Congress during the last nine months.

That President Wilson's special message on the trust question will be delivered very soon after Congress convenes next week is the general belief in official circles.

CHAMBERLAIN TO RETIRE.

Venerable Statesman Will Not Again Run For Commons.

BIRMINGHAM, Eng., Jan. 8.—Joseph Chamberlain, the venerable British statesman, has decided to retire from Parliament at the next general election, after serving as a member of the House of Commons since 1876, during all of which time he has represented Birmingham.

In a letter, addressed yesterday to the president of the Unionist Association of Birmingham, Mr. Chamberlain said:—

"Before leaving for the south of France I think I ought to communicate to you the decision at which I have arrived, to retire from Parliament at the next general election. I have not come to this decision without many regrets at the severance of a connection which has already lasted over 37 years and has been marked on the part of my constituents by evergrowing confidence and support, but I cannot hope again to do my work in Parliament, and I feel that our city and the constituency of West Birmingham need the services of a younger man, who will take an active part in the Parliamentary struggle and help you to maintain the supremacy of the Unionist cause in Birmingham.

RIDYARD REMANDED TO JAIL IN FORT WILLIAM

He Made Unsuccessful Attempt to Evade the Police —Faces Bigamy Charge

The Norwood Register adds the following to the item in The Review, relative to arrest of Thos. Ridyard, on the charge of bigamy:

Local people were astounded to learn during the week that Thomas Ridyard, a recent resident of this place, for over a year, had been arrested on a charge of bigamy.

Ridyard, who had been engaged in the baking business here, had been keeping company for several months with a most respected lady of the village, the daughter of Mr. Wm. Rogers, sexton of the Methodist Church. A few weeks ago Ridyard left for Chapleau, where he had secured a position as baker. He sent a ticket to Miss Rogers, requesting her to come to him at once, as be was too busy to come to her, so that they might be married.

On Tuesday of last week she left for Chapleau, and on Wednesday morning at seven o'clock they were married in that town.

Previous to this no inkling of Ridyard already being a married man was known to Norwood people, but on Wednesday night Rev. Mr. Copeland was 'phoned from Peterboro that Ridyard had a wife and three small children in England. Mr. Copeland at once made Mr. Rogers cognizant of the situation. On Thursday morning Mr. Rogers went to Peterboro and being assured by relatives of Ridyard there that the information received the previous night was all too true, had the Chief of Police at Peterboro wire the Chief at Chapleau. Mr. Rogers then proceeded to that place himself by the first train, and finding his daughter bad been married at Chapleau, he charged Ridyard with his deception.

Mr. Rogers met Ridyard and his daughter in the Y. M. C. A. dining room, at Chapleau. At first the man denied having a wife and family, but finally admitted that he was a married man. He endeavored to make his escape and took a train for Sudbury, hoping to cross the line into the States. The Chief of Police, it seems, did not receive the message from Peterboro without some delay. However word was sent to Sudbury and the police there effected Ridyard's arrest, and took him back to Chapleau. Mr. Rogers and his daughter then returned to Norwood, leaving Ridyard in the hands of the law.

The prisoner's preliminary hearing took place at Chapleau on Saturday, and he was remanded to jail at Fort William. The case will in all probability be heard at the spring assizes.

Was Choir Leader

Ridyard, who is an Englishman, and a baker by trade, came to Norwood, from Peterboro in the early fall of 1912, to work for W. H. Tucker & Bro. After being employed with Messrs. Tucker for a short time, during which interval he proved himself to be a good tradesman, he, together with a brother from Peterboro, secured a lease of the bakery business for a year. The latter Ridyard brother, however, only remained a few months and returned to Peterboro, the first named continuing the business alone. For a few months Ridyard acted as choir leader in the Methodist Church.

Very much symapthy is felt by the whole community for the young lady, who has been so cruelly deceived.

THE PREMIER LOOKS BETTER

But Little or No Change is Reported To-day

NEW YORK, Jan. 9.—In the course of a conversation after this morning's bulletin was issued, Dr. Pyne said unless complications occured to bring the Premier's illness to a sudden conclusion Sir James would have to be carefully watched for a long time.

Probably before the time came for our sending out notices for the opening of the legislature, he would be able to form a decision as to the probable outcome of the Premier's illness.

Sir James after a restless evening, dropped off into a sound sleep about eleven o'clock last night and did not wake until nearly five this morning. He took his nourishment upon awakening, and asked for Lady Whitney, but learning she was asleep, did not ask for her again for several hours. All of Sir James' party got a sound rest last night and have recovered from their nervousness about the patient. The patient's lapses into delirium which Dr. Pyne says are not a serious symptom, were few and brief this morning and a word from Lady Whitney was always sufficient to recall him. When his wife entered the room Sir James greeted her affectionately and expressed pleasure on hearing she had enjoyed a good night's rest. According to reports the Premier looked better than at any time since his collapse. His cheeks had filled out, his color was good and his eyes brighter. His appetite was excellent.

MURRAY ST. CHURCH.

Next Sunday is to be a day of great interest at Murray St. Baptist Church. It has been arranged to celebrate the seventh anniversary of the coming of the present pastor by having as the special preacher, Rev. Thos. B. Brown, of Edmonton, Alberta. During the years of Mr. Webb's pastorate in Montreal he and Mr. Brown were most closely associated and this being known by the people of Murray St. it was arranged without the knowledge of their pastor to bring his friend to the city for this occasion.

Mr. Brown is a preacher of rare gifts and will be heard by many who have been anxious for such an opportunity since hearing of him after his one visit to Peterborough some time ago.

WANT RURAL MAIL ROUTE EXTENDED

Request of Ennismore People Will Receive Consideration

The people of Ennismore have so prized the rural mail route recently established there, that they are asking for an extension. Negotiations to this end have been under way between the Department and Mr. Burnham, who has been notified that a departmental agent will be sent here at once in response to his request to look into the matter.

It is rumored that John Clarkson of Lakehurst, Charles E. Horton, of Peterboro, and Dan Whetung Jr., of Curve lake, being the lowest tenderers have secured the Lakefield Lakehurst route, the fourth line of Smith route and the Curve lake route.

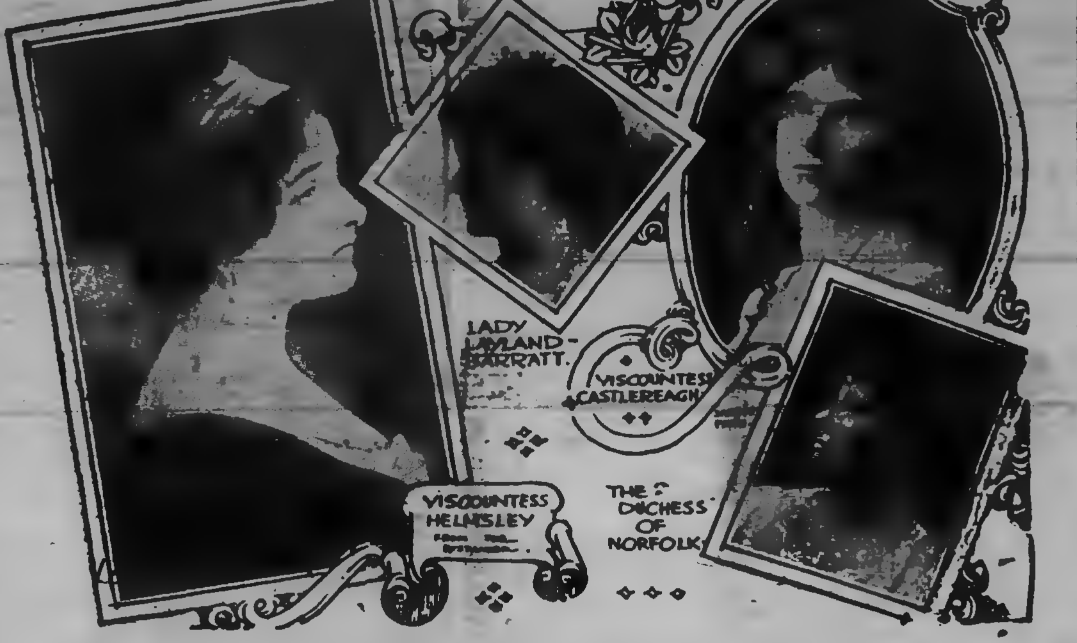
ENGLISH SOCIETY LEADERS WHO WILL BOYCOTT TANGO.



English society hostesses are beginning an earnest boycott of the tango in the hope that they may eliminate it from the polite ballroom.

The Gentlewoman publishes a series of opinions.

Lady Layland-Barratt says:—

"It is an immodest and suggestive dance and altogether impossible for any girl of refinement and modesty."

The Duchess of Norfolk says:—

"It is foreign to English nature and ideals."

Viscountess Castlereagh calls it "just a passing craze."

Viscountess Templeton says:—

"I am happy to say I never have seen the tango danced, and I hope I never may see it."

Viscountess Hensley says:—

"I think it a great pity that the old Spanish dance of the tango, quite graceful in its original form, should in the course of its indirect introduction to our country have acquired so many 'nigger dance' characteristics as are now associated with it."

The Countess of Dundonald says:—

"I think the usual dances much more suitable to English ballrooms."

The Countess of Coventry says:—

"I do not think it desirable that the tango should be danced at social functions."

INAUGURAL MEETING BOARD OF EDUCATION

Dr. M. A. Morrison is Returned as Chairman by Unanimous Vote

THE COMMITTEES

Col. Miller Complains That Press Does Not Give Full Reports

Dr. Morrison was re-elected chairman of the Board of Education, at the inaugural meeting, held last night. In thanking the members for the honor, Dr. Morrison also made some statements in which he held that the Board had not been extravagant, as had been complained about by the public and members of the city council.

In 1908 he pointed out the rate for Public Schools was 4 and 62-100. In 1913, it was 5 and 68-100. The rate for the Collegiate was 54-100 in 1908 and 2 and 6-100 in 1913. This made a total increase of 1 and 58-100 in five years.

In 1908 the tax rate for the city was 17 mills and last year it was 25 mills.

Increased Attendance

The Public School attendance for 1908 was 1879, while the attendance last year was 2,252, an increase of 473 in five years. The teaching staff on the Public Schools numbered 58 in 1907, but 72 teachers had to be paid last year.

Increase in Salaries

The amount of salaries paid out in 1908 was $31,578.70, while salaries paid out for last year amounted to $50,048.00. The increase in the real estate of the schools in the five years is $287,000. The land now owned by the Board is 22 acres, an increase of 18 acres in five years.

Dr. Morrison held that the Board of Education is by no means responsible for the increase in taxation, as claimed by a few members of the council and some of the public. The work of the Board had been approved of by the council.

Col. Miller complained that the press had not reported the meetings fully, thereby not assisting the Board as well as might be done.

Dr. Morrison said the press had been fairly good and had given fair reports of the work of the Board.

Col. Miller maintained that owing to the lack of publicity, the Board was experiencing considerable difficulty.

The Committees

It was moved by Dr. Burnham, seconded by J. J. Turner, Jr., that Messrs. Hill, Crane, Ackerman, Miller be appointed to strike the standing committees for the year. Dr. Burnham was also appointed to this committee.

The various committees are:

Finance—Vincent Eastwood chairman, Dr. Burnham, L. M. Hayes, K.C., and J. J. Turner, Jr.

Property—B. F. Ackerman, chairman, W. H. Hill, Col. Miller, J. J. Turner Jr., and J. H. Smith.

Supervision—John Crane, chairman, W. H. Hill, Dr. Burnham and L. M. Hayes K.C.

Com. of Appointments—The board as a whole with W. H. Hill, chairman.

Building Committee—B. F. Ackerman, chairman, Col. Miller, J. J. Turner, and John Crane.

Dr. Morrison was re-elected chairman by ballot, the vote being unanimous.

CHARGE WAS DISMISSED

Manager of Royal Theatre Said Aisles Were Clear

One Spectator Could Not Say Because of Mountainous Hats

"As a matter of fact the Chief and his officers are over-sensitive, and when their dignity is offended, they try like babies to get even," thus said Daniel O'Connell this morning at Police Court, during the case of Herbert Clayton, charged with allowing his moving picture theatre, The Royal, to be over-crowded by the passages being blocked on Wednesday evening about half past eight. The case was dismissed.

Mr. O'Connell acted for the defendant who pleaded not guilty.

Constable Hayward the first witness, described how he had gone into the show on Wednesday evening. He spoke to Mr. Clayton about the place being over-crowded. He could not see any empty seats. After speaking to the defendant, Mr. Clayton went down to the front of the theatre and announced to the audience that the policeman said the house was overcrowded. This caused cheering and much handclapping. While this was on he, the constable started to leave. Just as he got to the door Clayton shouted after, saying how will this do. Then followed more cheering and handclapping. Clayton then asked him if he wanted a seat, and he, (the officer) told him he should report him. Clayton told him if he came there any more he would report him and that the next time he came he was to buy a ticket. This caused more laughter from the audience of the theatre.

Questioned by Mr. O'Connell, witness admitted having been in the show a number of times. He had spent the afternoon there with his wife, and child. He had not been requested to pay by Mr. Clayton.

Wm. Gray, a spectator of the affair, expressed himself that in all probability the aisle was blocked by the people owing to the fact that it takes considerable time for the ushers to seat them when they came in.

He heard the officer spoken to by Clayton.

Chas. Simons, called, said he could not see whether the aisles were crowded or not, as three ladies sitting in front of him had hats a yard high.

Fred Pearce, a witness for the prosecution, said that the house was not over-crowded, while he was there, which was about two hours, from eight to ten o'clock.

Manager Clayton claimed he had always tried to do his best to keep his aisles clear and that on this particular night they were clear. The people often stand for a minute or two, waiting for the ushers.

Magistrate Dumble impressed upon the defendant the awful results which might follow an alarm and rush to the exits. His Worship also said he would deal severely in the event of another case.

LIFE UNDERWRITERS HOLD ANNUAL BANQUET

T. W. Robinson is Elected President and E. B. Boswell, Secretary Treasurer

Between twenty and twenty-five members of the Life Underwriters' Association, Peterboro district, met at the festive board, at the Oriental Hotel last night and had a jolly time together.

It was the annual gathering and after close attention had been given to the splendid dinner, the gathering heard a very fine address given by Mr. A. J. Meiklejohn B.A., of Ottawa, vice president of the Dominion Association.

Officers were elected as follows:
President—T. W. Robinson.
1st Vice Pres.—R. F. Sedgwick.
2nd Vice Pres.—B. A. Ferguson.
Sec. Treas.—E. B. Boswell.
Executive Com.—Messrs. Walton Macklin, Patterson, Oke and Widdess, Lindsay.

The gentlemen present were: F. F. Baylis, F. A. Dainton, A. W. Wray, H. W. Gray, Thos. Mark, C. H. Patterson, W. A. Haslam, D. H. Moore, E. B. Boswell, W. Gordon Hall, A. J. Meiklejohn, R. F. Sedgwick, F. H. Cornelius, J. L. Allin, R. Brown, W. E. Moyns, C. J. Alcock, P. A. Ferguson, J. I. Cameron, W. H. Taylor, F. Driscoll.

Besides the guest of the evening, Messrs. Allin, Ferguson, Macklam, Moore and the officers gave short addresses.

Mr. Sedgwick referred to the spirit of harmony and co-operation that had marked the progress of the Association and also of the honor won by the Association, in securing the prize of $35 in gold, in the membership competition.

Mr. Ferguson of Lindsay, said that much concentration and hard work had been given by the older members and that the younger members, he felt sure, were very grateful. The Association linked the members in one great cause. Life insurance was a profession, worthy of the name.

Mr. Boswell said insurance was one of the best advantages a man could receive. People should not be without it, yet it was hard to convince them.

Mr. Meiklejohn told of his own experiences, and he brought out many pointers to help the younger men. He had a stock of entertaining stories and altogether his address was very much enjoyed. He gave the members of the Association an invitation to attend the Dominion Convention, in Halifax this summer.

A vote of thanks was extended to the visitor on motion of Messrs. Ferguson and Moore, and before the gathering dispersed the thanks of the Association was expressed to Mr. McDonough, for his kindness and consideration. Mr. McDonough replied that it was no trouble and that he was pleased to have the honor of entertaining the Association.

F. R. SEDGWICK

He was elevated to 1st Vice-President of the Life Underwriters' Association.

PETERBOROUGH, FRIDAY, JAN. 9, 1914.

POLITICAL PEDANTS.

THE STAR OF TORONTO gives us a few texts for a political sermon, which we propose to deal with. Speaking of the Naval Bill it says:

"It is no reproach to a free Parliament that it declined to vote away $35,000,000 in the dark." Does The Star really believe that the dear, simple Senate was not aware of what the $35,000,000 was for? It was an emergency contribution and this very word "emergency" qualified it, so that no one who wanted to understand could mistake it for a permanent policy. Why cavil over a permanent policy? What Mr. Borden was anxious about was to have a PRACTICAL policy for the time being. He had only been in power a few months and he found the permanent policy of the Laurier administration in a wretched mess. Great Britain was in danger—or even if you say she was only supposed to be in danger that does not get rid of the fact of an emergency, it is very easy to say after a cloud has blown over, "I told you it would." While the cloud hung over Britain the Government of Canada could not but proffer some assistance. What assistance had they to offer? Should Mr. Borden have offered the loan of the Canadian "navy" to Mr. Churchill? What good would the Niobe and the Rainbow have been in the North Sea? What intelligent navy man would have risked his life in those ships in war time? It would not be heroism but suicide to get within firing range with either of these vessels in a real sea fight.

It is clear as daylight and there is no darkness at all to us as to the use or the meaning of the Borden contribution.

The Star makes a candid admission when it says, "At present our relations with the British Empire rests upon two things—Canadian Self-Government and British Sentiment," and adds, "that system has worked admirably." It might also have added "and cheaply too!" The Star has always been weak in the knees over self-government. "Autonomy" is the King Charles' head of all its disquisitions upon the naval question. Downing Street is its pet aversion. It is always imagining itself back in the days of Dr. Johnson. Or confusing George the Third with George the Fifth, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier with George Washington.

The Star says: "The American colonies were lost by pedantry." If Canada is lost to the Empire by pedantry it will not be the pedantry of Downing Street but of such pedants as The Toronto Star. What is more pedantic, not to say ridiculous, than to be everlastingly comparing the present situation with the times of American separation? There is no comparison whatever. The boot is on the other leg. Canada has more to fear from her separation from the Empire than Great Britain has. So far as taxation is concerned Canada is taxing the working-man of the Mother Country heavily every year for the defence of Canadian coasts and Commerce. Separation for Canada at the present time means either helpless isolation or annexation by the United States. If the Star could only forget for a moment its "Autonomy" pedantry and grasp at this plain truth it would begin to talk common sense.

CONSERVING OUR BEEF.

THE GLOBE on Monday contained an editorial on the storage of Canadian beef cattle, which ought to be digested by all farmers who are at present complaining that they cannot make their farms pay. We have already referred to the wanton destruction of calves as one of the chief causes of the shortage, and we are glad to find the Globe emphasizing the matter and insisting upon farmers preserving the young life of our cattle.

Even the Globe admits that here is a case where a little protection might be a good thing. "The removal of the custom duty on live cattle passing from Canada into the States has had the effect of drawing across the border all the beef cattle that this country has to spare, and more. From the standpoint of low cost of living this is little short of a calamity; from the standpoint of the farmer's prosperity it is worse," says The Globe. "If it were possible to retain beef cattle in Canada until they are three years old such a policy would mean additional untold millions of dollars to the farmers in the way of profits. A beef animal will double its value between one and two years old, and will add fifty per cent. more to its value between two and three. As many young cattle as practicable should be kept in the country till they are three, and none should be exported under two."

It should be possible to retain these beef cattle, if we are going to govern the country and save farmers from themselves, and save our own beef from fattening other people and helping to reduce the high cost of living in the States at the expense of increasing our own.

The Globe recommends the ranching of cattle on the "wild lands" that do not lend themselves to farming. "There are millions of acres of such lands in the "granite" region—including the Algona district, Parry Sound, Nipissing, Muskoka, Haliburton, and the northern parts of the counties of Victoria, Peterborough, Hastings, Addington, and Frontenac. This region is abundantly watered; the soil, wherever it occurs, is fertile; the climate is bracing in both summer and winter, and experience has shown that cattle left largely to their own devices for shelter and water may be wintered in good condition if they are well supplied with food. They are quite as able to stand the Laurentian winter, except in the matter of fodder and shelter, as the deer or the moose."

The chief difficulty in the wintering of these beasts. Most farmers have not the stable space. But cattle will endure more hard weather than one might suppose. Not many years ago many farmers kept their cattle outside the whole winter through. But in the early days the country was thickly wooded and was consequently much warmer than it is to-day in the winter months. The districts referred to are denuded of this protection. The tall pine with its perennial foliage made a comfortable cloak in the winter and a cool shade in the summer. In their place have sprung up birch and "iron" trees which are a poor substitute.

RIGHT HON. JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN.

MR. JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN, the beloved, as well as much hated, "Joe of Brumagum," has at last definitely severed his connection with Parliament and relinquished all claim to being a politician. Of course Mr. Chamberlain has for some time been in enforced retirement owing to his sudden and tragic break-down a few years ago. But as he retained his seat for West Birmingham and once in a while wrote a letter to a candidate at a by-election, he was still regarded as a force or dictator in politics and the Tariff Reform movement has all along looked to him as at least the figure-head.

There is perhaps no sadder figure in British politics than the Birmingham champion disappearing as he did from the arena in the thick of the battle. Scarcely had he celebrated his seventieth birthday amid a shower of honors from friends and foes and the overwhelming admiration of the citizens of Birmingham, when he was stricken down and no word was heard of him for months. Doubtless the responsibility and the suspense of the Boer war, which fell largely upon his shoulders, did much to wear him out, and for him to take up a whirlwind campaign against Free Trade was a task which would have tested the endurance of a fresh and younger man. Tariff Reform is just now in the back-ground of English politics, but the silent gladiator at Highbury may yet prove to have been a prophet when he uttered his last pronouncement upon tariff reform in the House of Commons.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

COL. JOHN ASTOR, who went down with the Titanic, has left behind him an estate the gross value of which is $85,890,826. Hard luck.

A FRENCH DOCTOR has discovered that an injection of sugar into the veins of patients apparently dying from heart failure and exhaustion restores the heart action. It would not be safe to remark in public that this would only be effective in the case of sweet-hearts.

THAW, who seems with the winter to have frozen up, is once again being discussed in the courts. A commission has been appointed to pass on the matter of his mental condition. The commission says that the murderer would not be a menace to the public safety if he were released "under bonds"—not to say chains.

A STRIKING TRIBUTE was accorded the Hon. E. G. Stevenson, as Supreme Chief Ranger of the Independent Order of Foresters, last evening at the banquet given in his honor at Toronto. Those who attended the occasion and who spoke in praise of Mr. Stevenson and the work of the Order were representative of almost every business and profession. Those who have followed the history of the Society for the past six years under the statesmanlike guidance of its present Chief Ranger, will agree with everything that was said by the various speakers, both as to the character of Mr. Stevenson and as to the remarkable progress that the Order has made in that time. Mr. Stevenson has piloted the Order through serious difficulties, which threatened at one time bring financial embarrassment upon the organization. Its members may well be proud of finding themselves in such safe hands and upon such a substantial basis.

When Nellie Dresses.

Detroit Free Press.

When Nellie goes upstairs to dress,
I take a magazine,
And read about the wonders of
Some far-off foreign scene;
An article on men who graft,
The Wall Street system, too;
Also the editor's remarks
On what next month he'll do.

I light my pipe and puff away
The while the pages I scan,
And read a Robert Chambers tale
About some love-sick man,
A muck-rake expert leads me through
A bale of torrid stuff
Explaining how a lot of men
Got rich upon a bluff.

I read the advertisements next,
Of collars, kodaks, cars,
And breakfast foods and underwear,
Tobacco and cigars.
A liberal education I
Obtain, I must confess
The evening we are going out
And Nellie starts to dress.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

WESTERN GRAIN GROWERS

To the Editor of The Review.

Sir,—

The grain growers of the Western provinces met recently in Brandon, Man., and asked for a referendum on the Naval Question. I believe that is a good thing. They are not in favor of the present naval policy of either party. They characterize both Conservative and Liberal policies as useless waste of money. They are strong for the expenditure of the same money in a government owned system of ocean-going vessels to beat out the shipping combines. This would mean a great unguarded fleet of commerce which any Chinese pirate-junk could take possession of without firing a shot. I think the convention is astray on leaving us altogether helpless. Fleets of war are a waste of money, but as long as the devil is going around like a roaring lion, what are we to do? Are we just to be eaten up and say no more about it? We cannot convert the world to our view so easily as that. It is not after all the foolishness, but the devilishness of mankind that is to blame.

Yours,
OPTIMIST.

WHAT FREE WHEAT MEANS

To the Editor of The Review.

Sir,—

Free Wheat and free flour, for they must go together, and semolina for that matter which is a sort of essence of wheat taken from the strong wheat and used to level up the weak, will mean that the abandoned farms of New England will once more find a market. They will find a market in Eastern Canada including Ontario. The result will be that the Ontario farmer who certainly has had a good market for his produce although not perhaps always for his grain will go out of business or at the very least, share with the New England farmer the prosperity which he has hitherto had a monopoly of. There is also another feature and that is that the produce from the whole civilized world will pour in here as it is even beginning to do now and the farmer will be put out of business or else will be compelled to take refuge in a condition of affairs vastly worse than ever experienced before. There could hardly be a more foolish thing than for the farmer to give up possession of his own country. He may say that his own country is not big enough for him, that it is not a big enough consumer of grain. The Canadian farmer must remember that grain is not the only thing that he produces and he must also remember that if the American farmer can afford to export wheat to the Old Country, he can certainly afford to export it to Canada. The idea that some farmers have that Ontario can compete in the New England States with the western States, is folly, because the western farmers have a through rate to Liverpool here. The very minute however that he starts in to send his wheat on the short haul, different conditions arise and the Canadian farmer may rest assured that the United States will see to it that railway rates like potato embargoes, will not favor the Ontario farmer as against the Western United States farmer in the New England States' market. But that is all in supposing that we are likely to export to the New England States and to get that market. This is a mistake. What will happen is that the export of flour to Ontario will furnish New England an outlet for its wheat. The Canadian flour mill industry except in the case of a few local mills, will necessarily go down and out. It cannot possibly compete with American flour mills. We must be very cautious lest we give up a great growing prosperous condition for something that will prove our undoing. Water cannot rise higher than its source. Prosperity cannot rise higher than its source and if we suppose we can become by exporting to the United States more prosperous than the United States, we make a very stupid mistake and even if we could, what would it profit us to exchange our present advantageous position for one not so desirable.

Yours,
READER.

THE LAST OF THE SHOGUNS.

Passing of a Picturesque Military Figure of Old Japan.

With the death of Prince Keiki Tokugawa passed the last surviving link between the old and the new Japan. Here was a man who gave up a sceptre of empire to become a citizen, whose magnanimous surrender of ancestral prestige for the sake of his country was but one more example of the capacity of his race for peaceful revolution. The last of the Shoguns was a typical representative of a nation born without a pang. His presence in modern history was like the rise and reform of a Pharaoh from the sands of Egypt. Forty-five years ago this man was the arbiter of the entire orient. To have looked into his face would have been a capital crime.

In that physically diminutive figure, shrunken with age, but large in the melancholy marks of vanished splendor, was displayed the last extant symbol of what was once the most absolute rule on earth. It was of this man that the people used to say: "His will is law and his voice is thunder." But the man was left; and once stripped of the mediaeval trappings of judicial jugglery and enforced usurpation, the Shogun arose to the true spirit of his race, heard the cry of the people, descended to the level of the multitude, and became as one of them, a subject of the sovereign he once outshone, himself a partaker of the freedom he bestowed upon his country.

The figure of a Shogun, always appealing to the western imagination, first cast its shadow across the kingdom of Japan in the 12th century. The Shoguns came as a reaction of a vigorous people against an effeminizing influence spreading from the court.

To satisfy the demand for gorgeous dress, the looms of Japan began weaving the wonderful fabrics for which the country became famous. Social fortunes turned on successful costumes and the men of the court began to powder and paint their faces like women, while a grand lady of the time was judged by the quantity of her habiliments.

A reaction favored the growth of a military class, then in embryo, and the shoguns emerged in glittering raiment, but as fighters and vigorous men. They were the embodiment of the spirit of the Iron Chancellors, the War Lords, the Prime Ministers of the later days.

The title of Shogun at first signified, as did the Roman term imperator, only a commander in chief, but with the rise of the Shoguns to power in the empire the title conveyed an authority of supreme ruler, a double role of civil and military sovereign, subject in theory to the Mikado, but supreme in fact.

Prince Keiki was the 15th in a line extending back for nearly 700 years when he ascended to power in 1866 at the age of 29. Within a few months after his accession he was confronted with the national convulsion, originated several years before with the object of obliterating the regency and reinstating the imperial house to its rightful position. But for Tokugawa's enlightened conviction that the time had come for putting an end to the onerous dual system of authority, and his readiness to sacrifice a despotic power, the revolution could never have been consummated with so little bloodshed.

After the restoration he kept altogether aloof from politics and spent his time in shooting and manly sports.

He Took the Drink.

Archibald Forbes was fond of recounting his experience in Leven, Fifeshire, Scotland, during a lecture tour. When Forbes entered the hall there was not a single soul present. After a bit, however, a man strolled in and calmly proceeded to choose a seat. It seems he was a commercial traveler, putting up at the place for the night, who had found time hanging heavily on his hands. Nobody else coming, Forbes said to the "audience":—

"Will you have the lecture, or will you have a drink?"

"A drink," said the traveler.

Flower of the Family.

De Smythe had been waltzing with his host's ugly elder daughter and was now in a corner repairing damages. Here his would be papa-in-law espied him. "D'you know," he remarked, referring to De Smythe's late partner, "that girl is the flower of my family?"

"So it seems," answered the young man. "But it's a pity she comes off so, isn't it?" he added, as he made another vigorous rub at the white spots on his coat sleeve.

A Safeguard.

"But you don't speak the language of the country in which you desire a diplomatic position."

"Well," replied the determined applicant, "a man isn't nearly so liable to make indiscreet remarks if he has to get a lexicon and look up the meaning of every word he utters."

Quick Change.

"Who," she asked, "is that scrawny, bowlegged, ridiculous looking person talking to Miss Rockingham?"

"That is Count Brisczpicknitzel."

"Oh! What an aristocratic, noble bearing he seems to have now that he has shifted his position so that the light strikes him properly!"

Right In His Line.

"Yes," said Mrs. Twickembury, "I've had a good deal of trouble with my eyes lately, but the other day I went to an optimist, and he told me that he thought they'd soon be all right again."

What Changed His Mind.

"I had supposed until yesterday, doctor, that the days of the bleeding of patients were past."

"And so they are. But what changed your mind?"

"The bill you sent me."

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. The cost is nominal one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

Wit of Beau Brummel.

Beau Brummel's popularity depended less upon his dress than upon his perfect self possession, his grace of bearing, his wit, his good looks and his good humor, according to Leon H. Vincent's "Dandies and Men of Letters." He was a handsome fellow, although the shape of his nose had been "modified" by the kick of a horse.

"His reputation for bright and caustic sayings was very great. The industrious biographer has collected all he could lay hands on, and there is life in them yet. Take, for example, this: Byng, one of the dandies, was blessed with a remarkable head of hair which curled naturally. Brummel saw him one day in a gig with a French poodle by his side and saluted him with, 'Ah Byng, how do you do?—a family vehicle, I see.' And from that time on, we are told, the well haired dandy was known as 'Poodle Byng.'"

A Lesson in Natural History.

An indulgent grandfather was entertaining his grandchildren by turning the leaves of a book on animals. Coming to the kangaroo, he called their attention to its peculiarities and especially to its enormous tail. Passing on, after awhile he thought he would try them to see how much they remembered of this talk about the kangaroo. He asked, "What animal has the biggest tail?" After a moment's thought one little girl spoke up, "I know, a snake; it's all tail." — Indianapolis News.

"I might. How are you on spelling and arithmetic?"

"We didn't pay much attention to those studies at our school. But I can model clay and do worsted work."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Hides His.

"Perkins believes that a man's character can be determined by his handwriting."

"I don't remember seeing any of Perkins' handwriting."

Using an Old Device.

The modern world is rediscovering the device of pouring oil upon the waves, which, scholars tell us, was known to Aristotle and practiced by Pliny. Prof. Ray Lankester says that so small a quantity as a pint an hour is sufficient to secure a zone of calm round a ship, so that boats can be launched in safety. It is not improbable that oil will be carried for this purpose hereafter.

Recognized.

Merchant—Have you collected that bill of Smith's?

Collector—Have I collected it? I called at the house and found that seven Smiths lived there. Six declared they owed nothing, and the seventh kicked me out of the house.

Merchant—That's the one. Go back and get the money.—London Telegraph.

A SPLENDID HAZARD

By HAROLD McGRATH

[Copyright 910 by Bobbs-Merrill Company.]

nse, glancing obliquely though rilled window, stood M. Ferraud had not seen these worthies to er before. He knew all of them e was not a shoulder among them he could not lay a hand upon voice with surety the order of law. Courage of a kind they all names once written gloriously in ory, but now merely passports into ous traffic. Heroes of boulevard oits, duelists, card players—could e possible that any sane man ld be their dupe? After the age toast be heard many things— e he had known, some he had ssed at and some which surprised Only loyalty was lacking to e them feared indeed. Presently aw Breitmann rise. He was tired, eeded sleep. On the morrow, then. in a week the first blow of the terror. They all bowed respect y as he passed out.

he secret agent followed him till he ched the Place des Palmiers. He a hand on Breitmann's arm. The ter, highly keyed, swung quickly, , seeing who it was (the man he ieved to be at that moment a pris- er in the middle country), he made sinister move toward his hip. M rraud was in peril, and he realized it.

"Wait a moment, monsieur. There no need of that. I repeat, I wish well, and this night I will prove What? Do you not know that I ld have put my hand on you at any ment? Attend. Return with me the little house in Rue St. Charles."

Breitmann's hand again stole toward hip.

"You were listening?"

"Yes. Be careful. My death would t change anything. I wish to disil sion you. I wish to prove to you deeply you are the dupe of those All your plans have been re arkable, but not one of them has re ained unknown to me. You clasp hand of this duke who plays the r under the name of Picard, who s you as a future emperor and you behind your back? How? uble face that he is, have I not oof that he has written detail after ail of this conspiracy to the Quai Orsay and that he has clung to you to gain his share of what is ours? Come back with me and let our own ears testify. The fact that am not in the mountains should con ince you how strong I am."

Breitmann hesitated, wondering whether he had best shoot this med then and there and cut for it or low him.

"I will go with you. But I give you this warning: If what I hear is not what you expect me to hear I promise to put a bullet into your meddling head."

"I agree to that," replied the other. He did not underestimate his danger. Neither did he undervalue his intimate knowledge of human nature.

With what emotions Breitmann returned to the scene of his triumph his self appointed companion could only surmise. He had determined to save this young fool in spite of his madness, and never had he failed to bring his enterprises to their forearranged end. And there was sentiment between all this, sentiment he would not have been ashamed to avow. Upon chance, then, fickle inconstant chance, depended the success of the seven years' labor. If by this time the wine had not loosened their tongues or if they had disappeared!

But fortune favors the persistent no less than the brave. The profligates were still at the table, and there were fresh bottles of wine. They were laughing and talking. In all not more than fifteen minutes had elapsed since Breitmann's departure. M. Ferraud stationed him by the window and kept a hand lightly upon his arm, as one might place a finger on a pulse.

Of what were they talking—Ostend, the ballet dancers, the races in May, the shooting at Monte Carlo, gaming tables, empty purses and again ballet dancers?

"To divide two millions!" cried one. "That will clear my debts, with a little for Dieppe."

"Two hundred and fifty thousand francs! Princely!"

And then the voice of the master spirit, pitiless and ironical—Picard's. "Was there ever such a dupe? And not to laugh in his face is penance for my sins. A Dutchman, a ballet headed clod from Bavaria, the land of sausage, beer and daschunds, and this shall be written Napoleon IV. Ye gods, what farce, comedy, vaudeville!"

Breitmann shuddered. M. Ferraud, feeling that shudder under his hand, relaxed his shoulders. He had won.

The scene went on. The butt of it heard jest and ridicule. They were pillorying him with the light and matchless cruelty of wits. And he, poor fool, had believed them to be his dupes, whereas he was theirs. Gently he disengaged himself from M. Ferraud's grasp.

"What are you going to do?" whispered the hunter of butterflies.

"Watch and see."

Breitmann walked noiselessly round to the entrance, and M. Ferraud lost sight of him for a few moments. Picard was on his feet, mimicking his dupe by assuming a Napoleonic pose. The door opened, and Breitmann stood quietly on the threshold. A hush fell on the revelers. There was something kingly in the contempt with which Breitmann swept the startled faces. He stepped up to the table, took up a full glass of wine and threw it into Picard's face.

"Only one of us shall leave Corsica," said the dupe.

"Certainly it will not be your majesty," replied Picard, wiping his face with a serviette. "His majesty will waive his rights to meet me. Tomorrow morning I shall have the pleasure of writing finis to this Napoleonic phase. You fool, you shall die for that!"

"That," returned Breitmann, still unruffled as he went to the door, "remains to be seen. Gentlemen, I regret to say that your monetary difficulties must continue unchanged."

"Oh, for fifty years ago!" murmured the little scene shifter from the dark of his shelter.

CHAPTER XX.

THE END OF THE DREAM.

It took place on the road which runs from Ajaccio to the Cap de la Parata, not far from Iles Sanguinaires; but a main traveled road. The sun had not yet crossed the mountains, but a crisp gray light lay over land and sea. They fired at the same time. The duke lowered his pistol, and through the smoke he saw Breitmann pitch headforemost into the thick white dust. Presently, nay almost instantly, the dust at the left side of the striken man became a creeping blackness. The surgeon sprang forward.

"Dead?" asked Picard.

"No; through the shoulder. He has a fighting chance."

"The wine last night; my hand wasn't steady enough. Some day the fool will curse me as a poor shot. The devil take the business! Not a sou for my pocket out of all the trouble I have had. But for the want of a clear head I should be a rich man today. Who thought he would come back?"

"I did," answered M. Ferraud.

"You?"

"With pleasure! I brought him back. Thank me for your empty pockets monsieur. If I were you I should not land at Marseilles. Try Livarno, by all means Livarno."

"For this?" asked Picard, with a jerk of his head toward Breitmann who was being carefully lifted on to the carriage seat.

"No; for certain letters you have not sent to the Quai d'Orsay. You comprehend?"

"What do you mean?" truculently for Picard was not in a kindly mood this morning.

But the little Bayard of the Quai laughed. "Shall I explain here, monsieur? Be wise. Go to Italy, all of you. This time you overreached, Monsieur le Duc. Your ballet dancers must wait!" And, with rare insolence M. Ferraud showed his back to his audience, climbed to the seat by the driver and bade him return slowly to the Grand hotel.

Hildegarde refused to see any one but M. Ferraud. Hour after hour she sat by the bed of the injured man Knowing that in all probability he would live, she was happy for the first time in years. He needed her; alone broken, wrecked among his dreams, he needed her. He had recovered consciousness almost at once, and his first words were a curse on the man who had aimed so badly. He could talk but little, but he declared that he would rip the bandages if they did not prop his pillows so he could see the bay. The second time he woke he saw Hildegarde. She smiled brokenly, but he turned his head aside.

"Has the yacht gone yet?"

"No."

"When will it sail?"

"Tomorrow." Her heart swelled with bitter pain. The woman he loved would be on that yacht. But toward Laura she held nothing but kindness tinged with a wondering envy. Was not she, Hildegarde, as beautiful? Had Laura more talents than she, more accomplishments? Alas, yes, one! She had had the unconscious power of making this man love her.

To and fro she waved the fan. For awhile, at any rate, he would be hers. And when M. Ferraud said that the others wished to say farewell she declined. She could look none of them in the face again, nor did she care. She was sorry for Cathewa. His life would be as broken as hers, but a man has the world under his feet, scenes of action, changes to soothe his hurt. A woman has little else but her needle.

All through the day and all through the night she remained on guard, surrendering her vigil only to M. Ferraud. With cold cloths she kept down the fever, wiping the hot face and hands. He would pull through, the surgeon said, but he would have his nurse to thank. There was something about the man the doctor did not understand. He acted as if he did not care to live.

The Ugliest Beast.

Probably the ugliest beast in the world is a monkey, a gruesome looking animal called the bearded saki. This is so utterly grotesque a beast that it would scarcely be safe to let a child or nervous person see it. The ugliness is not of an amusing kind, but of an evil, sinister nature. The beast has a sort of beard and a countenance unlike anything else in shape and lines. The monkey itself is not particularly savage, but is so hideous that the natives of its country, South America, say that no beast of prey, however hungry, will tackle it. Even a hungry jaguar will starve in a cageful of sakis.—London Mail.

Lived to Fight Another Day.

Frederick the Great lost his head at Molwitz, his first battle. Had he not been a king he would have been shot at the next sunrise. In the heat of the carnage he thought his army was being overwhelmed, so he put the spurs to his horse and rode many miles before he stopped in his wild flight. Late at night he was discovered in an old mill awaiting, as he thought, capture by the enemy. Then he discovered that the army he deserted had won the battle. As Frederick was a prince, everybody tried to forget the incident just as quickly as possible, and after that in battle the king was just as brave as any other soldier.

Woman's World

Miss King Organizes New Business Movement.

MISS FLORENCE KING.

Business women all over the country are interested in a new movement for women recently started by Miss Florence King, a woman patent lawyer of Chicago. This is the Chicago Woman's Association of Commerce which has already inspired similar institutions in other cities.

This association is planned on the same lines as the men's association of commerce, and in the Chicago branch there are today more than 300 members, numbering business and professional women, all regularly organized for the advancement of women through the co-operation of women. The slogan of this new association is, "Let Us Help Each Other to Help Ourselves."

The need of co-operation among business and professional women has long been recognized, but it remained for Miss King to put it into actual working order.

Miss Florence King, who is among the bright, up to date women of the hour, is one of the four women lawyers of the United States who have been admitted to practice in the United States supreme court and is the only woman member of the Patent Bar association.

Miss King is a self made woman. She was born on a small farm, where educational advantages were not to be had, but by dint of burning the midnight oil when her household work was done she fitted herself to enter high school and later college, working her way through and later taking up the study of law, specializing after a few years of general practice in patent law.

She still loves farm life and finds time in spite of her busy practice to lecture throughout the country on the "back to the farm" movement, advocating it not only for young men, but for women as well. She herself is the owner of a large farm in Michigan, which she works on shares and passes as much of her time there in the summer as she can from her work.

Miss King's home is in a suburb of Chicago, where she has a charming garden. This garden she delights in, getting up spring and summer mornings at 5 o'clock and working evenings among her plants after her return from her city office.

This clever patent lawyer is an ardent suffragist and believes that the new association is only another step in the right direction of women's advancement, progress and rights.

Open to Conviction.

No rock was ever more firmly fixed than were Mrs. Manser's opinions, but she considered herself of an extremely pliable disposition, with a mind open to conviction on all sides.

"It's the strangest thing to me the way the rest of the family talk as if I were set in my views," she said one day to her nephew William's bride, with whom she had been laboring on the subject of calling cards for more than an hour. "It seems to me you're sort of taking the same tone," she continued, looking sharply at the young woman, "and I don't want you to. There isn't anybody in this world that's readier to be convinced she's in the wrong than I am by people who know more than I. All they've got before 'em ever is to prove to me that they do know more than I, and I tell you, my dear, there hasn't one of 'em ever been able to in this family!"—Youth's Companion.

Catching a Bride.

Among certain Siberians the bridegroom is not permitted to have a wife until he can catch her. But they do not give him a fair race in the open. The bride, surrounded by her female friends, awaits him in a big tent. As soon as she sees him she runs off. He follows like Hippomenes after Atalanta. But instead of obstacles being thrown in the way of the bride they are thrown across the path of the bridegroom. The pursuing groom falls over old women, chairs, tables, stones and fishing rods or is tripped up by ropes. Only when it is feared he might give up and sulk and go away without the fleeting lady is he permitted to overtake her. Then as she falls into his outstretched arms it may be imagined she utters some equivalent of "This is so sudden!"

PONDEROUS SEA ELEPHANTS.

They Have Two Foot Trunks and Flippers Tipped With Claws.

That which is believed to be the last herd of sea elephants known to exist is to be found at Guadalupe island, off the west coast of Mexico. In the herd there are now only about thirty specimens.

The sea elephant is an important link in the chain of evolution and is the largest of all fin footed animals. The adult male is about twenty-two feet in length and is about eight feet high when propped up on his front flippers in a natural position. These great bulls weigh from two to three tons and have a trunk, or proboscis, which when relaxed, hangs down over the mouth about two feet. In the end of this the nostrils are placed rather wide apart, and when they breathe the whole mass trembles in tiny undulations to the very end.

The flippers are thick and tipped with heavy claws. There is a tail about one foot and a half long, separated horizontally in two divisions. This tail acts as a propeller, to resist the huge creature when he comes in through the breakers. He hoists his back flippers and tail so as to catch the full sweep of the waves, and then allows himself to be washed up on the beach.

Coarse, bristly hair grows sparsely from the back along the body, and a tough protecting crust of flesh reaches like a shield from the lower jaw down over the chest and round to the back of the neck. This biblike affair is nature's provision for protection in time of battle. The male fights viciously in the mating season, and the chest protector prevents much loss of life.

Sea elephants live on various kinds of small fish and use the trunk to seize them with. Afterward the food is transferred to the mouth precisely as elephants manage it.

Dance Names.

The word "quadrille" is derived from the position of the dancers, the French word "quadrille" meaning a little square. "Country dance" does not mean a rustic dance, but is a corruption of the French term contredanse, which relates to the position of the couples—opposite to each other.—London Globe.

ADVERTISING

A STORE'S importance is rightly judged by its advertising. Not altogether by the size of the advertisement, but by size and tone, and quality of announcement.

What the store has to say is one thing. Quite as important is how it says it.

Given that the clerical force is competent and up-to-date, it will say, over the counter, the very best to be said in reference to the goods enquired for. It may, and should, suggest other goods, not in the customers view.

This implies that the customer is in the store. But what brings him or her there? The wish to buy and the belief it is a good place to buy at.

How is this learned of?

By advertising. The advertisement is a message, an intelligent middleman, doing service between seller and buyer. The space talks to thousands, even while the store is closed for the night.

INDEPENDENT ORDER OF FORESTERS IS ON PERMANENT BASIS

Big Banquet at Toronto Reviews the Work of the Order

Interesting Address by the Supreme Chief Ranger on Details of the Work

As a token of sincere regard for his work in the fraternal world, for his guidance of an immense organization, the Independent Order of Foresters, through the slough of despair, placing it on a satisfactory basis of solvency, and making that order one of the biggest of its kind in the world, the leaders of Ontario's business, commercial, political, social and religious life met at the Temple building last night to do honor and tender a complimentary banquet to the Hon. Elliott G. Stevenson, Supreme Chief Ranger of the Independent Order of Foresters.

At the conclusion of the feast E. W. J. Owens, M.L.A., proposed the usual loyal toast and the reception of this was hearty. He went on to refer to the work of the Supreme Chief Ranger and called on Mr. R. J. Niddrie to read and present an address, which referring in complimentary terms to the Supreme Chief Ranger and his able administration said, in part:—

"At the outset of your administration you were confronted with many and serious problems. These you have successfully solved. That success was due to the confidence of the members and of the public in your leadership.

"Of a continuance of this support we can confidently assure you. For, proud as we have been of the early struggles of the Order, proud as we have been to see it rear its temple in the Queen City of Ontario, proud as we have been to see our Chiefs recognized by statesmen and Governments as men of public eminence, we are to-night prouder still of the work that has enabled us to fulfill that first, last and basic obligation of an insurance fraternity, the obligation of sound finance."

Oration to the Supreme Chief Ranger—His Able Reply

Seldom is the subject of a demonstration given such an ovation as Mr. Stevenson received as he rose to respond. Vociferous cheering lasted several minutes and ended with musical honors.

Mr. Stevenson said in part:

I thank you very sincerely for your kind and generous words, and I assure you that had it not been for the many and continued evidences of your confidence and the loyalty and support of the active men of your society the important work you have referred to in your address as accomplished would not have been possible of accomplishment.

As earnestly as I have striven to serve our society and its membership—services rendered at considerable sacrifice of health and strength—I realize how futile would have been the efforts made to place our society in the proud position it occupies today as one of the very few fraternal societies on an actuarily sound basis without the sympathetic support and encouragement of a greater portion of our membership.

It is nearly seven years since came the report of the Royal Commission making radical recommendations with reference to action to be taken by our society to safeguard the interests of our membership and the public by placing our society in a position where it could be hoped to carry out its promises to its membership and their beneficiaries.

Accompanying the report of the Royal Commission was a proposed bill which it was recommended should be enacted as law. The provisions of this bill, so far as it affected our society, were withdrawn upon a pledge made by the executive officers of the society and a deputation that waited upon the Minister of Finance, composed of leading members of the Order gathered from every Province within the Dominion, that we would at the earliest date possible do whatever might be found to be necessary to place our society on a sound basis.

"Responsibilities that were not then realized devolved upon those of us who had to take up the burden of meeting the requirements of the Government and discharging our duty to our membership and the public.

"I say to the public, as well as the membership, for the reason that the solicitation of the public to continue their confidence in our society and manifest it by aiding it in increasing its membership involved an obligation upon our part to see that those who should thus be influenced to entrust the protection of their families to our society should not be disappointed in finding in the end that their contributions for the protection of their families had been absorbed in meeting obligations to those who had long before become members, but who had from the beginning paid inadequately for the benefits promised them.

Contributions Were Inadequate

It has been a source not only of regret but of sincere sorrow that in working out the result that has been accomplished, bitter disappointment had been brought to many of our members, who were unaware that their contributions had been inadequate.

When carefully considered the situation was a simple one.

As at December 31st, 1912, we had in hand twenty million dollars of accumulated funds and two hundred and forty million dollars of obligations that all had to be provided for within the lives of our 240,000 members. To meet these obligations we had this $20,000,000 in hand. We could count on the interest to be earned on this accumulation and upon the premiums that would be paid by our members.

These items constituted everything that would be available to meet our $240,000,000 of obligations, and when we took stock in an intelligent and scientific manner, we found that instead of having $20,000,000 in hand, we should have had $45,000,000, and that with this sum and the interest to be earned upon it and the premiums to be paid by our members, we could just meet our obligations as they matured, according to our society's mortality and disability experience.

It was further ascertained that all of the deficiency existing in our assets, as compared with our liabilities, was created by the inadequate contributions of members that joined our society before 1899, and that those who joined after 1899 were paying in full for the benefits promised them and their beneficiaries.

The difference in the situation of members who joined before and after Jan. 1st, 1899, resulted from the fact that, as the result of legislation by our Supreme Court, in 1898 a new table of rates, largely increasing those in force prior to that time, came into force, but this table of rates was unfortunately, only made to apply to those who joined after 1899.

Having made a pledge to the Government to take steps to make provision that would enable the society to meet its ogligations to its members we set about to do this by employing competent actuarial assistance and establishing a statistical department that would enable us to ascertain that exact mortality and disability experience of our society.

A Deficiency of $25,000,000

When this work was completed it was as indicated, found that there existed a deficiency in our assets as compared with our liabilities of $25,000,000—a deficiency that had to be provided for unless the society was to be permitted to drift into slow liquidation and in the end disappoint thousands of our members and their beneficiaries.

After the actuarial results referred to had been ascertained we spent long and anxious days and weeks and months in endeavoring to work out a plan that would make the burden that had to be imposed upon those whose inadequate payments had created this condition as light as possible, with the result that all who had part in deciding in the plan that was best to be adopted, agreed that the plan we have adopted was the best in the interests of all concerned, having in mind the necessity of once and for all time placing our society upon a sound basis.

Assessment Rates Inadequate

Complaint has been made that in the plan adopted we discriminated against the old members and that in fact the deficiency referred to that it was necessary to provide for should have been covered by assessments spread over the entire membership instead of being levied against that portion of the society whose inadequate payments had created the deficiency.

In this connection the fact must be borne in mind that the society in 1898 when it adopted its new and increased table of rates and assessments consisted entirely of what are now commonly spoken of as the old members.

It was recognized that the rates of assessments in force up to that time were inadequate, else there would have been no need of putting into force a table of assessments increasing such rates of assessments.

The representatives of the then membership thus recognising the inadequacy of the rates then in force, made provision that only those who should thereafter join should pay the inadequate rates then adopted, and that those who up to that time, numbering more than 100,000, who then constituted the society, should continue to pay the inadequate rates before then in force.

A Fraternal Fund

In view of this it semed inequitable that those who thereafter joined in paying the increased rates of assessment and adequate rates of assessment should be later burdened in making provision in whole or in part for the inadequacy of the payments made by those who had joined before 1899. It was nevertheless recognized that there was an increased burden imposed upon the survivors of the members who joined before 1899 in that the deficiency existing was created in part by the inadequate contribution of those who had deceased, and whose beneficiaries had received full payment of the benefits promised them. To equalize this it was provided in our legislation recently adopted that $1,000,000 should be transferred from the accumulations of the payments made by the members who joined after Jan. 1st, 1899, and that for all time in the future there should go into a fraternal fund to relieve against the assessments levied against the so-called old members the interest earnings about 4 per cent. upon the accumulated funds of the post-1899 members, as well as upon the accumulated funds of the pre-'99 members.

Of the existing accumulation of $20,000,000 $6,000,000 belonged to the members that joined before 1899, and $14,00,000 belonged to those who joined since 1899, and inasmuch as we are earning a fraction over 5 per cent. on the investment of our accumulated funds, 1 per cent. upon the $14,000,000 belonging to the post-1899 members, amounting to $148,000 per annum, goes to the fraternal fund referred to for the relief of the so-called old members.

Powerful Agency for Doing Good

Our society is considered and is, a great society and a powerful agency for doing good to mankind, but in membership and the extent of its obligations it is insignificant as compared with the aggregate membership and obligations of fraternal insurance societies generally.

When it is considered that this membership of 10,000,000 has undertaken to provide protection through this $10,068,000,000 of insurance in force for practically fifty million women and children, and that this fifty million women and children will sooner or later be largely dependent upon this protection for their future necessities or comforts, and that inadequate provision exists for maturing this protection, the situation really becomes appalling.

So far as the fixing of the financial status of our society is concerned, our work is finished. We have a society one hundred per cent. sound, able to meet all legitimate calls upon it with respect to its obligations, present and future.

I pledge myself in the administration of its affairs to recognize no lines of division as between men who revere the Union Jack and men who revere the Stars and Stripes, but one common brotherhood united in one great international society.

High Praise For Order

Sir John Willison, who proposed the toast to the Parliament of Canada, at first referred to the work of the honored guests. "I have never yet met a man whom I have greater regard for than Mr. E. G. Stevenson," said he. "His achievements are beyond compare." To have placed this order beyond such a satisfactory financial basis is an accomplishment worth while." (Cheers.)

Mr. F. F. Pardee M.P., was also received with vociferous cheers. "I am proud to be here and be permitted to speak to members of one of the best fraternal societies in the world," said he. "I have the greatest respect for Mr. E. G. Stevenson, whom I have known for many years. He is a man you should honor because he has done so much for you.

He declared social reform is attracting the attention of Parliaments, but old-age pensions, etc., are only on the horizon. "But your order," said he, "is accomplishing all these reforms without the brass band accompaniment—without fuss and feathers.

Mr. Rowell's Tribute.

Mr. N. W. Rowell, leader of the Ontario Opposition, responded to the toast of the legislature. As he rose he was greeted with loud cheers and the waving of handkerchiefs. "I am here to pay my respects to your Supreme Chief Ranger," said he. "He is a man for whom I have a great deal of regard. He is a strong and courageous leader. He has grappled with a serious condition of affairs, and the result reflects credit on himself and the order as a whole.

Dr. J. A. Macdonald proposed the health of the "American Brethren." He complimented the members of the order on having Mr. Stevenson at the head of affairs. "Your Executive has done its duty," said he. "Your order accomplishes a noble task because it ministers to the weak. No nation can be great if it neglects the poor and the needy, and the flag is stained if it floats over slums and ill-fed people."

BAR ABOLITION IS OF NO USE

Step Useless so Long as Wholesalers Exist, Says Roblin.

WINNIPEG, Jan. 9.—A deputation from the Social Service Council of Canada waited upon Premier Roblin and colleagues at the Parliament Buildings yesterday morning and urged upon the Government the advicability of making some amendments to the local option laws, asking at the same time that a provincial plebiscite on the question of abolition of the bars be taken.

In reply, Premier Roblin said: "Abolition of the bar would be in the worse possible interests of sobriety and good living. If you will come out frankly and say it is a prohibition law you want, I am with you, for I am as anxious as any man living to promote the cause of temperance.

"But I have not yet surrendered my judgment of how best to promote temperance and sobriety to anyone else. To close the bars, opening up instead numerous wholesale places, would, in my opinion, be a retrogade step. Close the bars and wholesale houses, too; that is the thing."

Last of McNab Colony Dead.

PERTH, Jan. 9.—The death is reported here of John McIntyre of Calabogie, at the age of ninety-seven years. With his passing away the last link is severed between the present and the Scottish colony, numbering eighty-two souls, who emigrated to Canada in 1825 under the rule of Chief McNab, and settled in Renfrew county. John G. Campbell of this town was associated with deceased in the lumbering days at Calabogie, and places Mr. McIntyre's age at 100.

Expiated Crime In Jail.

MONTPELLIER, France, Jan. 9.—Mrs. Violet Goold, who with her husband, Vera St. Leger Goold, was serving a term of life imprisonment for the murder of Emma Levin in the summer of 1907, the crime being known as "The Monte Carlo trunk mystery," died in prison yesterday.

Mrs. Goold was originally sentenced to be guillotined and her husband was sentenced to life imprisonment.

Matoa Safe in Drydock.

SARNIA, Jan. 9. — The steamer Matoa, one of the victims of the great lakes' storm, arrived here yesterday in tow of the tugs Fletcher and James Reid of the Reid Wrecking Co. The Matoa is now at the Reid drydock, where she will be repaired. The boat has a cargo of soft coal, much of which is still on board.

Murderers Arrested?

WINNIPEG, Jan. 9.—In the arrest of Alex. Ostrowski and Joe Zaborski the police feel certain that they have the murderers of Axel Helbo, who was shot and killed when two burglars entered his room Tuesday. In the police station after arrest, it is claimed, they got into a hot discussion over the shooting of Helbo, each accusing the other.

In addition to these two, four men and two women are being detained at Central Police Station without having been charged with an offence, but are held in connection with the burglary in the Hingston-Smith Arms Company last Friday night.

Motor Skidded; Man Killed.

TORONTO, Jan. 9.—While stooping to light the rear lamp on his motor-car, which was standing on the south side of Queen street, just west of Dowling avenue, at nine o'clock last night, James Addison was struck by a motor car driven by Fred. Harding of 171 Grenadier road, and his back was broken. He died a few minutes later and his body was removed to the morgue. Harding was taken into custody on a charge of manslaughter.

HYDRO POWER DISCUSSED AT HAVELOCK

(Havelock Standard)

The meeting in the town hall on Friday night of last week was not very largely attended, and the majority of those present were undoubtedly disappointed at the prospects of obtaining beter light and power from the Hydro. Mr. Leacock, consulting engineer for the Hydro Commission, addressed the audience and outlined the benefits that the Hydro had obtained for many parts of Ontario in cutting the price of light and power in half. Then he took up conditions in Havelock, and stated that from what the Hydro knew of the town, they advise the purchase of the plant in the town limits and a contract to be made with the local company, providing an assured service can be had. This, he said, has yet to be known and the purpose of the vote on the question was to make the people familiar with the situation and to authorize the council to proceed with the investigation in view of submitting a further by-law to authorize some definite steps. In regard to obtaining power from the Seymour Co., we understand from Mr. Leacock that transmitted power from Healey Falls would cost from $29 to $45 per h.p., according to the distance and the amount supplied. In addition to that the town would have to pay for a distributing plant that would cost about $12,000, entailing a total cost of about $7,000 a year. Of course with the local company competing against the town the village could not possibly raise enough revenue to meet the annual cost, and therefore the Hydro recommends the first scheme outlined.

Small Change for Mexico.

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 9.—The Mexican Government yesterday announced its intention to coin and distribute half pesos, equivalent to twenty-five cents in Canadian money, to the number of 200,000 weekly, a measure which it calculates will relieve the difficulties resulting from the scarcity of small change. The mines in Mexico now sell their silver output through a Government commission at a rate fixed by the Government. A portion of this is to be turned into coinage, which will revert partly to the miners in the form of payment in coins.

Knows Nothing of Message.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—Godfrey Isaacs when questioned by The New York Times said that he had received no report of a wireless transatlantic conversation, and he would have certainly heard if such had taken place. The wireless telephone experiments were proceeding, but it would be going too far to say that telephonic communication across the Atlantic had been established.

Less Than 1,000 Struck.

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa, Jan. 9.—Less than a thousand of the 50,000 South African railroad employes who were expected to go on strike obeyed the strike order yesterday, and it is confidently believed that the general railway strike has fizzled out. Traffic has not been impeded to any noticeable extent.

PLAYGROUNDS MOVEMENT IS RAPIDLY SPREADING

In the United States and Canada 642 Cities Have Taken up This Work While Others Are Planning To Establish Play-Centers

New York, Jan. 9.—The business of play is now pretty well established in several hundred cities of the United States and Canada, and is carried on at an expenditure of millions of dollars. This extent of the movement to provide playgrounds and leaders to make play and recreation wholesome and efficient is revealed in the annual census just taken by the Playground and Recreation Association of America whose report was made public to-day. Every community of over 5000 inhabitants in this country and Canada was reached by letter and over 1000 cities responded with specific reports on what is or is not being done to aid children and adults in their play and recreation.

Six hundred and forty-two cities reported themselves active in the playground movement and many others said they were alive to needs of this sort and were working to establish play centres. One of the most satisfactory phases of the report is the showing of growth of municipal support. Less than ever is left to private philanthropy for in 111 cities the support is now entirely municipal. There are 115 cities in which the support is divided between municipal and private funds and 110 in which the work is supported wholly by private benefactors.

MILLIONS BEING SPENT.

The census is for the year ending November 1st, 1913, and shows a total expenditure of $5,700,000 in the 342 cities where playground and recreation work is under paid supervision. This is a gain of over $1,500,000 as compared with the year 1912. In sight for further funds authorized bond issues are reported in 20 cities to the total of $2,253,000. The report shows that children in 70 cities have been given new playgrounds during the past year. The cities which became converts to the movement in the previous year had numbered only 43.

Play leaders appear to be now professionally recognized the country over. Twenty-four hundred playgrounds and recreation centres are under regular paid supervision, and more than 6000 persons are making it their profession to serve as leaders of play and general recreation.

It is an enlistment of a thousand new workers in this line during the past year, and efficiency is so generally demanded of these leaders that training classes are being maintained, and in 35 of these centres 2638 students are reported.

LEADERSHIP IS NECESSARY.

Leadership is regarded as the crux of the playground and recreation movement. Almost invariably the communities which have reported failure in the work they started have explained it by the report that they had no leadership. The point is becoming so generally appreciated that the playground and recreation association says that supervised work is certain to be widely extended during this year. "The playground or recreation centre without a competent supervisor or leader has proven to be as ineffective as a school without a teacher," the report adds and it is further predicted that 300 cities now active in playground and recreational work are likely to meet discouragement unless they bring themselves to realise the value of supervision.

NOT HOLIDAY PERIODS ONLY.

The work is by no means confined to vacational periods. In over 60 cities 333 centres were open all year round last year and evenings are utilized more and more for recreation work in the school houses. Altogether the wider use of public schools was seen in 137 cities and results were shown in many ways. The fact that 80 per cent. of all offences against society are committed in the leisure time hours between 11 and 6 p.m. has prompted many communities to open their playground and recreation centres after industrial workers had been released from their day's toil, and last year 152 cities reported 629 centres of various kinds open in the evening. The total average attendance in 21 cities was 62,224, a gain of over 15,000 compared with the previous year's average.

INDUSTRIAL PLAYGROUNDS.

In the establishment of playgrounds by industrial plants there has also been a substantial gain during the year. In 13 cities playgrounds and recreation centres have been maintained by industrial establishments at their own expense or in conjunction with other agencies.

The leaders in the recreation movement, aside from the playground work report 576 workers employed throughout the country. The activities include not only games and athletics, but gardening, woodwork, arts, crafts, singing, skating, dramatics, folk dancing, story telling, pageants, swimming, wading—"everything that will bring joy and happy self-expression—and always with sympathetic, happy, free play leaders to add to the fund and draw even the most shy and awkward into the happy circle."

Y.W.C.A. PHYSICAL TRAINING DEPT.

Physical training plays a very important part in woman's education. Physical training for girls is now considered by schools and colleges as being fully equal in importance to any studies the curriculum includes. This is as it should be. In truth, woman has even greater need of physical training than has man, as she is constructed more delicately and to keep in proper adjustment she must keep the tissues of the body in tone.

Nowadays it is a very common incident to observe in the public press comments on woman's achievements in the field of athletics and outdoor life.

It will be many days before the rank and file of women will be so situated that they can attend such schools, and until that time, it is the duty of every community to provide gymnasia and athletic fields for women and children. This will afford a more certain means of maintaining health and a more effective method of insuring race improvement than can any of the other means.

Mothers, girls, children of Peterboro, the Y.W.C.A. is offering this to you.

We have a good physical director, a large and well equipped gymnasium, shower bath, etc. Each member has a thorough physical examination by the examining physician and her special needs pointed out to the director, and specific work is given.

Everything is done to make the work interesting and at the same time most helpful.

The department has never been self-supporting and yet we are willing to assume this responsibility because we recognize the importance of the work, and we are only hoping it will prove a great benefit to all.

Our second term began Monday, Jan. 5th. A Wednesday morning class at 10.30 for women.

School girls, Monday and Thursday, 4.15. For young women and mothers who are employed during the day, an evening class at 8 o'clock, Monday and Thursday. A Saturday morning and afternoon class for children.

Basket-ball for all classes.

Chairman of the Committee of Physical Work, Y.W.C.A.

RUDDICK NOT WORRIED OVER CATTLE EXPORTS

Buyers Who Have Invaded Canada Since Change in U. S. Tariff Have Cleared Out a Lot of Worn-Out, Discredited Cows.

CORNWALL, Jan. 9.—Yesterday, the second day of the 37th annual convention of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association, was cheese and butter-makers' day. It brought out a considerably larger attendance than did the opening.

In the morning, George H. Barr, chief of the dairy division, Ottawa, presented the report of the judges who handled the excellent display of cheese and butter put on exhibition.

L. A. Zufelt, superintendent of the Kingston Dairy School, gave an inspiring address on "Butter-making and Its Development in Eastern Ontario." He was followed by J. A. Ruddick, dairy commissioner, Ottawa, who spoke on "Some Dairy Figures From the Census of 1911."

At the afternoon session G. G Publow, chief dairy instructor for Eastern Ontario, gave his report showing the advance made since the last convention. Addresses were made by A. J. Ayer and A. C. Wieland, export merchants of Montreal.

Another open meeting was held last night. J. R. Dargavel M.P.P., honorary president, was in the chair and addresses were delivered by J. C. Milligan, M.P.P., Cornwall; Dr. Creelman, president of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph; Andrew Broder, M.P., Morrisburg, and G. A. Putman, director of dairying, Toronto.

Mr. Ruddick said he did not altogether deplore the export of so many head of cattle.

"The swarm of United States drovers which overran Ontario and Quebec when the duty on cattle was removed was not an unmixed evil from the standpoint of the dairy industry," declared Mr. Ruddick.

"They are welcome to our worn-out and discredited cows, which were picked up in rather large numbers. This is a better way for the progressive farmer to dispose of his unprofitable animals than to sell them to his neighbors. The only regret we may have over this export of cattle is for the young, untried heifers, which unprecedented prices induced some farmers to part with."

A VICTIM OF WOLVES

Trapper Slew Nine Before Pack Dragged Him Down

PORT ARTHUR, Jan. 9. — Word has just reached here of a fierce battle with a pack of wolves in which Peter Nigosh, an Indian trapper, was killed in the Lake of the Woods country on Sunday.

The encounter occurred near the Canadian boundary, a few miles from War Road on the C.N.R. Nigosh was returning from his traps, a few miles up the lake, when he was suddenly attacked by the wolves. He had not time to scale the nearest tree, and had only a long hunting knife to protect him. The pack closed in on him, and one after another he slew them with his weapon until nine were dead at his feet. Then, exhausted from his efforts, he fell an easy prey to the survivors of the pack.

On Monday relatives began a search, and early Tuesday morning they discovered the spot where the battle took place, but the only trace of the Indian was his bones stripped clean of flesh.

The nine dead wolves were partly devoured. Wolves are exceptionally numerous in that neighborhood this winter. Because of the absence of snow they are unable to track and kill the deer, and are made fierce and bold by hunger.

Sympathy For the Minister.

A minister recently told this story on himself: One of his first sermons, which he thought an excellent one, was preached in his home church and, seeking a compliment from a prominent member, to draw him out spoke disparagingly of it to him. "Oh, well," was the response, we all knew that you were not feeling well this morning."—Congregationalist.

It is believed he slipped and fell.

CHARGES AGAINST OFFICERS.

British Canteen Scandals Will Be Aired In Court.

LONDON, Jan. 9. — Summonses against 16 British army officers and civilians were granted yesterday by the police magistrate at the Bow street court. The men are called on to appear on Jan. 17 to answer charges in connection with the management of the canteens in army barracks. No names or particulars of the charges were given out for publication, but it is known generally that the army officers concerned belong to the quartermaster's department and that all of them have risen from the ranks, while the civilians summoned to appear are clerks employed by contractors.

Systematic bribery and corruption are reported to have been in progress for some time and are said to have reached such proportions that the War Office decided that the court-martial which it had proposed to call would not have jurisdiction sufficiently wide to deal properly with the scandal.

Dancer's Appeal Saves Chauffeur.

PARIS, Jan. 9.—Morverand, the driver of the automobile which last April plunged from the roadway into the Seine, carrying with it the two children of Isadore Duncan, an American dancer, and their governess, all of whom were drowned, was yesterday sentenced to six months' imprisonment and to pay a fine of $40.

Miss Duncan interceded in behalf of Morverand, not wishing the prosecution to continue. The sentence was suspended.

PARTY IS UNDIVIDED

Liberals in Britain a Unit on Navy Problem Says Buckmaster

LONDON, Jan. 9.—Speaking at Keighley last night, the Solicitor-General, Sir Stanley Buckmaster, made a statement on the armaments question, which, in view of the recent utterances from Mr. Lloyd George and Mr. Winston Churchill, will be regarded as of the highest importance. He assured his vast audience that there was not even a rift in the Liberal ranks on this issue.

Their policy had remained what it had always been — namely, "in the first place to preserve beyond risk the safety of ourselves and our Dominions, and to establish and maintain the unassailable superiority of the fleet at the same time," and with no less emphasis they meant to make it plain that "neither for aggrandisement nor aggression would we add a single unit to our naval strength."

Their object was to show "that as we wished only to maintain our own rights, so we did not seek to menace the rights of others, but desired good-will and friendship to all. It was their hope that this policy, plainly expressed and steadfastly pursued, would in the end exercise a nightmare of suspicion and distrust under the pressure of which the nations of Europe gasped for breath. Nothing could more deeply shock the very soul of Liberalism than that their party should accelerate the rate of increase in armaments or lend themselves to the promotion of a scare between themselves and their fellow-citizens in Europe."

QUEER TRAP FOR LIONS.

Fly Paper Caught and Held the Monster Man Eaters Helpless.

You know what a ferocious, powerful beast the lion is. You can imagine what strong chains it would take to hold him fast. So can you even imagine a lion captured with fly paper? Well, not so very long ago four huge man eating lions were taken in that manner at the village of Gwalior, in India.

It happened that the headman of the village was able to shut the four lions up in a hut into which they had ventured in search of prey. He kept them thus barricaded for nearly two weeks, no one being willing to attempt to capture them. Finally he thought of a scheme that proved as successful as it was original.

He had thousands of sheets of fly paper spread on the ground before the entrance to the hut. Then suddenly the barricades were lifted and the four lions came bounding out—into the fly paper. Of course it stuck to their paws, and of course when they tried to lick it off it stuck fast to their faces and heads. The lions promptly forgot all about human beings and in their wild endeavors to get rid of the fly paper rolled over and over on the ground, rearing and fighting for breath.

Then the headman and his followers rushed forward with long ropes, lassoed the plunging lions and tied them up—fly paper and all!—London Tit-Bits.

OUR GLOBE'S HEAT

In Time, Science Figures, It Will Melt the Planet.

THE PART RADIUM MAY PLAY.

This Mysterious Element, According to Some Theorists, Is Apt to Be the Potent Factor In Bringing Our World to its Prophesied Fiery End.

No man expects to see the end of the world arrive in his day any more than he expects if he is in good health to die tomorrow. Yet there is a widespread and perhaps universal belief that the earth is no more immortal than man, only its term of existence is almost infinitely long compared with his.

Science gives unquestionable support to this view, and every new discovery seems to make more certain the conclusion that our world cannot last forever.

But there are two opposite theories as to the manner in which the earth as the abode of life will come to an end. One assumes that its destruction will be by heat and the other that it will be by cold. The discovery of the mysterious substance radium, which possesses the property of continually giving off heat, has imparted renewed impetus to the first of these theories, which, it may be remarked, as a matter of curiosity, is in accord with the Bible prophecies.

"The heavens shall roll up as a scroll, and the earth shall dissolve with fervent heat."

A most ominous account of the part that radium may play in the ultimate destruction of the earth is given in a book by Professor J. Joly, entitled "Radioactivity and Geology."

The argument on which the assumption that radium or its "mother element," uranium, may finally bring the world to a fiery end is based on the fact that a particle of radium keeps itself continually by some inner process at a temperature nearly 3 degrees above that of its surroundings. In an hour the radium emits enough heat to raise its own weight of water from the freezing to the boiling point. And this store of heat is so vast that a single atom of radium will continue to give it forth at an unvarying rate for about 2,500 years!

If there were only a certain quantity of radium in the earth which could not be renewed, then we might assume that at the end of two or three thousand years this source of heat would be exhausted.

But radium itself appears to be continually produced from uranium, which is an incomparably more abundant substance. So we conclude that the earth may have been heated internally by renewed supplies of radium for untold millions of years and will continue to be thus heated for millions of years to come.

Now, following a line of reasoning which would be too long to enter upon here, Professor Joly shows that if at the present time the nucleus of the earth contains as much as one five-hundred-thousand-millionth of a gram of radium for every gram of ordinary matter then its temperature must be rising at such a rate that in about 100,000,000 years the earth will be entirely melted inside.

We do not know whether there is so much radium as that inside the earth, but from what we observe on its surface we conclude that there very well may be. If there is more then the melting will be accomplished sooner. If there is less it will take longer. But the quantity would have to be very much less than it probably is in order that the heat produced could continue to be radiated away without a disastrous rise in the temperature of the globe.

The same reasoning carried further leads to the conclusion that the earth may have been alternately melted and cooled off several times in the past. When it is in a molten state the free radiation from the surface produces a crust, which thickens to a certain point, and then the inner accumulation of heat brings about another melting from the interior outward.

The phenomenon of new stars is appealed to as lending support to this view. Again and again astronomers have seen a new star burst forth at some point in the sky. Generally it has been assumed that they are due to collisions in the heavens, but it is perhaps equally probable that they arise from the accumulation of heat in some dark celestial body, causing it to flame out into incandescence. Other stars are known to have disappeared, and their disappearance may have been caused by the cooling off of their surfaces.

Evidently we are only just beginning to understand the meaning of life and death in the universe. But we may be sure that what happens elsewhere happens here and that if the stars are not eternal the earth is no more so.—Garrett P. Serviss in New York Journal.

Ready to Die With His Boots On.

On the most trying occasions the coolness of the Duke of Wellington was perfect. The instance given by Colonel Gurwood is quoted in Life.

The duke was once in great danger of being drowned at sea. It was bedtime when the captain of the vessel came to him and said:

"It will soon be all over with us."

"Very well," answered Wellington, "then I shall not take off my boots."

Like the bee, we should make our industry our amusement.—Oliver Goldsmith.

Alpinists Almost Frozen.

GENEVA, Switzerland, Jan. 9.—Five English Alpinists, including a girl and a boy, were found yesterday almost frozen in a snow hut near the summit of the Dale, one of the highest peaks of the Swiss Jura. They had attempted to climb the mountain on skis, and were over taken by a blizzard. The condition of the tourists was serious, but they were transported on sledges to a hotel, and will probably recover.

Youthful Criminals Arrested.

WELLAND, Jan. 9.—Four local boys, all under fourteen years of age, were taken into custody yesterday afternoon by the police. The youths confessed to being responsible for a series of petty thefts ranging over a period of two months. Clothing, copper wire, brass, poultry, iron and postoffice keys were included in their loot. Half a dozen houses and as many business places were entered.

Minister Presents Medals.

BROCKVILLE, Jan. 9.—Hon. Dr. Reid, Minister of Customs, presented at Cardinal the medals of the Royal Humane Society won by Percy Walker and Arthur McLatchie, two boys who saved Rae Relance from drowning last summer.

Asquith to Visit Paris.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—The Chronicle understands that Premier Asquith will visit Paris next week, and suggests that this visit is in connection with the international situation, probably the problem arising out of the Balkan war.

Fired Shot at Birrell.

DUBLIN, Jan. 9.—A bullet was fired through a window of Dublin Castle early Tuesday immediately under the room of Chief Secretary for Ireland, Augustine Birrell.

It is believed that it was fired from an airgun, as the sentries and the police, the detective service of which is nearby, heard no report.

The authorities think it was done as a protest against the constitution of a police commission to enquire into the recent disorders.

F. S. DuMoulin Consecrated.

CLEVELAND, O., Jan. 9.—American and Canadian prelates of the Episcopal Church united yesterday at Trinity Cathedral here in the solemn rite of consecrating Very Rev. Frank S. DuMoulin, for seven years dean of Trinity, as coadjutor Bishop of Ohio.

No Great Eater.

The Rev. Dr. Elderberry had been upon a voyage to the south seas and brought back a young cannibal. The young cannibal was called Beebo. Beebo was turned over to Mrs. Elderberry to be civilized. For full four weeks the good lady instructed her charge in the theoretical principles of Christian doctrine and conduct until she thought he was ripe to put his training into practice.

"And now, Beebo," said she one day, "you shall see that what I have taught you is more than mere words. You are to accompany me to the public kitchen, where I serve fifty poor schoolboys. You shall help me."

But the little cannibal shook his head sadly.

"Oh, missy," he said, "I'm not hungry. The most I could eat would be one very little schoolboy!"—New York Post.

Remains of Joseph's Well.

The remains of the original Joseph's well are to be found at a spot situated directly on the canal route from Schechem to Memphis, about two miles southeast of Cairo. The well itself is in the courtyard of some barracks belonging to the army of occupation. Near by is "the citadel," the second largest mosque in Egypt. The well bears signs of having ben bricked up. Yet it is easy to see that Joseph's discomfiture could not have been so great as one might imagine, for this well, like all the wells of Egypt, is of a circumference much larger than those of today, and Joseph would have been able to exercise his limbs with ease by walking around it. Moreover, when the Nile is low these wells are quite dry.—New York Sun.

DENISON ON LINEUP OF PETES IN TO-NIGHT'S GAME; THE NEW NET GUARDIAN

The Intermediate O.H.A. game tonight at Brock street rink should draw a large number of the fans. Oshawa, with whom the locals will combat, have won two games and lost none and a win for the home team will tie them up. Hard luck has been following in the wake of the local seven since the season opened but they are confident that it is about to be banished. Captain Giroux, who was injured at Bowmanville, will not be on the line-up, but Fred Denison, who has won fame during the last few weeks while playing for Ottawa College in American cities, will fill in at rover. Many of the local followers have been waiting patiently for the return of "Dennie" and they will have an opportunity to see the big boy to-night. The rest of the forward lineup is about as fast as any playing O.H.A. hockey.

Percy Bond and Bradshaw will be on the defence and as both of them were going good in the game with Whitby, they should more than keep the Oshawa crew at bay.

James, the dark-horse net guardian, will be seen in action for the first time, and if all reports are true, he will prove a sensation.

The game is called for 8.15.

BOWLING DATES BACK TO THE MIDDLE AGES

There is hardly a sport which has a more interesting history than bowling. While baseball, football and other branches of athletics have been traced back into the middle ages, it is worthy of note that bowling also has a history which dates back quite as far. A reputable authority, who has made quite a study of the sport, has written a short history of the sport, a brief of which follows:

Bowling seems to have originated in the middle ages. It was at that time purely an outdoor game, as was the rule with everything of that period. The sport was known by a variety of names. It was called "bowles," French "boules" and "careau." These three names seem to have been the most common, but there are others, quite a number purely local. As played at that time, the game was very different from the present sport, but there was much similarity.

Introduced to America.

The game was first introduced into the American continent early in the eighteenth century, and possibly the latter part of the seventeenth. It seems to have been very popular in New York early in the eighteenth century. An old map of that city of the date of 1728 shows a bowling green on the north side of the public garden, situated near the King's farm near the foot of Murray and Warren streets. Also in 1732 the locality called Bowling Green at the foot of Broadway, and known by the same name at the present day was leased from the city government and laid out as a public bowling green. From the time that the sport was introduced into America it has really never died out, though the outdoor game has long since given way to the indoor.

First Indoor Games.

The first mention of the game being played indoor on a public alley is found in William Fitz-Stephens' Survey of London about the twelfth century. The first record of a match game played indoors in America was a game played in the Knickerbocker alleys in New York City, January 1, 1840. Since that time the game has continued to grow in popular favor. Until 1875, when clubs became very numerous, there was much diversity as to the length of the alleys and the size of the pins and balls, as no standard had ever been adopted. Before that time the pins used were larger and heavier than the ones used now, and it was a much easier matter to knock all the pins down by hitting one or two making the score of 300 the limit.

Now in Scientific Order.

In 1875 a large number of bowlers representing a few eastern cities, held a meeting and adopted rules and regulations which at that time answered the purpose. For the next ten or fifteen years, or up to 1890, bowling was a sort of "go-as-you-please" game. In the east they played under the rules of the National Bowling League, while in the west, where a sudden boom started any rule went. Under these conditions, the boom west of Alleghanies lived but a few years. In 1850, or with the birth of the American Bowling Congress, which at once wiped out the old rules and substituted new ones which brought the playing of the game down to a scientific order, things began to wake up again, and the bowler from that day to this has been looked upon as an important factor in sporting circles.

PUCKERINGS FROM PUCK

The Mercantile League games of Monday night should not fail to draw a crowd. The chances are that it will be as classy as O.H.A. hockey as there are several men on the line-ups who are credited with being very fast. The Test and De Laval appear to be the dark horse teams, for no one knows just what calibre their men are.

The games start at eight, nine and ten o'clock. Three hours of fast hockey for 10 cents.

COULD EXPLOITS DEFEAT JUNIORS?

There is some talk in the hockey circles that the Boston Exploits could defeat the Junior O. H. A team. The management of the latter club wishes to state that they would be pleased to make arrangements for such a game as soon as an opportunity presents itself.

BASEBALL

London Free Press: Connie Mack and Hughie Jennings are again fighting it out, but this time it takes the form of recommending a baseball manager for the London Baseball Club. The leader of the world's champions of 1913 has recommended Harry Hoffman, the former Athletic outfielder, as leader for the Tecumsehs, while Hughie Jennings the Detroit Tiger leader, in a letter to President Stevely, says that William P. Coughlin, the former Tiger third baseman would be the right man for the job.

Along with the already big list of men after the management of the London club, including "Doc" Reisling, Matty Matteson and several others, is Lee Garvin, of Lee's Summit, Mo.

Have Experience

Hoffman, since passing from the big show, has managed clubs and played in the Eastern League, Pacific Coast League, and last season managed the Hartford Eastern Association team. Besides being a hustler, with plenty of ability as a good outfielder and a hitter, he comes very highly recommended by Connie Mack, in fact his applicamtion was made by the Athletics' manager.

Bill Coughlin managed the Allentown, Pa., Tri-State League club since he was relieved of his duty at the hot station for the Tigers, and has always been in the first division.

Garvin is a catcher having served in the Western, Southern, Texas and Virginia Leagues.

Matty Matteson, who still thinks he has a chance to pilot the Londons in 1914, wrote President Stevely asking how matters stood regarding the local berth.

CURLING

The required two degrees of frost not being in evidence, the curling matches last night had to be postponed. The matches this evening will in all probability, be postponed.

BOTH WERE STUBBORN.

ets of Good Will Power Was Wasted in Mere Obstinacy.

How much perfectly good, serviceable will power people waste in mere obstinacy! Martha Malone, after working three years for Mrs. Bixby, appeared one morning at Mrs. Wilson's back door and applied for a place.

"Why," said the surprised Mrs. Wilson, "I thought you were working for Mrs. Bixby!"

"I was, mum. But I've quit."

"Is that so?" Mrs. Wilson could not conceal her surprise. "I thought you liked her."

"Indeed I do, mum."

"And I'm sure she liked you."

"I believe she did, mum. Leastwise she always seemed to."

"Well"— Mrs. Wilson was still wondering what the trouble had been.

"Well," said Martha, seeing that some explanation was expected, "you see, it was like this, mum. I always put the blue china plates on the right hand side of the cupboard, and this morning the missus comes along and moves 'em and says, 'Martha, every mornin' for three years you've put the plates on the wrong side and I've had to come along and move them, and I can't stand it any longer.'

"And," said Martha, "I says to her, 'Mrs. Bixby, every mornin' for three years I've put them plates in the right place and you've come and moved them, and then I had to come along an[illegible] them back, and I can't stand it [illegible] longer either.'

"And so I quit."—Youth's Companion.

PECULIAR CLIENTS

Cranks With Whom Lawyers Sometimes Have to Deal.

QUEER CASES OUT OF COURT.

"Ancestor" Clients Are Quite Common, and Their Claims Are Just About as Visionary as Those of Numerous Patent Seekers Are Freakish.

"What is the most peculiar case that has ever been brought to you by a prospective client?" was the question put not long ago by the writer to one of the ablest lawyers in New York.

The lawyer said that probably the oddest client who had ever visited him was a woman about forty years old, who wanted to bring suit against one of the Sunday newspapers for not having printed an account of her latest "social function" on its society page, as she had particularly requested over the telephone.

As the second oddest client, he cited the case of another woman who had come to him in tears and sought to enlist his legal aid in making her husband stop flirting. "The woman assured me that she loved her husband and that she knew her husband loved her, but that he had a habit of winking at every good looking woman he saw," said the lawyer. "When I told her there was no legal redress for her, inasmuch as she said I was a fool if I even thought she or her husband wanted a divorce, she exclaimed that I was the poorest lawyer she had ever heard of and left my office in a rage."

The same question was put to several other lawyers and an unbelievably peculiar assortment of would be clients was revealed through their answers.

One patent lawyer cited the case of a man who asked him to represent him for two months at the patent office in Washington. "I want you to go there, stay there and represent me," he said.

"But," interposed the attorney, "what in the world do you want me to do while I am there?"

The man drew his chair close to the lawyer's and in low tones told the attorney that he had invented an "aeroplane clock," as he called it, and that he wanted him to go to the patent office and prevent any other inventor "from sneaking in a similar invention while the authorities are in a careless mood."

The man seemed to be in his normal senses despite the fact that his highly prized invention was absolutely nothing more than a small watch fastened in a leather case, the sort that may be seen in stores anywhere. When he had imparted this information the lawyer pointed out that there was nothing patentable about his "invention."

"There isn't, eh?" shouted the man. "Indeed there is! Who has ever thought before this of putting a clock in an airship?"

The attorney sought to humor him and said, "Wouldn't a watch in the aviator's pocket do as well?"

The man jumped up. "That's just the point!" he cried. "It would not do as well, because it might fall out."

Against such logic the attorney said he found himself helpless, and he told the man he feared the case was too difficult for him to handle.

Another strange client who visited a patent lawyer wanted to secure a patent on a "flower clothespin." The latter was an ordinary wooden clothespin with a little wire point on top. On the latter fresh flowers might be stuck, thereby, according to the inventor, "giving the clotheslines the appearance of flower gardens." He saw a fortune from the sale of his pins in cities.

When the lawyer assured him that besides the fact that there was more sentimentality than practicability to his invention, a pin stuck in the end of the wood would serve just as effectively as the "invented" piece of wire, the client threatened to bring suit against him for "violation of confidence."

Another patent lawyer said that the oddest client who had ever come to him was a young woman who wanted his help in getting a patent, literally, on an "idea."

"What is your idea?" asked the lawyer curiously.

The young woman refused to tell him, saying that she hesitated to divulge the nature of her idea until it had been secured by patent. "I won't trust anybody with it, not even you," she told the lawyer.

Like the famous Anneke Jans heirs, there are numerous strange cases of so called "ancestor clients" to be had from the lawyers.

One of the oddest of these is cited by a New York lawyer of wide practice. "Not long ago," he says, "there came to my office a woman who insisted that she owned the lower part of the Hudson river, having inherited it from Henry Hudson, her ancestor, 'by right of discovery.'

"If this seems an exaggerated case I shall cite a second one that is stranger still. Last winter a man who said he had been recommended to me by a 'spirit' at a seance he had attended several nights previous, wanted me to prove his title to the land upon which the subtreasury building stands. He told me that it had been given to an ancestor of his by George Washington out of gratitude for the former's loan of a coat during one of the campaigns of the Revolutionary war. Curious claimants to land through ancestors are regular visitors to lawyers' offices. There are hundreds of stories about them, and the two quoted are fair criteria."—New York Tribune.

Successful Disappearance.

One of the most successful disappearances on record was of William Howe. Howe was a successful tradesman in Jermyn street, and one morning in 1706 he left his wife, telling her that he had business in the city. He never came back, and after some years an act of parliament was specially passed to enable Mrs. Howe to administer her husband's estate. Then one evening in 1723 the "widow" received a letter requesting an interview. Mrs. Howe duly kept the appointment—and discovered her husband. He had been living in disguise in the same neighborhood all the time, he explained, and keeping a close eye upon the movements of his wife. It is said that the reunited couple lived happily ever afterward.—London Standard.

The Only Cure.

Mrs. Keepup made it her private and particular business to have whatever her neighbor had, whether it was a question of chickens or diseases, so when Mrs. Gotthere complained to her one day of insomnia Mrs. Keepup was ready for her. "I have it, too, very badly at times." "What do you do for it, Mrs. Keepup?" "Why, I have never found anything that did me any real good except to go to bed and sleep it off."

Very Strange.

Mr. Fuss (furiously)—It is mighty strange you can't look after things a little better. Here I want to shave, and there isn't a drop of hot water here. Mrs. Fuss (icily)—It is strange. Why, that's the one thing I've never been out of since I married you!—Exchange.

Danger Not Imminent.

"Better go home, Jimmy. Your mother is looking for you."

"Has she got the hairbrush with her?"

"No."

"Then I guess I'll play awhile longer."—Pittsburgh Post.

One Mind.

"Henry," called Mrs. R. over the partition in the voting booth, "how are you going to vote on amendment No. 5? He—I am going to vote "yes." She—No, you're not; you're going to vote "no." I have changed my mind. —Life.

Human experience, like the stern lights of a ship at sea, illumines only the path which we have passed over.—Coleridge.

TO PREVENT WASTE.

Niagara Fruit Growers Discuss Loss In Peach Crop.

ST. CATHARINES, Jan. 9. — The problem of preventing a repetition of the great waste of peaches of last year was laid before the Niagara Peninsula Fruit Growers' Association at the annual meeting yesterday afternoon by Major Roberts, the president, who suggested the plan of drying the peaches for later shipment. Major Roberts regretted the fact that many growers paid more attention to quantity than to quality in their shipments. He contended that fruit growers required a business system even more than a manufacturing concern.

Mr. F. W. McIntosh, the transportation expert of the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association, suggested for the benefit of the growers and consumers that the speed of fruit cars be regulated by act of Parliament.

$100,000 FOR ONE SCHOOL AT BERLIN

Peterboro' Board Build Two Schools for $80,000

Mr. B. F. Ackerman, acquainted the other members of the Board of Education last night with some facts he learned while visiting in Berlin.

Mr. Ackerman inspected the new school, which has been erected at a cost of $100,000. It has eight class rooms. Here in Peterboro, two modern schools have been erected at a total cost of $80,000 and each school had twelve rooms. Added to this, it can be said that the systems installed are equally as good as those at Berlin.

Dr. Morrison said the aim of the Board had been to provide the very best for the children and at the lowest cost. He felt that the Board had succeeded.

C.P.R. HOLDS OVER 1914 CONSTRUCTION WORK TILL LATER

Last Year's Extensions Are Not Sufficiently Advanced to Permit of New Plans Being Pushed Forward.

MONTREAL, Jan. 9.—Discussion involving expenditures in the west by the C.P.R. have been carried on in Montreal during the past few days between Sir Thomas Shaughnessy and George Bury, with the result that appropriations have been passed.

A statement issued last night by the C. P. R. states:

"The position this year is somewhat different from that of former years; 1913 was a year when large and comprehensive schemes for extensions, betterments and double-tracking the company's system were pushed. These schemes cannot be completed in a day or two, and must be carried to a certain point before further extensions are undertaken, so that the expenditures estimated for in the western appropriations of 1914 are almost entirely confined for the present to the compiction of track-laying, etc., on grades already built, on branch lines, extensions and double-tracking, the latter of which will eventually connect with Vancouver and to the building of the Rogers' Pass tunnel, which will be pushed with vigor.

"So far as grading is concerned, no less than 600 miles are now ready for the rails, and there is extensive terminal work at Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver, the completion of which has been provided for.

"The consideration of the new construction will come up again later in the year, when further data has been secured and there will be then another conference with the president."

Mr. Bury said that under the direction of Sir Thomas Shaughnessy C.P.R. expenditures had always been directed in accordance with the actual exigencies of traffic and with the building up of western Canada, and it was owing to this comprehensive policy that the C.P.R. in 1913 was able to move such a large grain traffic so expeditiously, at a time when the great strain of moving the harvest came. The facilities provided in rolling stock were such that car requirements in other directions were able to be met promptly and other traffic moved currently as well as the grain.

SLIGHT RALLY IS SHOWN

The Attendants of Sir James Whitney Seemed More Hopeful Last Night

NEW YORK, Jan. 9.—While the official announcement from the bedside of Sir James Whitney, the Ontario Premier, at the Hotel Manhatten, last night was that his condition was unchanged, there was evident among his faithful attendants a feeling of optimism.

The evening bulletin, issued at 9 o'clock, by Dr. R. A. Pyne, read:

"Sir James has had a rather restless day; otherwise his condition is unchanged."

Within an hour after the issue of this announcement, Dr. Pyne stated that his patient was once more resting comfortably. The Minister of Education was down in the hotel rotunda to spend an hour reading the newspapers and chat with friends, while Horace Wallis, the Premier's secretary, had gone out for a stroll. The simultaneous absence of the two who watch over their chief so closely was, in itself, a sign that things looked brighter. Both, however, insisted that conditions in the sick room had not changed.

Dr. Pyne explained that the restlessness referred to in the bulletin had come late in the afternoon. He did not regard it as an alarming symptom, however, nor did it give rise to any ground to state that a decided improvement had taken place.

The doctor also said that the periods of delirium still manifested themselves, though since Monday Sir James had been conscious most of the time, and had made enquiries at times about details of matters left unfinished at his office when he left for the south. He was apparently satisfied with the assurance that everything had been attended to, and there was nothing requiring his attention.

In talking over the case, Dr. Pyne remarked that he had been well satisfied with the patience manifested by Sir James. For a man who has always been so active and impetuous in his movements, he has submitted with remarkable docility to the requirements of his physicians.

ASK LIGHT SENTENCES.

Judge In Trial of Zabern Officers Suggests 7 and 3 Days.

STRASSBURG, Germany, Jan. 9.—Very light sentences were yesterday proposed by the judge advocate, acting as prosecutor of the German officers now under trial by court-martial, on an indictment charging them with illegal assumption of authority, wrongful imprisonment, and the invasion of private houses during the recent serious disorders between the military and civilians of Zabern, Alsace.

At the conclusion of the testimony, and the pleas for the prosecution and defence, the judge advocate suggested that Col. Von Reuter, commander of the 99th Infantry, should be sent to jail for seven days on the charge of wrongful imprisonment, while, for Lieut. Schad a sentence of three days in jail for assault, was sufficient. The other charges were dropped.

The verdict is to be pronounced on Jan. 10.

The English Penny.

The English penny has had a good long inning. For over six centuries it was practically the only English coin, for while the florin did not appear until 1343, the penny was introduced by Offa, king of Mercia, who took as a model a coin struck by the father of Charlemagne.

This penny of Offa's was a silver coin, and it was followed in 1257 by one of gold, and it was not until the time of George III. that copper pence were struck, the present bronze not coming until Victoria had been over twenty years on the throne.—London Chronicle.

TO-NIGHT'S PROGRAM AT "THE GRAND"

The motion pictures being shown at "The Grand" are gaining popular favor nightly. The large audiences at both the 7.30 and 9.00 o'clock performances last night thoroughly enjoyed the program offered and the splendidly clear, steady pictures which are made possible by the use of the "New Simplex" machine, are being most favorably commented upon.

For tonight's program the offering will be:

"Nihilist Vengeance" (special feature), in two reels.
"Friendly Neighbors" comic film.
"The Light Woman" drama.
"The Younger Sister", drama.
"A News Item" comic film.
"A Bachelor's Finish" comic film.

On account of "The Girl of Eagle Ranch" being booked to play at The Grand tomorrow, Saturday, matinee and evening, tonight will be the last time this week that motion pictures will be shown. However, on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday of next week pictures will again be shown, the other three nights being booked for travelling companies.

SIEGES OF PERONNE.

They Won For the Town the Cross of the Legion of Honor.

The town of Peronne, not far from Amiens, has had the distinction of being decorated with the Legion of Honor and can place the cross so much sought after by every Frenchman in its coat of arms and on its seal.

Peronne has two memorable sieges to its credit, the first in 1536 and the other during the Franco-Prussian war.

During the siege of 1536 Estournel, governor of the town, held out for more than a month against the Comte de Nassau, lieutenant of the Emperor Charles V. At the end of that time Nassau, who had failed in three assaults, gave up the siege.

The siege of Peronne during the war of "soixante-dix" was one of the bloodiest in history. The Prussians surrounded it on Nov. 30, 1870, and the town held out until Jan. 9, when with half the town in flames, no means of fighting the fire, not to mention the lack of food and drinking water, it capitulated.

The fire was so intense that the bells in the church towers were melted and the stacked silver pieces in the bank were turned into ingots. Six hundred and seventy houses were destroyed by fire and shells, while 3,000 soldiers and citizens were taken prisoners.—New York Sun.

FIRST IROQUOIS TREATY.

It Was Made Between the Indians and English in 1664.

The first treaty between the English and the Iroquois was made on Sept. 24, 1664, and ushered in a friendship that continued for more than a century. The Iroquois had been alternately at war and peace for sixty years, and the English found their dusky allies valuable in the war with the French for North American supremacy.

The treaty with the Iroquois was one of the first official acts of the English governor, who earlier in the same month had taken over the Dutch possessions and changed the name of New Amsterdam to New York and that of Fort Orange to Albany. In 1693 and again three years later the French invaded the Iroquois country, and the redskins lost half of their warriors. In 1713 the French gave up all claim to the Iroquois, and peace reigned for a time, but in 1755 the warriors joined the English in the war for the conquest of Canada.

When the American Revolution broke out the Iroquois adhered to the crown. At the conclusion of the war most of the Iroquois took refuge in Canada.—Philadelphia Ledger.

TO BUILD MONUMENT

American Peace Centenary Committee Will Give One to Ottawa

OTTAWA, Jan. 9.—At a meeting of the executive of the Canadian Peace Centenary Association yesterday afternoon it was announced that part of the celebration will be the erection of a Parkman and Champlain memorial in Ottawa. This memorial will be the gift of the general committee of the American Peace Centenary Association and will be quite apart from any memorial to be erected by the various Governments.

This announcement was made in a telegram from John A. Stewart, chairman of the executive sub-committee of the American committee.

"Our committee," telegraphed Mr. Stewart, "have acted favorably on a motion to present the people of Canada with a Parkman and Champlain memorial, to be erected in Ottawa. An eminent sculptor will undertake to have the memorial completed by next spring."

Action was taken in regard to a number of suggestions in regard to the celebration. A resolution was passed suggesting that the final gathering of the celebration should take place at Niagara Falls.

The question of the erection of bridges and other joint memorials was referred to the Canadian members of the joint international committee for report.

A COURSE IN RELIGION

Dr. Seath Has Plan to Teach Bible to Children

TORONTO, Jan. 9. A new idea in education, embracing an examination after two years' study along the line of religious knowledge, is being laid before the Government and the public by Dr. John Seath, superintendent of education in Ontario. The novelty lies in the absence of school instruction. All is to be done at home or in the Sunday school.

The idea is to train the youthful mind in Bible knowledge and in morality, and the attitude of the different churches must be gained before the matter is laid seriously before the Government. At the present no system of religious instruction in schools is prescribed.

The examination he counts upon as an incentive and suggests a two year course to begin in 1915. It would merely be a study without prejudice of the Bible in its different phases. A select committee should pass on the examination. Morality follows the same method also.

NERVOUSNESS AT REGINA

To-night is One Set for Threatened Rioting of Unemployed.

REGINA, Jan. 9.—Not knowing whether to expect murder, rapine and arson, or demonstrations with fiery talk and fiery banners, or merely a frost, Regina is on the anxious seat to-day in regard to the "unemployed" situation. The unemployed are not saying anything, so the authorities are preparing for any situation they may be called upon to face.

The entire police force wil be on duty to-night when the unemployed have threatened to start their deadly work. The mounted police are ready to turn out and assist if anything serious develops.

The excitement is due to a letter said to have been written by "Jerry Miner," the alleged leader of the "unemployed gang," threatening Regina with fire and violence if work is not found for the unemployed, and warning women and children to keep off the streets on Friday night.

Gibraltar Has Red Rain.

A curious phenomenon was witnessed at Gibraltar recently. Lurid coppery masses of cloud suddenly shrouded the heavens over the rock and surrounding bay. Then a heavy shower of rain, the color of reddish mud, fell, leaving a pinkish stain in many parts of the town.

Following the red rain a yellow rainstorm was experienced. Vessels arriving there reported having noted the same phenomenon. The inhabitants depend on rainwater for drinking purposes and concern is expressed regarding the sediment in the tanks.

It is conjectured that in a sandstorm in the neighboring African wilds particles of sand had been gathered into the air and that they fell with the rain.

Taste and Temperature.

The sense of taste resides in little flask shaped pockets embedded in the skin of the surface of the tongue and in the upper part of the throat. Each of these bulbs has a fibril of a nerve connecting it with the larger nerves of its region. Anything to be tasted must be in a dissolved or gaseous condition so as to reach the interior of the bulbs, and differences in taste depend upon the varying intensity with which the impression is transmitted through the nerves. It is not surprising, then, that taste is much influenced by temperature and may temporarily be stopped by extreme heat or cold. The sense of taste is strongest at a temperature between 50 and 60 degrees F.

Murderer of Manager Arnold is Aided by Friends

Was Given Revolver and Automobile Took Him Away

Special Correspondence

WINNIPEG, Jan. 10.—John Krafchenke, the murderer of Manager Arnold of the Bank of Montreal at Plum Coulee, escaped from Winnipeg jail this morning at 2.20 and has not been recaptured.

After being committed for trial yesterday Krafchenke was confined in the police station on the second floor in a room known as the "old kitchen." Constables Reid and Flower, the former of whom came from the Hamilton police force, guarded him. Suddenly at 2.20 this morning the prisoner drew an automatic revolver with which he had been provided by his friends. He pointed it at the guards' heads and backed to the window. Then producing a rope, also presumably furnished by friends, he lowered himself into a lane outside and vanished in the darkness.

Somebody had an automobile waiting for him and he was whisked away. James Tomlinson, outside saw him escape and raised an alarm but Krafchenko had completely disappeared. Deputy Chief Newton says he expects an arrest will shortly be made on the charge of abetting an escape.

Mrs. Anderson, of Otonabee, Escaped With Severe Bruises.

A rather exciting runaway occurred yesterday afternoon about four o'clock on Hunter street, when a horse owned by a Mrs. Anderson, of Otonabee, took fright at the Munro House yard and dashed madly to the street and towards the Hunter street bridge. About half way to the bridge Mrs. Anderson was thrown out, but fortunately escaped being injured except for a few severe bruises.

After continuing on its course through East City, the animal was caught in front of the Albion Hotel. The cutter was badly damaged.

DOCTORS HOLD CONSULTATION

No Change in Condition of Premier Whitney To-day.

Canadian Press Despatch.

New York, Jan. 10.—The arrival of Dr. McPhedran, of Toronto, from Montreal this morning started two rumors. First that his coming presaged the removal of Sir James to Toronto with Doctors Pyne and McPhedran watching him on the journey. This could not be confirmed. Another was that Sir James had had a relapse and Dr. McPhedran was to operate. Dr. Pyne positively denied this rumor. Later it was learned that Dr. Biggs and Dr. Pyne had thought it desirable to have a consultation with a physician who was familiar with the early stages of the Premier's heart trouble. The three immediately went into consultation, exchanging notes, after which an examination of the patient was held and a bulletin issued announcing that there was no change in his condition.

TWO LITTLE GIRLS WHO RUN A REAL NEWSPAPER

PRINTING THEIR NEWSPAPER
RUTH GRUTE
GENE BULGER

"Extra! Extra! Holiday number of the Bugle-Star. Only one cent a copy."

Thus shouted the enterprising girl editors, Ruth Grute and Gene Bulger, each twelve years old, who recently offered the most ambitious number of their little weekly to the shoppers in Manhattan. Their paper is still in its first volume, having been started in September.

The receipts from the paper average from $2 to $3 a week, and the editors admit that every penny they take in is clear profit. Their reportorial staff comprises the two owners, who are also the printers, business managers, editorial writers, copy readers, "newsboys" and bookkeepers.

"Any grown up newspaper owner who desires to learn our recipe for news gathering, publishing and profit making may have it," declared the young girls.

Their list of subscribers covers several States and even a few foreign countries. There are more than two hundred regular subscribers. To those living in the neighborhood the girls deliver the papers themselves. They strap on real "newsies'" bags and sally forth, each on her own route.

PROGRESS MADE IN CARE OF TUBERCULAR PATIENTS AND EDUCATION ALONG LINES OF PREVENTION REPORTS DISTRICT NURSE

Medical Men Will Confer on Advisability of Introducing Fumigating Methods

District Nurse Says She Has Been Treated With Kindness and Consideration By People

Some Interesting Cases Are Given, Showing the Progress of the Patients

More than considerable interest was evinced by the members of the Peterboro Health Association at their annual meeting held yesterday afternoon in the Council Chamber.

The matter of disbanding the Ladies' Aid of the Association was referred to the Executive to deal with. Mrs. Kendry contended there was no use of the Ladies' Aid being in existence as it was impractical owing to insufficient work for them.

It was decided that a deputation of medical men of the city confer as to the advisability of fumigation methods being introduced.

Miss Mercier pointed out the great necessity of having the homes of deceased patients fumigated. Sanitary Inspector Spence who was present, stated that this matter should be handed over to the Board of Health to deal with the matter, but he was willing that the medical men should confer upon the matter.

Miss Mercier, the district nurse, reported as follows:

To the Chairman and Members
Of the Supervision Committee,
Of the Peterboro Health Ass'n.

In submitting to you my report as District Nurse of the Peterboro Health Association for the past six months, I am pleased to state that much progress has been made in the care of tubercular patients and in the education of the people along preventative lines.

Since my appointment last July I have had one hundred patients under my supervision and during that period I have made 945 visits.

A question that has frequently been asked, and one that has no doubt been uppermost in the minds of many citizens who are most interested in my work is "How has the District Nurse been received in the homes of Peterboro?" The idea having been a new one as far as this city was concerned, the appointment of a nurse was looked upon with a somewhat skeptical eye. However, it affords me the greatest pleasure to tell you that the attitude of the public towards the nurse has been such as to be most encouraging and stimulates one to strive for even better results than heretofore.

When I commenced my work here I was told that I would find conditions quite different from that I had been accustomed to in other fields. Wherever I have gone I have met with kindness and consideration. Instructions and suggestions have always been heeded, although in some instances not strictly adhered to in the manner one would wish, the majority of people have done their best under trying circumstances. But there is yet room for improvement. In spite of a ready willingness to do what one advises, there is often a tendency on the part of those in care of patients, to relax in the proper observance of preventative measures. According the nurse must ever be on the watch to guard against this slipping back into careless habits.

A striking example of this occurred only yesterday. In calling on one of my patients I was horrified to see the grandchild of an advanced case actually drinking out of the patient's glass to the apparent amusement of the family.

In the home of another advanced case, conditions were anything but favorable for a recovery. She was being cared for by an inebriate brother. The left-overs from the patient's tray instead of being burned, were fed to the dog. Her dishes were washed with those of the family, and the family's milk was kept in the patient's room, the excuse being given that it was the coolest room in the house.

It is in cases like these that impress one with the urgent need of proper places where they can receive care and attention necessary to their welfare and remove causes of danger in the homes.

Where instructions have been followed to the nurse's satisfaction, the results have been most gratifying.

Recently the father of a small family lived in crowded unsanitary surroundings, was moved out of doors on a very smal front verandah with improvised curtains and a comfortable bed. The patient improved steadily and in due time returned to work.

Another significant case, a man of advanced years, in a small, untidy foul-smelling room, was also removed to the verandah, very homely but adequate necessities were devised. Under this treatment the patient gained five pounds.

Still another case, a family of five, was living in two rooms, the father and one of the children being tub-

EXTRACTS FROM REPORT OF THE GENERAL DISTRICT NURSE

It is the trained nurse in her visit to the home of the poor who can do more than anyone else to educate the housewife in domestic hygiene.

The baby's first year is a most important one in forming habits and building a firm foundation for health, not only in childhood, but in adult life; food, regular habits, clothing, sleep, exercise, must receive careful attention from the first.

The general nurse has found in many cases that the people have not the knowledge of these things that they should have, but they were willing to learn.

◆ ◆ ◆

An Italian baby, ill with pneumonia, was found in a room with all the windows nailed down for the winter. No ventilation whatever in the house, just because they did not know the importance of fresh air. These people were willing to be shown how to carry out the doctor's orders and kept the windows open day and night.

We had quite a number of babies ill with diarrhoea, due mostly to improper feeding over feeding and lack of fresh air. In many homes after the child was normal the mothers followed the advice.

◆ ◆ ◆

Obstetric Cases—Patient was visited twice a day until the third day, and then once a day until the tenth day. In these cases we found that the mothers did not realize the baby's need of regularity in feeding, sleeping and bathing, or of fresh air.

◆ ◆ ◆

The house in which one patient lived recently was reported to the Health Department and had been condemned, the shack containing just two rooms, 7 x 9. The landlord has been getting six dollars a month for this shack, which is absolutely unfit for human beings to live in.

◆ ◆ ◆

A woman aged 96 years, lived all alone, and was ill; nurse had her removed to Protestant Home. Subsequently she was taken to the hospital and died there.

There have been quite a number of cases who were operated upon in hospital and on returning home, had nurse give treatment daily. All have recovered nicely.

◆ ◆ ◆

In the case of small operations done in the home, the same preparations are made as would be in the hospital. Everything is in readiness for the doctor when he arrives. All the linen used is sterilised by the nurse and the surgical dressings are provided by the doctor. These cases require the nurse's attendance for only a short time each day.

General District Nurse.

MRS. W. HENRY IS BEREAVED

Her Brother Wm. Downer, Died Suddenly at Mariposa

Mrs. W. Henry of the Children's Shelter, has received the sad news that her brother William Downer of Mariposa, died suddenly late yesterday afternoon. The news was quite a shock to Mrs. Henry, as her brother had always enjoyed the best of health.

He was one of the leading farmers of the district, and was widely known and highly esteemed. He was born in the township of Fenelon, fifty-eight years ago, and all his life had been spent around Fenelon and Mariposa. In politics he was a staunch Conservative and he was one of the strongest supporters of Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia and Defence.

The late Mr. Downer leaves a widow and two children, Miss Ida Downer and Mr. Austin Downer, both at home. His brothers are John, Omemee, Thomas, Fenelon, Beecher, Woodville, Albert, Harriston, and George at Toronto. The sisters are Mrs. Geo. McGee, Manvers, Mrs. W. Henry, city, Mrs. Jas. Shea, Woodville, Mrs. Jas. Mark, Lindsay and Mrs. Wm. Eyres, Lindsay.

REWARD IS PAID FOR THE RECOVERY OF AN OVERCOAT

Another chapter of the Giles theft case, which caused considerable excitement last spring, was staged today.

It will be remembered that David Johnston offered a reward of $25 for information of a valuable fur coat which was stolen by the Giles brothers.

Dr. Amys, who had suffered from thefts, set a trap and by the use of an electric bell he was the means of the prisoners being arrested.

To-day the reward was paid to the Chief for Dr. Amys. The money will be paid to the doctor, who in turn will give it to the Children's Aid Society.

HELP WILFRED GRENFELL IN HIS LABORS

"The heroes are not all dead." Thus spoke a newspaper a few days ago with reference to the work of Dan Crawford in Central Africa. There is however a danger that the more heroic a man is, and the more devoted to his work in the lonely places of the earth, the more likely he is to be forgotten at home.

Some years ago Mr. Wilfred Grenfell visited our city and spoke to an audience that filled the Opera House, about his work on the bleak and barren coast of Labrador. In every breast there was the conviction that this was indeed a man—A Christian and a Hero. We cannot hear him often, but we do know that never was his work more blest and deserving than at the present hour.

The Deep Sea Mission has made an appeal to the people of Peterboro each year through the Ministerial Association and by the courtesy of the daily newspapers and the response has been prompt and generous.

This year it was decided to approach the public in the month of January, rather than in December, as that month is one of extra work and great expense.

The annual appeal is now made. The Examiner, Review and Times will receive subscriptions and acknowledge the same in their columns. The treasurer, Mrs. James Wood, will send a receipt to each contributor. This appeal has the most hearty approval of the Ministerial Association, and each day for one week items concerning the work of Dr. Grenfell will appear in these columns from the local ministers.

Do not delay. To give promptly is to encourage others to follow.

It is earnestly hoped that the name of every friend of former years will appear on this list with many new ones.

No amount is too small to be used to advantage or too small to be appreciated.

PETERBOROUGH, SATURDAY, JAN. 10, 1914.

OUR PUBLIC LIBRARY.

MR. F. M. DELA FOSSE'S annual report to the Public Library Board, which appeared in The Review on Thursday, ought to be carefully studied by those who have the intellectual interests of the people at heart. A Public Library is, or should be, an indicator of the trend of public thought. The city librarian is in a position to feel the pulse and examine the tongue of the reading public. A great deal depends upon the palate as to what people will choose to eat and drink. Men and women as a rule eat what they are fond of; they may have a depraved taste, but it is what they like and they must have the kind of food that suits their palate.

A great many people, the majority of patrons of libraries, are addicted to fiction. It will be noted that out of a total of 51,285 books circulated during the year 44,988 were works of fiction. It is gratifying to notice that there was a falling off in this department and an increase in the circulation of more substantial literature. Not that there is anything very terrible in the fact that most people read fiction, the hard realities of life tend to drive readers to works of unreality. People who deal every day with facts are glad to get away from them in their liesure moments and surround themselves with a world that "never was on sea or land." Fiction is one of the blessings of our intellectual life, but too much fiction inthe form of novels is not wholesome and some of the novels that are turned out these days are positively pernicious.

In Mr. Dela Fosse's tabulated statement he classifies the books as follows:—Fiction, biography, philosophy, religion, sociology, philology, arts, literature, travel and history. It will be seen that "literature" is in a class of its own; to many the designation will appear rather ambiguous. What is literature? Our librarian informs us that "literature," in this case, stands for poetry and essays; but he would scarcely exclude biography, history, travel or even fiction from the title. We doubt whether essays and poetry have any more claim to be called literature than any other kind of writing. There are essays and poetry which are not literature, and there are books of fiction, biography and philosophy which are the highest literature.

Our Library is one of the best organized and efficiently managed in Ontario. Our librarian is not a man who is acquainted with the outsides of books merely. He is no mere tabulator; there is scarcely a book on the shelves that he does not know something about, and most of them he knows all about. His fortnightly papers which appear in The Review on "The Pleasures of Reading," prove him to be thoroughly versed in all that he writes about. This is an essential qualification in a librarian who is to regulate the circulation of literature in a community. The report refers to the relations between the library and the newspapers. These relations should be of the closest, for a newspaper can do much to create interest in reading and direct the public in what it should read. The Board is to be congratulated upon the year's work.

NATIONAL HOUSEKEEPING.

SOME INTERESTING figures are given in the report of Mr. G. G. Publow, chief dairy instructor for Eastern Ontario. "During the past year there were 882 cheese factories in operation in this district, 13 less than the year before. Before the season closed 20 of these shut down on account of their patrons shipping milk or cream to the cities, and thereby making factory operations impossible and impracticable. At the present time about 7 per cent. of the total number of factories are equipped with cool curing rooms. These 882 factories from May 1st to November 1st received a total of 921,743,762 pounds of milk. This was contributed by 30,885 patrons, from 281,489 cows. An analysis of the figures shows the approximate yield was 3,274 pounds per cow, or an average of 18.2 pounds per day. Records show that 10.77 pounds of milk were utilized to make one pound of cheese, and on the whole this total quantity of milk made 88,196,383 pounds of cheese. This shows a decrease of 135,000 boxes over the previous year, which is attributed to the dry summer and a greater production of milk and cream for other purposes."

1,600 of those who sent milk to the cheese factories in 1912 have either shipped their milk or cream to the cities or have patronized butter factories in 1913. Then quite a lot of milk and butter have gone over the line since the revision of the United States tariff. Mr. Publow, speaking to the farmers upon this position, urged them to stick by the cheese and butter-making industry.

There is no doubt but that the farmers of Ontario will have to get together in order to meet the new situation, not only with regard to the changes brought about by the Underwood Tariff but also in regard to the changes in dealing with milk. Cheese factories in some districts are having a bad time and in others the cheese factory is a thing of the past, owing to the tempting market of the cities for cream. It is no use trying to keep up cheese factories at a loss, or upon small profits, when a better market is open. Most of the cheese made at these factories goes out of the country. Canadians—very foolishly—don't like cheese, or they don't know the value of cheese as a food. But they do like butter and cream, and they are ready to pay good prices. Farmers ueed not worry over the decline in the cheese export if they can get the same money by selling their milk or its product at home.

If the present exports of milk product in the form of cheese was turned into our cities in the form of butter and cream there would be no need to importing butter from New Zealand and other places. The cost of living would be reduced, the farmers would get more in touch with city life and the city people would take more interest in the farmer. A man who eats New Zealand butter cannot be expected to be a thorough Canadian. When our home markets are properly protected in all agricultural products we can then consider the outsider. A little more plain domestic economy in these things would help considerably in our national housekeeping.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

"NATURAL GAS has been struck under the heart of Toronto." We had suspected this for a long time. It has been escaping through the lungs—i.e, the newspapers—of that city for a considerable period.

RADIUM AND CANCER are keeping close company just now—in the press. First it is stated that radium is a cure for cancer, and then it is said that radium is no good for cancer, that the so-called cures are a fraud; then lastly, it is affirmed that "radium is an absolute cure for cancer." Let us hope that the matter will remain at that.

A REPORT comes from Port Arthur stating that an Indian trapper was attacked and devoured by wolves while out hunting. The man, it seems, had disposed of nine of the beasts with the aid of his hunting knife, but as the pack was a large one he was overcome with exhaustion and his friends found his bones picked clean, while the nine dead wolves were also half eaten.

DR. RUSSELL H. CONWELL, of Grace Baptist Temple, refused a salary of $15,000 offered by the Calvary Baptist Church, New York. He now receives $10,000. Dr. Conwell was formerly of Toronto. The Toronto Star regards this as a sufficiently important and startling piece of news as to publish the reverend gentleman's photograph. The world is growing better, and ministers are doubtless improving along with it.

DR. CREELMAN, THE PRESIDENT of the Ontario Agricultural College, has been saying some sensible things at Cornwall, he said: "The function of our agricultural college is to take bright fellows from the farms of Ontario and make better farmers of them. There is only one place to learn farming, and that is on the farm."

These words were uttered as a warning to city young men who think all that is necessary to make farmers of themselves is to take a course at an agricultural college.

M. CLEMENCEAU, the brilliant writer and editor, prints a scathing criticism of Chancellor Lloyd George's recent anti-armament interview published in a London paper. "Great Britain no longer plays," he says, "the imposing diplomatic role that she did in former days. The present Cabinet is at work bursting every seam at a moment of supreme danger, when everything indicates that Turkey egged on by Germany, is plotting a war for the near future. Lloyd George, the Welsh mountebank, plays tricks on his coleagues by pronouncing in favor of a reduction of armaments. Such a project, if it were anything more than a chimera, would be the final preparation for the defeat of the British people."

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

The Curse of Alderman.

Montreal Star.

Every country has its curse and Montreal has its aldermen.

Prejudice.

The Globe.

Hamilton's clergymen have condemned the tango without even trying it.

Who Made the West!

Ottawa Journal.

The Western Grain Growers figure that the naval question should be submitted to the people in a referendum. The Western Grain Growers might stop and figure that the British navy secured their land and the people of the East made it possible for them to settle in the West. Some of the Western farmers now figure that they owe nothinig to either Britain or the East.

The Old Question.

Daily News.

In a week Parliament will be in session. Does The Globe think Sir Wilfrid Laurier should continue to take a salary as leader of the Opposition? It must speak soon if its warning is to be effective. We all remember that the organ broke its heart over the payment of a salary to Mr. Borden when he led the Conservative party in Opposition.

Partnership.

"For woman is not undeveloped man,
But diverse: Could we make her as the man
Sweet love were slain: his dearest bond is this,
Not like to like, but like in difference.
Yet in long years liker must they grow:
The man be more of woman, she of man;
He gain in sweetness and in moral height
Nor lose the wrestling thews that throw the world;
She mental breadth, nor fail in childhood care,
Nor lose the childlike in the larger mind;
Till at last she set herself to man
Like perfect music unto noble words:
And so these twain, upon the skirts of Time
Sit side by side, full summ'd in all their powers,
Dispensing harvest, sowing the To-be,
Self-reverent each, and reverencing each,
Distinct in individualities,
But like each other ev'n as those who love.
Then comes the statelier Eden back to men:
Then reign the world's great bridals, chaste and calm
Then springs the crowning race of humankind.
May these things be!"

—From Tennyson's "Princess."

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

SUNDAY, JANUARY ELEVENTH

Lieut.-Col. D. M. Robertson, honorary lieutenant-colonel of the 48th Highlanders, Toronto, and one of the organizers of the regiment, has two hobbies, one being soldiering and the other farming. Down in Glengarry County, where he was born, he has a fine 600-acre farm on which he keeps one of the best herds of shorthorns in the country. He has recently returned home from Scotland where he arranged to bring out a shipment of Highland cattle and will make the experiment of breeding these hardy animals in Canada. If his efforts are successful, he will have accomplished a valuable work. In everyday life, Colonel Robertson is a lawyer and lives a jolly bachelor life in Toronto.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

MUCH TO DO HERE.

To the Editor of The Review.

Sir,—Before regenerating Eastern Ontario there is much to do here, and you will find those who complain of the low standard of living in other districts, are not exactly new year's almanacs themselves. Life insurance of the children resulting in the slaughter of the innocents, and the country would be back in timber ready for new enterprises and railways. It must not be overlooked that there are vested interests, the living of many depending upon trading on the poverty of the poor.

Yours, etc.,

GOT MONEY ON ALL SIDES

Toronto Building Inspectors Made Fat Salaries.

TORONTO, Jan. 10.—To some of the civic employes in the City Architect's department their official salaries appear to have been only "incidental," as it was possible to make a real "fat" income "on the side." Some were able to "rake in" more than others by virtue of keeping their own counsel and quietly "playing the game," so to speak.

Building Inspector J. B. Snook thought he had done pretty well when he made a trifle over $300 a year outside of the salary be drew from the city for preparing plans for his private clientele, but when Neil J. Beggs, a former examiner of plans in the City Architect's department, announced that he had made as high as $350 a month, it proved an eye-opener.

George Redmond, a former inspector, also topped Snook with $1,200 a year in outside work.

The testimony also disclosed that Inspector Snook specialized in plans for small houses and stock structures, while the other inspectors did not draw the line at buildings large or small.

ONE MILLION OUT OF WORK

Unemployment in U. S. Iron Trades at High Mark.

CLEVELAND, O., Jan. 10. — One million workingmen of the iron, steel and metal trades are idle in the United States to-day. The wage loss due to unemployment and short time is $50,000,000 a month. Two hundred and seventy thousand miners are also idle. The wage loss to those is computed at $12,000,000 a month.

On the combined figures, compiled by The Daily Iron Trade, in its issue of yesterday, there are 1,270,000 men on the idle list with a wage loss the equivalent of $50,000,000 a month. These are the first authoritative figures compiled by a responsible trade publication as to the extent of the ravages of industrial depression that swept the country in the last half of last year. The toll of the unemployed was taken by correspondents at various industrial centres during the past ten days.

SLAYS SCHOOL TEACHER.

Nephew of Former U. S. Senator Shoots Her in Hall.

MADISON, Wis., Jan. 10. — John Spooner, a nephew of former United States Senator John C. Spooner is a son of Roger Spooner, a brother of John C. Spooner. No reason is known for the tragedy.

Spooner is 40 years old, married and has two children. He fired two shots at Miss McConnell, the girl dying instantly. Spooner was taken to a hospital where he is said to be dying.

MARITIME APPEAL MADE.

Premiers of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island See Premier.

OTTAWA, Jan. 10—Premier Flemming of New Brunswick and Premier Mathieson of Prince Edward Island yesterday presented to the Government the claims of those two provinces and Nova Scotia for an irreducible minimum of representation in the Dominion Parliament, to which the Maritime Provinces were unable to secure the assent of the recent interprovincial conference. They ask that the representation at Confederation be restored, or, failing this, that the present representation, viz., Nova Scotia 18, New Brunswick 13, and Prince Edward Island 4 members, be maintained. Under the proposed redistribution bill the representation will be cut to 16, 11 and 3, respectively, which, the delegates urged, would be a violation of the Confederation agreement.

Premier Borden promised consideration of the claims in connection with the redistribution bill. He recognized the importance of the matter, but gave no hint of what action would be taken.

TWO FAMILIES WIPED OUT.

Germany Horrified By Tragedies of Poverty and Anger.

BERLIN, Jan. 10.—Two crimes of violence involving the death of eleven people, were committed yesterday in Soldau province of East Prussia and Hamburg.

At Soldau an entire family, consisting of a man and his wife, with their five children, were found in their house yesterday morning with their throats cut and the gas turned on. A dog with its head almost severed was lying beside them. Pecuniary difficulties are supposed to have driven the parents to kill the children and then commit suicide.

At Hamburg yesterday, a city policeman cut the throats of his three daughters and then his own after a family quarrel.

Terrorists Kept Quiet.

REGINA, Sask., Jan. 10.—The entire police force of this city patrolled the downtown district last evening, keeping loitering men on the move and invested with instructions to arrest anyone who attempted to create a disturbance or in any way display their sympathy for the threatened demonstration of unemployed, scheduled for last night. The doings did not materialize, partly because of the vigilance of the authorities and partly because the auditorium in the City Hall, which was to have been used for a mass meeting, had been previously engaged for another purpose.

A SPLENDID HAZARD

By HAROLD McGRATH

[Copyright 1910 by Bobbs-Merrill Company.]

The morning found her still at her post. Breitmann awoke early and appeared to take little interest in his surroundings.

"Why do you waste your time?" his voice was colorless.

"I am not wasting my time, Karl."

His head rolled slowly over on the pillow till he could see outside. Only two or three fishing boats were visible.

"When will the yacht sail?"

"Always that question. Go to sleep; I will wake you when I see it."

"I've been a scoundrel, Hildegarde;" and he closed his eyes.

Where would she go when he left this room? For the future was always rising up with this question. What would she do? How would she live? She too shut her eyes.

The door opened. The visitor was M. Ferraud. He touched his lips with a finger and stole toward the bed.

"Better?"

She nodded.

"Are you not dead for sleep?"

"It does not matter."

Breitmann's eyes opened, for his brain was wide awake. "Ferraud?"

"Yes. They wished me to say goodby for them."

"To me?" incredulously.

"They have none but good wishes."

"She will never know?"

"Not unless Mr. Fitzgerald tells her."

"Hildegarde, I had planned her abduction. Don't misunderstand. I have sunk low indeed, but not so low as that. I wanted to harry them. They would have left me free. She was to be a pawn. I shouldn't have hurt her."

"You do not care to return to Germany?"

"Nor to France, M. Ferraud."

"There's a wide world outside. You will find room enough," diffidently.

"An outlaw?"

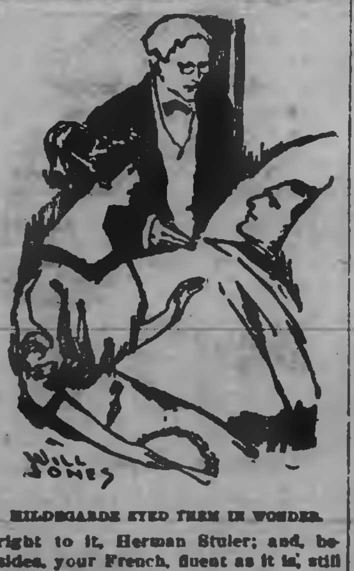
"Of a kind."

"Be easy. I haven't even the wish to be buried there. There is more to the story, more than you know. My name is Herman Stuler—if I live. There is not a drop of French blood in my veins. Breitmann died on the field in the Sudan, and I took his papers." His eyes burned into Ferraud's.

"Perhaps that would be the best way," replied M. Ferraud pensively.

"What shall I do with the money? It is under the bed."

"Keep it. No one will contest your right to it, Herman Stuler; and, besides, your French, fluent as it is, still possesses the Teutonic burr. Yes, Herman Stuler; very good, indeed."



HILDEGARDE EYED THEM IN WONDER.

Hildegarde eyed them in wonder. Were they both mad?

"Will you be sure always to remember?" said M. Ferraud to the bewildered woman. "Herman Stuler; Karl Breitmann, who was the great-grandson of Napoleon, died of a gunshot in Africa. If you will always remember that, why even Paris will be possible some day."

Hildegarde was beginning to understand. She was coming to bless this little man.

"I do not believe that the money under the bed is safe there. I shall, if you wish, make arrangements with the local agents of the Credit Lyonnais to take over the sum without question and to issue you two drafts, one on London and the other on New York, or in two letters of credit. Two millions! It is a big sum to let repose under one's bed anywhere, let alone Corsica, where the amount might purchase half the island."

"I am, then, a rich man; no more crusades, no more stale bread and cheap tobacco, no more turning my cuffs and collars and clipping the frayed edges of my trousers. I am fortunate. There is a joke too. Picard and his friends advanced me 5,000 francs for the enterprise.'

"I marvel where they got it."

"I am sorry that I was rough with you."

"I bear you not the slightest ill will; I never have. Herman Stuler; I must remember to have them make out the drafts in that name."

Breitmann appeared to be sleeping again. After waiting a moment or two his guardian angel tiptoed out.

An hour went by.

"Hildegarde, have you any money?"

"Enough for my needs."

"Will you take half of it?"

"Karl!"

"Will you?"

"No."

He accepted this as final, and immediately his gaze became fixed on the bay. A sleek white ship was putting out to sea.

"They are leaving, Karl," she said, and the courage in her eyes beat down the pain in her heart.

"In my coat inside. Bring them to me." As he could move only his right arm, and that but painfully, he bade her open each paper and hold it so that he could read plainly. The scrawl of the great captain, a deed and title, some dust dropping from the worn folds—how he strained his eyes upon them. He could not help the swift intake of air, and the stab which pierced his shoulder made him faint. She began to refold them. "No," he whispered. "Tear them up; tear them up!"

"Why, Karl!"

"Tear them up, now, at once. I shall never look at them again. Do it. What does it matter? I am only Herman Stuler. Now!"

With shaking fingers she ripped the tattered sheets, and the tears ran over and down her cheeks.

"Now, toss them into the grate and light a match."

And when he saw the reflected glare on the opposite wall he sank deeper into the pillow. The woman was openly sobbing. She came back to his side, knelt and laid her lips upon his hand. There was now only a dim white speck on the horizon, and with that strange sea magic the hull suddenly dipped down, and naught but a trail of smoke remained. Then this, too, vanished. Breitmann withdrew his hand, but he laid it upon her head.

"I am a broken man, Hildegarde, and in my madness I have been something of a rascal. But for all that I had big dreams, but thus they go, the one in flames and the other out to sea." He stroked her hair. "Will you take what is left? Will you share with me the outlaw, be the wife of a disappointed outcast? Will you?"

"Would I not follow you to any land? Would I not share with you any miseries? Have you ever doubted the strength of my love?"

"Knowing that there was another?"

"Knowing even that."

"It is I who am little and you who are great. Hildegarde, we'll have our friend Ferraud seek a priest this afternoon and square accounts."

Her head dropped to the coverlet.

After that there was no sound except the crisp metallic rattle of the palms in the freshening breeze.

THE END.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Crying Babies.

Learn to do something to stop a baby's cry besides stuffing a nipple in its mouth. Put yourself in the helpless baby's place and figure out what would happen to you if every time you asked for a drink of water you were given food; every time you grew tired of lying in one position and wanted to be turned over, food were pushed into your mouth; every time you wished to be let alone that you might sleep, food were forced on you; every time you complained about your clothes being too tight or uncomfortable, a nipple were stuffed into your mouth; every time you complained about being too warm or too cold you got food instead of relief. Wouldn't it make you mad, dyspeptic and what not? Then have thought for the poor, helpless baby.

Modern Structures.

"What's the matter with this elevator?" asked the nervous man. "You keep trying to run it through the roof."

"You'll have to excuse me," replied the operator. "I'm not used to one of these little twenty story buildings."—Washington Star.

Gloating Over the Victim.

"Your teeth are in pretty bad condition."

"They must be," sighed the patient. "You look so happy."—Judge.

Chippewa Falls, Wis.—"I have always had great confidence in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as I found it very good for organic troubles and recommend it highly. I had displacement, backache and pains when standing on my feet for any length of time, when I began to take the medicine, but I am in fine health now. If I ever have those troubles again I will take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound." — Mrs. Ed. Ferron, 816 High St., Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin.

FIRST IN DARKEST AFRICA.

Mungo Park's Daring Plunge Into the Heart of the Continent.

Mungo Park started out on his African expedition—the first serious attempt that was ever made to explore the "dark continent"—on Oct. 24, 1795. The lion hearted Scotchman, with two negro servants, set out from Gambia, on the west coast, and plunged fearlessly into the task which before him no white man had ever attempted.

It took a real man to plunge into the unknown interior, filled with tales of the monstrous and the terrible. Huge serpents, roaring lions, great black cannibals, scorching heat, deadly fevers—who would dare to challenge these things? And so Africa remained "dark" until yesterday, as it were, while Moses was battling with his problem in the Arabian wilderness; while civilization was maturing in Egypt and Greece; while Roman republics and empires were rising and falling; while the modern nations were coming into being; while crusaders were fighting and troubadours singing; while Columbus was discovering the new world and Washington was founding the United States of America.

But at last the man and the hour met, and the son of the Selkirkshire farmer took his brave leap into the mystery. In the mystery he remained a year and a half, when he reappeared, returned to England and wrote "Travels In the Interior of Africa," a book which is still one of the most interesting in the libraries of the world.

In the year 1805 Mungo Park started on his second trip to the dark continent, a trip from which he was never to return. Resolved, with true Scotch grit, to "discover the mouth of the Niger or perish in an attempt," Park pushed on through the pathless forests until he reached a point between 9 and 10 north latitude, where in attempting to make his escape from the natives, who were about to kill him, he was drowned in the mighty stream, which should be accepted as his most fitting monument.—Rev. T. B. Gregory in New York American.

NAMES FROM THE BIBLE.

Odd Ones From the Old Testament That Pleased the Puritans.

A certain set of Christian names taken from the Bible have been in use so long that we do not think of them as Bible names. Among them are Adam, Moses, Samuel, David, Daniel, Solomon, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Others taken from the saints, like Peter, Paul, John, Stephen and Matthew, originally given to children because they were born on the saint's day, are still so common that we think of them as English names.

These names antedate the use of surnames, as may be inferred from the fact that nearly all of them have given rise to patronymics, like Jacobson, Peterson and Stevenson. In the twelfth century missionaries sent out by the authorities used to baptize whole villages at once and to save time invested all the men with the name of John or some other saint and the women usually Mary or Martha. To distinguish the Johns some additional name like Short or Strong or White or Black was given him by the neighbors, and so Christian names and surnames were united.

After the reformation it became the fashion among the Puritans to give children the names of characters like the Old Testament, and odd ones like Melchisedec or Barzillai were preferred. Among these were Abel, Levi, Jesse, Amos, Asa, Isaiah, Ephraim, Gideon, Malachi, Job, Abner, Hosea, Ezekiel, Jeremiah, Zechariah, Asher, Eli and hundreds of others.—Hartford Times.

ODDITIES OF FASHION

HOW WOMEN OF OTHER RACES BEAUTIFY THEMSELVES.

Long Eyebrows and Finger Nails Enhance the Attractiveness of the Chinese Belle, While a Big Hole In the Ear Does the Same for the Burmese Miss—Brass Tubing and Rods Are Chic In Paloung.

There is nothing in which women are more united than the desire to be beautiful, and as a consequence many members of the fair sex attempt to increase their personal charm by artificial means, says a writer in London Ideas. Specially is this so in foreign countries, and the man who takes a trip round the globe will come to the conclusion that beauty is seldom skin deep, and even in those parts of the hemispheres where civilization takes a back seat.

They are waking up a bit in China and pigtails are fast going out of fashion, but as likely as not the girls there will continue to compress their feet. If you were to invite one to Come and trip it as you go

On the light, fantastic toe

you would find that such a feat would be a physical impossibility with her. Nevertheless her poor deformed feet are still compared by her own countrymen to "Golden Lilies." In order to add attraction to her face the Chinese Miss continually plucks here eyebrows so that they may grow in length and spread but little, and she will allow her finger-nails to grow to a monstrous length if she has any social standing to speak of.

In order to appear beautiful to the eyes of the men-folk the Burmah girl must have her ears bored. When she is quite young her mother gives a party, and all the guests look on while the girl is thrown to the ground and a golden wire thrust through the lobe of each ear and twisted into a ring. As soon as the wound is healed a bigger wire is put in, and this is followed by a bigger one, until the hole becomes as large in circumference as a man's thumb. Then a plug of gold or silver is put into the ear, and is worn there afterwards as an ornament.

The Paloung canon of beauty decrees that each female who wishes to be a la mode must be decorated about the neck end limbs with thick coils of brass tubing or rods. This is begun in early girlhood. The father of the girl lays her upon the ground, and taking hold of a length of tubing, hammers it into shape on neck and limbs, round and round until it resembles a gigantic spring. Fresh coils are added at various intervals.

To be considered a Tahitian beauty a lady must have a long nose, and in order to produce an elongated organ of smell she compresses it with wooden contrivances. The Hottentot lady, on the other hand, must have a broad, flat nose if she wishes to be considered pretty.

In some parts of the world the shape of the head is of the utmost importance, and the ladies will compress it into all manner of shapes. The females of Arakhan must, to be beautiful, have broad, smooth, flat foreheads, so when baby girls are born a plate of lead is tied to the head and kept there until the forehead is flatter than a pancake.

An Arabian baby girl, on the seventh day after birth, has six holes bored in her ears, and when she is two months' old heavy gold rings are attached to them, which she is to wear throughout her lifetime.

The mutilation of the teeth is observed by many races. The female members of the Sunda islanders blacken all their teeth, but two with burned cocoanut, while the two excepted teeth are either pulled out and their place taken by gold ones or covered with plates of gold. The ladies of the Malay Archipelago file their teeth into points like those of a saw, and Arabian women not only file their teeth but color them, and stain their lips blue and their fingers and toes red.

In some of the islands of the Pacific the ladies are not considered fashionable unless they wear clothing of mulberry bark, which they beat with mallets and wash until all the soft parts of its substance have been taken out of it, leaving the textile portion only.

ADVERTISING

A STORE'S importance is rightly judged by its advertising. Not altogether by the size of the advertisement, but by size and tone, and quality of announcement.

What the store has to say is one thing. Quite as important is how it says it.

Given that the clerical force is competent and up-to-date, it will say, over the counter, the very best to be said in reference to the goods enquired for. It may, and should, suggest other goods, not in the customers view.

This implies that the customer is in the store. But what brings him or her there? The wish to buy and the belief it is a good place to buy at.

How is this learned of?

By advertising. The advertisement is a message, an intelligent middleman, doing service between seller and buyer. The space talks to thousands, even while the store is closed for the night.

Use The REVIEW and tell the story of your store and its opportunities for good service.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE FROM LAYMAN'S POINT OF VIEW

C. J. Foy of Perth Addrsses Large Audience at St. Alphonsus Lyceum—The 14th Anniversary of St. Peters T.A.S. is Celebrated

St. Peter's Total Abstinence Society held their 14th anniversary in the hall of the Lyceum last evening. The stage was prettily arranged for the occasion by the committee in charge. The past presidents of the society were represented by Messrs. O'Heron, R. Begley, Sharpe, Ahearn, and Reilly. The chairman, Rev. Dean McColl, announced the musical program.

Quartette — Philharmonic Club, Messrs. New, Henshaw, Lee and Cairns, (encored.)

Song—Mr. A. New.

Duet—Messrs. Lee and Bartley.

Song—Miss T. O'Donnell, (encored.)

Recitation — Mr. Ed. Desautel, (encored.)

Song—Mr. Bartley.

Father McColl then introduced the speaker of the evening, Mr. Foy, of Perth, Ontario, who gave a very stirring address on "Total Abstenance from a Layman's Point of View." He spoke of his experience in public speaking in Canada, which had extended from Sydney to Victoria, B. C., in which wide range he had addressed nearly every city and town of importance, usually on an Irish platform. He, himself, was an advocate of temperance, not a local optionist, Scott Act fiend, nor prohibitionist, but purely and simply by education. He had heard St. Peter's T. A.S. extolled in Vancouver, in New York, in the South, and he knew that the Total Abstenance Society stoop pre-eminent amongst the societies of North America, sanctioned by the Church. The two things which he had always tried to bring out in his lectures were the need of "sobriety" and "back to the soil," the two movements, which, if followed, will make any people, the people of the country in which they live, for the people who are sober, will be industrious, frugal, and sociable. Combine those in people who will inhabit the soil, and you have a race who will dominate and rule the country in which they live. Regarding a man as a citizen, drunkenness in him became a social evil, as a father of a family, a domestic evil, and as a religious man, a curse. He divided his discourse under these three heads, the first in regard to citizenship:—Man is endowed by God with will and reason, and was created to be free, not free in the sense that he shall do exactly as he likes. If this were so, Mexico might be regarded as the freest country in the world to-day, where every man does exactly as he wishes, and a fresh revolution springs up every month, but free in the Gospel sense, "know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." A state or country is exactly what its citizens make it, and of what avail are the most fruitful soil and best climate if stable, sober citizens do not form a groundwork for prosperity. The great nations of olden times slipped down the plane and the sober nations took their places because their big men and leaders fell into the sin of intemperance, which brought other vices in its wake. To have a progressive state, its citizens must be sober, to make laws suitable for that state. Reciprocity between the citizens and the state means that a man is entitled to government and protection and he owes that state the very best that is in him, which he cannot give unless he is mentally, physically and morally fit. Mr. Foy referred to Canada as the freest and grandest country that God's sun shines on, no other offers the same civil and religions rights that Canada does at the present time. We live in peace and harmony, irrespective of creed, race or nationality. Our citizens must be sober, industrious and frugal. How can they lay by that desirable nest egg for a rainy day if their pittance is squandered for liquor? Furthermore, no employer will be lenient with a drinker. He knows that steady application and a clear head are not to be expected from such, and refuses to tolerate him. Most of the crimes committed anywhere are traceable to the excessive use of liquor, as is the condition of the human wrecks who decorate the police courts, and inhabit the jails and poor-houses.

Domestic Ties.

In regard to domestic ties, one of the greatest honors bestowed on man is that of being the father of a family, but the salvation of his soul depends upon the manner in which he discharges this responsibility. How many there are who will have to answer before the throne of Heaven for the terrible example they set in their own homes. No one is quicker to learn than a little child, and how long is he going to keep his respect for a parent whom he sees day after day and night after night, under the influence of liquor. "Honor thy father and thy mother," but how can he honor a father who is like a beast, for when the reason is gone, man is no higher than the brute. How many young, bright lives have been blighted and snuffed out by hard labor in their immature years, working for a mere pittance to earn a living for self and others, because the father had spent his money in drink. The education they long for is denied them through lack of means. It is a truism that the men who have made history in this, or any other country, have come, not from the guilded palaces of the rich, but from the humble lodging of the poor, from homes where the parents had to work hard for a living. Their early days, spent in such surroundings, made them alert, adaptable and resourceful. The mother, who always sticks by the family, seems to have a protecting and guiding hand to help her bring up the little brood, but her task is doubly hard if she has to support as well a drunken, useless husband.

Robs His Reason.

In regard to the salvation of the soul, intemperance robs a man of his reason, and reduces him to the level of the brute. Of all sins, intemperance must be the one that stays the hand of Almighty God, because divine mercy and grace can operate only when reason is there. A man may commit any other sin in the category, and still repent, because reason remains. How can a drunkard reason, or does a man reason at all, who goes on day after day, night after night, and still thinks that a miracle is going to save him at the last minute. "There are numbers of sober men in the Kingston Penitentary now—because they can't get it." It is the man who knows he can get it and who never touches it, to whom honor is due, and this is not the man who repeats, "I can take a drink and leave it alone," because sooner or later, that man will be caught. Emphasis was laid on the good to be done by all in this way, the speaker warning young women of the fallacy of marrying a drinker to improve him, fathers of families of the danger surrounding their sons in many sports, "Lead us into temptation," being a very good motto, and mothers of the danger of allowing the freedom of their homes to those who were not sober, industrious and temperate.

The speaker closed with a few remarks on the necessity of everyone lending a hand in the upbuilding of the state, and the uplifting of self and neighbor, and congratulation for the work undertaken, which would bear future fruit over the whole continent of North America, when a future generation "will see this country a sober country—not because you can't get it, but because you know it is right, by education—a credit to yourselves, to pastor and church, and an honor and a credit to the mothers and fathers before you."

A vote of thanks was moved by Mr. Chas. Murty, and seconded by Mr. Jos. Begley, and Mr. Foy thanked the audience, remarking that "a temperance address was necessarily a 'dry' one, anyway.

His Lordship Bishop O'Brien spoke briefly, expressing his pleasure at hearing the subject of temperance from a layman's point of view. He remarked that the day of argument on this subject was gone by, for we had the best of it every time, and he hoped to live to see the day when liquor will not be sold in Peterborough except for medicinal purposes. He wished that all, irrespective of race or creed, would lend a hand to extirpate this crying evil, for the day had gone by when it could assume an air of respectability and claim a certain amount of public rights and patronage. A man could no longer say that in joining such a temperance organization, he would lose business through the liquor interests, for they no longer exercised a controlling power. He referred to the work done in the past 14 years in connection with this society by every priest in Peterborough and particularly to the encouragement received from Bishop O'Connor in this regard. He spoke of the Xmas season, where, wherever one found misery, poverty and unhappiness, it was in connection with a man addicted to the excessive use of liquor and quoted Father Murphy in a recent sermon: "You talk about reforming the hotel, making liquor and its surroundings respectable, but the worst thing about the saloon is the saloon itself, and the worst thing about drink is the drink itself."

Rev. Dean McColl gave a few well-chosen remarks, complimenting the speaker on the excellence of his address, and the evening wound up with a song by Miss Marguerite Clancy, and one by Mr. Lee.

Accompanists of the evening:—Mr. Armstrong, Miss L. Hurley, Miss L. Clancy.

About Zutoo Tablets

"I have been a sufferer from headache since childhood and have used all, or nearly all, of the so-called "cures" on the market. Some months since my attention was called to your Zutoo Tablets and I have been using them ever since with the most gratifying results. I find they cure a "sick" or "nervous" headache in a few minutes and leave no bad effect. My family use them whenever needed with equally good results. I have frequently given them to friends who were suffering from headache and they never failed to give quick relief. I find them a good remedy for "sour" stomach as well as headache. I always carry them in my grip on the road and would not be without them at any cost."

He proposes to send out to Canada several companies of English actors, who by the co-operation of the Canadian Pacific Railway, will be able to travel from Halifax to Vancouver and back for forty weeks without a break, playing on the return visits in the larger cities only. STARTLING CHANGE IN SOUTH AFRICA

Disaffected Railwaymen Tried to Dynamite Two Bridges and Anarchy Has Begun in Johannesburg District.

Leaders Applied Pressure to Trades Federation and Brought About Crisis.

JOHANNESBURG, Jan. 10.—There has been an astonishing change in the situation since Thursday night, when the railway strike seemed to be a fiasco. The strike leaders, seeing that the movement had hung fire, appealed to the Johannesburg Trades Federation yesterday, and the federation applied pressure in such a manner as to bring things to an immediate head. As a result the situation to-day is one of utmost gravity.

Dynamite is being used by the strikers in the territory adjacent to Johannesburg. An effort was made yesterday to blow up the Cape mail between Denver and Jeorge Goch. Nobody on board the train was injured, but the front wheels of the pilot engine were blown off and the track seriously damaged. Another explosion occurred on the railway last night between Johannesburg and Cleveland.

An unsuccessful attempt to blow up a train was made yesterday between Witpoorte and Liupaardavlelt, three sticks of dynamite with a detonator attached having been discovered by a foreman track-layer just before the arrival of a crowded passenger train from Zeerust. The dynamite had been fixed in such a way that its explosion was inevitable from the impact of a train.

The Government is credited with an intention to fight the trades federation to a finish. It is reported that martial law will be proclaimed at Pretoria.

The principal strike leaders, including Toutsma, secretary, and Nield, assistant secretary of the Railwaymen's Society; Waterson, secretary of the South Africa Labor Party, and Colin Wade, a Labor member of Germiston Town Council, who was prominent in the last Rand strike, were arrested on charges of sedition yesterday. All were held without bail. Last night other leaders were taken into custody.

Three proclamations were gazetted in Pretoria yesterday, calling out the citizen forces throughout the Transvaal and the citizen reserves in many districts, and prohibiting the sale or transportation of arms in districts of Pretoria, Middleburg and Witwatersrand.

There is much apprehension here over the proposed mass meeting which has been called for to-morrow in Johannesburg, the people recalling the fatal consequences of a similar gathering in the square during July's strike.

Mr. Mason, leader of the Trades Federation, addressing a gathering of strikers here yesterday, declared that the entire railway service would be stopped to-day, but that it was not intended to call out the miners. The miners, he said, were burning for revenge for the bloodshed of last July, but that the revenge would come later.

TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL

Notes by Official Scribe.

There was a large number of representatives on hand this week when President Moore called the meeting to order.

The Property Qualification.

A letter from the Brantford Trades and Labor Council was read, the purpose of which was to agitate so as to secure the abolition of the property qualification necessary for the Mayoralty and Aldermanic offices. A committee will be appointed to wait on E. A. Peck, M.P.P., in this regard.

"Jimmie" Simpson's Visit.

Rev. Mr. Keith wrote asking the Council to join in welcoming Controller Simpson, of Toronto, when this leading light in labor's legions visits this city in February. The visit had been arranged for long before mention had been made of bestowing the honor on this cardholder with the International Typographical Union.

The nomination and election of officers for 1914, then took place with the following results:

President, Representative J. J. Hartley.

Vice-President, Representative T. Palmer.

Rec. Secretary, Representative A. Stevens.

Financial Secretary, Representative F. Kite.

Treasurer, Representative C. Hammacott.

Sergt. at Arms, Dan Wires.

Trustees, Representatives D. Moore, H. Gainey, D. Wires, C. Hammacott, H. Robertson.

Auditors, Representatives James Dillon, A. Woodhead, W. Flannery.

Scribe, Representative G. A. Hamon.

The retiring President, David Moore, was tendered a hearty vote of thanks for his past two years of unremitting toil whilst occupying the presidential chair. Representative Moore briefly responded, mentioning his pride at being chosen as the chief officer of organized labor in Peterboro, also regretting that the state of his health rendered imperative an extended holiday thereby rendering ineffective further occupancy of the chief representative's chair.

The new President, J. J. Hartley, of the Bricklayers' and Masons', then called on the new officers in turn, (after he had made a most inspiring speech), to address the meeting. All the speeches that followed were animated with the one idea to make 1914 a banner year, and asking for the support of all delegates absent as well as present.

BEREAVED MEMBERS.

Since the Council last met two of the delegates have experienced sorrow by the loss of their wives. The Secretary was instructed to forward letters of condolence to Representatives Hugh Robertson of the moulders and James Dillon of the Typographical Union.

IMPORTANT BUSINESS.

As there will be much business of importance to be brought up next meeting the delegates are asked to hereby take notice and make no dates for Wednesday, 21st inst., otherwise than the one that their locals expect them to make.

OFFERS TO SELL HER HUSBAND

Wife Will Take $1000.00. She Prefers the Cat.

BOSTON, Jan. 10.—"I'm willing to sell my husband for $1,000 cash," wrote Mrs. Agnes Bedell, of Quincy, to Miss Mary E. Chandler, in a letter which Miss Chandler made public last night. William Bedell, the husband, when interviewed later, is alleged to have expressed his willingness to be "sold."

The letter, after explaining that Mrs. Bedell had seen Miss Chandler's name in the newspaper, continued:

"I see where you need a husband to take care of your property and to be a father to your baby. My husband is a working man, tired of supporting a family on small pay. I want money to open a boarding-house. He will be content to sit with you and to tend the baby. As for me, I'd rather have my cat."

COLD SPRINGS SUNDAY SCHOOL

Cold Springs' annual Sunday School meeting was held last evening. Members to the number of about 80 were present.

The reports from the various departments were called for and read, all of which were adopted. The reports show a very favorable year. The school has ninety-five members and ten teachers, with an average attendance of seventy-seven.

During the past year the Sunday School has made several donations to such as the Bible Society of Ontario, the Children's Aid, and others.

The Secretary of the Home Class Department reported a membership of ten which is very gratifying owing to the fact that from time to time the members leave the home class and join the school.

The Cradle Roll has a membership of thirteen. This is a very useful department of a Sunday School, as it brings the children into the school as soon as they are able to attend.

After the reports were all read the election of officers took place. Mr. Alex. Long was chosen secretary for the meeting, and Mr. Herbert Peters chairman. The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows:

Supt.—Miss Laura Bennett.

Ass. Supt.—Mr. Frank Kitney.

Sec.-Treas.—Mr. I. Pammett.

Rec. Sec.—Mr. Ernest Kitney.

Organist—Miss Alice Stenton.

Ass.-Organist—Miss F. Kitney.

Librarian—Mr. Herbert Peters.

Home Class Sec.—Miss Emma Welch.

Cradle Roll Sec.—Mrs. T. Rose.

Hall Committee—Mr. Frank Kitney and Mr. I. Pammett.

After the election of officers the chairman turned the meeting over to the superintendent who in a brief speech thanked the officers for the able assistance given her. Miss Bennett is now on her fourteenth year as superintendent.

The meeting now was thrown open for suggestions for the coming year, and there were quite a number presented which were discussed to some length.

At the close the superintendent, Miss Bennett, called Mr. Alex. Long and Mr. Herbert Peters to the front to draw aside the curtains behind which was a writing desk. On behalf of the people in the vicinity of Cold Springs, Miss Bennett presented it to Mr. Pammett as a slight token of the services rendered by him in the past. Mr. Pammett, who was taken completely by surprise, in a few well chosen words, thanked them for the gift and appreciation. Mr. Pammett has been secretary-treasurer for a number of years, and his task is no light one. He has performed it satisfactorily in every respect. The school joined in singing "Bles't Be the Tie That Binds." The meeting was now turned into a social event and every one did ample justice to the good things provided by the ladies.

Meteor Startles France.

PARIS, Jan. 10. — The people of western France was startled Thursday night by the passage of an enormous meteor, which was first seen at Tours.

The phenomenon took the form of an immense train of intense white flames, rushing across the sky at terrific speed. It was accompanied by frequent and deafening explosions, which broke windows.

It was also observed at Montincon, Cholet and other places and appears to have fallen into the sea beyond Paimpol, on the English Channel, causing disturbances in that district, which were mistaken for an earthquake.

PROGRESS MADE IN CARE OF TUBERCULAR

ercular patients. We succeeded in having the family removed to better quarters, where they have been made comfortable.

Particularly good work has been accomplished among the children, it is very gratifying indeed to see some of the little patients of six months ago, now out at play.

A child of four and a half years in a small ill-ventilated room, whose mother, while willing to learn, was totally at sea as to the care of a patient; this little patient was also put out of doors and her mother daily instructed in the care and management of her disease. Now when passing that way, this little girl runs out ot meet me and sometimes accompanies me on part of my way.

This improvement is also true of some adults who are back at work after hard and oftentimes discouraging fight for health.

Among the most important problems that confronts a nurse, is that of fumigation. It would seem that this should be the duty of a properly appointed official, under the supervision of the Board of Health.

In conclusion, I wish to say that since my appointment I have given out five sputum cups with 490 refills, four thermometers, seven rolls of absorbent cotton, 20 yards iodoform gauze, 10 yards of sterile gauze, 6 ounces of alcohol, 3 ounces carbolic acid, and large quantities of old linen.

The following articles have been received: 5 comforters, 2 quilts, 2 pillows, 6 sets of pyjamas, 1 shirt, 3 suits underwear, 1 ice cap.

I have collected $19.00 for services rendered.

MISS MERCIER,
District Nurse.

Report of Executive

During the past year the Association has continued the good work began in the summer of 1912. Until July of 1913 one nurse only was employed, tubercular patients being almost exclusively picked and looked after by the society. Miss Sparkhall's resignation was handed to us in April 1913, and regretfully accepted. It took effect in June, and it was decided by the executive to employ two nurses in future as it seemed necessary to extent the work in the direction of general nursing, in order to get better results and arouse more interest among the medical men, and the public generally. Miss Mercier and Miss Edith Hamilton of Peterboro, were engaged with us. A great many patients have been looked after in everyway, and necessary supplies of milk, eggs, drugs, furniture and other comforts have been provided; 348 dozen eggs and something over 2,000 quarts of milk have been given away. Our financial condition is sound, for the present, the expenditure keeping well in bounds. It is the earnest desire of the executive to take some steps in th direction of providing accommodation for advanced cases, and it has been suggested that the Association arrange for the renting and furnishing of a building suitable for a sanitarium for all cases, but more particularly for the advanced ones, which are considered to be a menace to the citizens as a whole.

SMALL ATTENDANCE AT THE MARKET

INCREASE FOR NINE MONTHS OF THE FISCAL YEAR OVER $3,000,000

In Spite of a Decrease During November and December as a Result of the World-Wide Financial Stringency, the Federal Income is Well in Advance of Previous Years — Expenditures Larger.

OTTAWA, Jan. 10.—The national debt of Canada now stands at $303,562,104, an increase of about half a million during December, according to the financial statement issued yesterday. The funded debt payable in Canada is $803,460, and, in London, $267,541,621.

There have been considerable increases in both ordinary and capital expenditure, the latter due to large outlays on public works throughout the Dominion.

The revenue during December amounted to $12,931,466, of which seven and one-half millions was derived from customs The expenditure was a little over nine and one-quarter millions. December's net revenue shows a decrease of a million and a quarter, compared with December, 1912. For the nine months of the present fiscal year the revenue was $127,571,762. This is an increase of three millions over the same period last year, despite the falling off in customs receipts during the past two months.

Capital expenditure on public works, including railways and canals, amounted to $3,407,611 during December. Railway subsidies were half a million. This expenditure is about the same as December, 1912. For the nine months of the present year the amount was $40,828,951, an increase of $18,000,000 over the same period last year. The $15,000,000 subsidy to the Canadian Northern accounts for most of this.

In customs revenue there was a net decrease of $391,215, the figures being $82,738,294, as against $84,747,008, but from the latter must be deducted $1,817,499 of Chinese revenue, which is this year included in "miscellaneous" revenue, so that the actual customs receipts for the nine months of 1912 was $82,929,509.

In excise revenue there was an increase of half a million, in postoffice receipts, an increase of $775,000, and in receipts from public works, railways and canals an increase of one and three-quarter millions.

Expenditure on ordinary account for the nine months totalled $75,987,925, an increase of $8,986,350. Capital expenditure shows an increase of $18,158,848 due, as stated, to large outlay on public works and payments of railway subsidies. The total capital expenditure for the nine months was $40,828,951, as against $22,670,103.

AFTER EFFECTS OF DREADED LA GRIPPE

Overcome by the Use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Throughout Canada la Grippe (influenza) prostrates thousands of busy men and women every winter, wrecking their health and leaving behind numerous serious ailments. It is the after effects of la grippe that cause such widespread misery. Here is the reason. La grippe leaves behind it weakened vital powers, a shattered nervous system, impure and impoverished blood, and a low state of health that renders the sufferer extremely liable to rheumatism, indigestion, neuralgia and nervous disorders. You can avoid la grippe entirely by keeping the blood rich and pure through the occasional use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Or if, because you have not recognized your blood weakness, la grippe fastens its fangs upon you, its disastrous aftereffects can be driven out by some medicine. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills increase and enrich the blood supply, feed the starving nerves, and thus impart new health and new strength to enfeebled men and women. Mr. G. St. Clair, connected with the Sun Life Assurance Co., Halifax, N.S., says: "I was taken down with a heavy cold and la grippe and was confined to the house for some weeks. I had the best of medical attention, and although the doctor said I was cured I was still far from well, and did not have the vim necessary for a strenuous business life, and did not attend to either office or field work. Talking with a friend he said 'Why not try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.' I decided to do so, and before I had used a box felt an improvement, and before long the pills made me feel like a new man. I can't therefore say too much in favor of this valuable medicine, and hope that any who may read this and be in need of medical attention will be persuaded to try this truly wonderful medicine."

You can get these health-renewing Pills through any medicine dealer or by mail post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

ENORMOUS DEMAND FOR "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

1,152,000 Boxes Sold Last Year.

Six of These Fruit Liver Tablets for Every Man, Woman and Child in the Dominion.

In seven short years, "Fruit-a-tives" has become the most famous and the most widely used medicine in Canada that has ever been introduced to the people of the Dominion. Even those who take "Fruit-a-tives" regularly and recommend these famous fruit juice tablets to their friends, probably have no idea of the enormous number of "Fruit-a-tives" that are being used by those wishing to regain their health.

Last year, over eight thousand gross boxes of "Fruit-a-tives" were sold. As there are one hundred, forty four boxes in a gross, this means that over one million one hundred thousand boxes were sold in 1912. And this year, this number will be still further increased.

This means a box of "Fruit-a-tives" for every six persons in Canada, or six tablets for every man, woman and child in the country.

"Fruit-a-tives" are sold in every section of the Dominion. On the rugged Atlantic coast, throughout the Maritime Provinces, among the French in Quebec and the English in Ontario, all over the great Prairie Provinces and on the shores of the Pacific, "Fruit-a-tives" is the best selling medicine in stock.

This is true because "Fruit-a-tives" gives results. For chronic Constipation, Indigestion and Stomach Trouble—for bad Blood, Skin Eruptions and Eczema—for Rheumatism, Sciatica and Lumbago—for Kidney, Bladder and Urinary Troubles—"Fruit-a-tives" cures when nothing else will.

In the head office in Ottawa, are hundreds of letters and photographs from grateful men and women who have been cured of sickness and suffering by "Fruit-a-tives." Many of these letters and photographs have been published by permission and have induced other sufferers to try "Fruit-a-tives." This is one of the factors in the demand for "Fruit-a-tives," which is now sold in every city, town, hamlet and cross roads store.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50 trial size, 25c., at all dealers or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

TASTE AND SMELL

Closely Allied, They Are the Most Elusive of the Senses.

RIDDLE OF FLAVOR AND ODOR.

Smell Has Been Termed "Taste at a Distance," and the Way In Which Anything Is Appreciated by the Cells of Taste and Smell Is Exactly Alike.

We think we know all about tasting and smelling, but these are the most elusive senses and so closely allied that they have been called the "wedded senses." If you wish to be convinced of the closeness of their connection notice the next time you have a severe cold in the head and ascertain how little taste you get from your food, even though it be the most "tasty."

In fact, flavor and odor are great puzzles to all of the physical investigators. The preponderance of evidence points to the suggestion that all taste and odor are brought about by chemical changes in the ends of the nerves having to do with these sensations. Smell has been termed "taste at a distance," and the way in which anything is appreciated by the cells of taste and smell is precisely alike.

The infinitely small particle that reaches the nose must first be dissolved in the mucous covering of the olfactory bulb before its odor can be caught and transferred to the end of the olfactory nerve. The same is the case with the thing that is to be tasted. It, too, is dissolved in the juices of the mouth and then makes its way to some one or more of the taste cells, when the chemical change takes place which sets up a sensation in the gustatory nerve, and we really taste the substance and announce to ourselves or others how it tastes.

Most persons think that as the tongue is the chief organ of taste you could taste anything placed anywhere on the tongue. But this is far from being true. There are three chief kinds of papillae of taste on the tongue, and anything touching it on these papillae is tasted, but if it touches any spot between these it is not tasted at all. The filiform papillae are at the tip of the tongue and at the sides, and each one contains special taste "buds," which dissolve something of the substance put on them and transfer the sensation to the underlying nerve of taste.

Then there are the fungiform papillae, looking like little mushrooms (whence the name), with taste buds of their own, and there are also the circumvallate papillae, only seven or ten in number, lying toward the back of the tongue, forming a V, with the apex pointing toward the throat. These are little mounds with moats around them and taste buds lying in the moats to catch whatever particles of food may reach thus far sufficiently dissolved to be tasted.

The middle of the tongue and the hard palate have no taste at all, and this is the reason that if we are to take a bitter powder and it is carefully placed at the center of the tongue it can be washed down quickly by a gulp of water, leaving no taste in the mouth.

The taste bulbs have been carefully measured, and it is found that they are 1-300 of an inch long and 1-800 of an inch broad, oval in shape, something like a small Florence flask. The proof that tasting is a chemical process lies in the fact that anything that is to be tasted must be soluble, for the unchewed food or hard coated pill is not tasted. Tastes have been classified as sweet, bitter, acid and saline, and experiment has shown that we taste salty foods most rapidly—in .17 of a second—and that sweet acid and bitter take longer, the last requiring .258 of a second for perception.

Another peculiarity of taste is that after a very strong taste of any kind we cannot so easily distinguish slighter flavors. The nerve energy has been exhausted for a time, and only after a little does it return. If you have eaten sweets for dessert you must drink some water to clear the mouth of the sweet taste or your coffee will taste very bitter, no matter how much sugar you put into it. The professional tea taster knows that the gustatory nerve becomes exhausted, for after a series of tastings he stops to give his nerve of taste an opportunity to return to its normal condition.

In taste and smell alike all individuals differ. The same food does not taste precisely the same to any two individuals, any more than the same perfume smells the same. There is a general resemblance, but the expert who has trained his sense of smell or taste perceives finer distinctions than the person who has given little attention to these special senses and their development. Arguments are of no avail, as was recognized in the popular and ancient proverb, "There is no disputing about tastes." There is no scientific explanation of the fact that one person likes onions and another abhors them. Some persons are fond of olives only after they have cultivated the taste. The only suggestion of an explanation is that in some persons the chemical changes brought about by onions or olives are pleasing, while in others they are offensive. It is the gustatory nerve that tells the tale, but little is understood about it.—New York World.

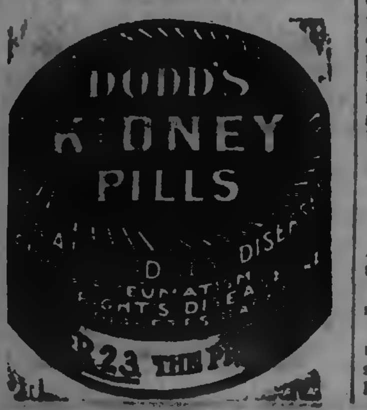
DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS



A FEMALE POPE.

Fanatical Polish Woman Founds New Religion.

A woman in Plock, Poland, Mary Kozlowska, is, in the estimation of her fanatical followers, a pope—the only woman pope in the world.

The secret of her rise to power lies in the fact that she sees visions and acts on them. She takes no decision before going into a trance, when, she says, voices from heaven tell her what to do.

She was past forty when the first vision came as she sat in her workroom making vestments for the canons at the old cathedral up on the hill. She told young priests that she had talked with God and the Blessed Virgin.

She began to hold prayer meetings, where more and more people came. She and they then vowed to destroy the antichrist they believed to be at the bottom of all the world's sin.

Scores rallied around her, taking strictest vows of self-sacrifice and poverty. They lead simple lives, eat no meat, drink no alcohol, go barefooted in the sharpest frost, wear hair shirts next their skins and devote their lives to the poor.

For them the will of emperors is the will of God, and the most repressive measures may only be resisted by prayer. They are most earnest missionaries, drawing to their churches people who had long ceased to worship anything but themselves.

When Rome called on them to give up various doctrines and discard the woman who saw visions they refused, were excommunicated and declared the woman their pope instead.

Their cult had spread to all the poor and industrial districts of the country. When they refused to leave the churches in which their priests preached there was war, with broken heads and lost lives.

When the Roman priests complained the Russian Government openly favored her. Her followers, who killed people in the fights for churches, have been acquitted by Russian courts, and Roman priests are imprisoned for writing against her. In less than two years after her excommunication she had built thirty churches, with schools, which are now dotted over the country.

Hunger and Play.

Herodotus learned from the Lydians that the Greek ball game originated in a prolonged famine in Lydia. For some time they endured it, but at last they invented dice, knuckle bones, the ball and all other games except drafts. One day they played these games so as to keep their minds off food; the next they took food and did not play. This alternation eked out their provisions for 18 years, at the end of which time, the situation still being desperate, half the population emigrated. One can only suppose that the ball games were not very athletic; otherwise the increased appetite given by them must have undone much of the saving.

Earliest Newspaper.

The earliest English newspaper, Nathaniel Butter's "Weekeley Newes," some copies of which are to be seen at the Advertising Exhibition, had several predecessors abroad. The first of these in point of time was the "Ordiarij Avisa," the publication of which began at Strassburg in 1609—fourteen years before the appearance of Nathaniel Butter's venture. In 1620 Abraham Verhoeven founded the "Nieuwe Thijdingen" at Antwerp, and this continued to appear weekly for 227 years. The oldest existing newspaper is apparently the Swedish official gazette, which dates back to 1644.

The Words That Won.

In London one of the weekly papers offered a prize for the best list of strong words to number ten. The announcement specified that but ten words would be considered from any one person and a committee of literary men would select from the numbers offered the ten strongest words in the English language.

These are the words that won: Hate, blood, hungry, dawn, coming, gone, love, dead, alone, forever.

Do you think of any stronger, fuller of suggestion.

Court and Witness Agree.

An amusing incident occurred in one of the New York courts the other day. The lawyer for the defense was making a very lengthy cross examination of an old lady when he was interrupted by the judge with the remark, "I think you have exhausted this witness."

"Yes, judge," she exclaimed, "I do feel very much exhausted."

A Quotation.

Mr. Ferris is in the apartment house business and was talking one morning with an acquaintance.

"Yes; business is very good," said Mr. Ferris. "Every apartment but one in my house is rented."

"And that," said the other, "I suppose, is last, but not leased."

His Start In Life.

"How much of an income would it be necessary for you to have in order to be satisfied to retire?"

"If I could be sure of $10,000 a year I would quit business and be thoroughly satisfied."

BRITISH UNIFORMS

Significance of Those Displayed on Dress Parade.

STYLES WON BY BRAVE ACTS.

Distinctions That Date Back Many Years and Mark Deeds of Daring on the Battlefield—Brilliant Colors and Picturesque Costumes.

The khaki service dress of the British army submerges into one drab hue all the great color that formerly characterized the various regiments, and during the army maneuvers the great hosts of men at arms look all alike. Nevertheless the separate organizations still maintain their individual uniforms for dress parade, and, as in the United States, almost every uniform is conspicuous by some peculiar distinction—a distinction that dates back many years along the path of England's glory.

For instance, sergeants of the Somersetshire Light infantry are the only known officers in the service who wear the sash over the left shoulder. Officers formerly wore their sashes in this fashion, and in one engagement all the lieutenants and captains of the Somersetshire Light infantry were killed or wounded, and the sergeants performed their duties. Thus their triumph is remembered.

The men of the Gloucestershire regiment wear their badges at the back of their headdress as well as at the front, a distinction granted because when the first battalion was defending an important outpost in Egypt in 1801 they were suddenly attacked in the rear, but by turning quickly about successfully beat off their assailants.

That picturesque bearskin grenadier cap, worn alone by the Scots Greys of all the cavalry, dates from the battle of Ramillies, in 1706, when the regiment captured three battalions of the Picardy French grenadiers.

The Royal Welsh fusiliers is now the only regiment that retains the "flash," five black ribbons hanging from the back of the collar of the tunic, originally worn to protect the coat from the grease used in plaiting a cue of pigtails. The "flash" was abolished throughout the army while the regiment was abroad, but on its return the commanding officer appealed to King William IV. to be allowed to retain it.

White jackets are worn by the ranks of the foot guards when not in dress uniform. The grenadiers wear a white goat's hair plume on the left side of the bearskins, a red band round the forage caps, and the buttons of the tunic are set at equal intervals; the Coldstream guards wear a red feather plume at the right side of the bearskin, a white band on the forage cap, and the buttons are set in twos; Scots guards have no plume in the bearskin, a diced band for the cap and the buttons in threes, while the Irish guards have a plume of St. Patrick's blue in the bearskin, a green band for the cap and the buttons in fours. The First Life guards can always be distinguished from the Second by the sheepskins—black sheepskins for the First and white for the Second.

There are plenty of other distinctions arranged to tell the regiments. The only lancer regiment that is clothed in scarlet is the Sixteenth, the only dragoons in blue the carabineers. The household cavalry is the only troop to wear the cuirass. The Highland Light infantry alone among highland regiments is not kilted, but wears plaid trousers, shako and not the feather bonnet. The shako is also worn by the Cameronians, the only rifle regiment to do so.

A soldier wearing a bugle on his shoulder strap belongs to a light infantry regiment, another wearing a grenade to a fusilier regiment, and a red band round a cap with blue facing marks a soldier of a royal regiment. The only highland regiment with a red hackle in the feather bonnet is the "Black Watch;" in all others it is white.—London Cor. New York Tribune.

Preserving Linoleum.

To prevent linoleum from rotting and falling to pieces it should be treated in the following manner: See that it is perfectly dry and lay it on the floor face downward, or it may be hung over a line with the back outside. Make a mixture of linseed oil, red lead and driers to about the thickness of glycerin and give the back of the linoleum a thin coat. Let it dry thoroughly, add some more red lead to the mixture, make it thicker and give the linoleum another coat. It must not be laid before it is perfectly dry.—Exchange.

Flattery Recognized.

"I want to ask your advice," said the man who is always busy evolving new ideas.

"No, you don't," replied the alert business man. "You want to get me interested so that I'll ask you questions about some proposition you want to spring."—Washington Star.

Repair Work.

"Repair work has cost me more than the original machine," stormed the physician.

"Repair work does pay better," said the automobile man. "You find it so in your business, don't you, doc?"—Pittsburgh Post.

The ability to speak wisely and well is a great gift, but wisely to refrain from speaking is oftener the evidence of a superior mind.

BELLES OF THE ORIENT.

Beauty Baths and Cosmetics Are the Light of Their Lives.

If the woman of fashion of London, Paris or New York spent as much time over her toilet as her sister of the far east she would have very little left in which to attend to her social and domestic duties.

The oriental belle devotes most of her day to the preservation of her health and beauty. She uses many wonderful cosmetics for coloring her eyes and brows and for beautifying her skin. On arising her hair is dressed by her maid, who massages the scalp with oil made from aloe wood or cocoanut. The eastern woman will never interfere with the color of her hair, for the long silky blue black locks are considered her chief charm.

Next a very hot bath is prepared, and in this she remains for two or three hours. In place of soap numberless unguents are used, which render the skin as soft as velvet. These delicate perfumes are secret preparations of the bathing woman.

The hair of the oriental beauty is beautifully long and soft, and they have a way of arranging it which adds a distinct charm. The face is washed over with milk into which the juice of a lemon has been squeezed. Perfumes permeate the garments, but are seldom if ever used on a handkerchief.—Detroit Free Press.

JUST A BOY'S IDEA.

It Made the Invention of the Reaping Machine a Success.

In 1830 Obed Hussey of Ohio was inventing a reaping machine, the first ever designed in this country. His chief difficulty was the cutting device, which was three large sickles set in a frame and revolved so as to cut into the grain. It would not work satisfactorily.

A young son, watching the experiments, asked his father why he did not use a lot of big scissors, with one handle fastened to one bar and the other handle to a sliding bar, thus opening and closing them.

Hussey instantly adopted the idea, substituting for scissors the two saw toothed blades which are in common use today on harvesters, the cutting action being quite similar to that of scissors.

From the boy's suggestion he perfected in one week a machine on which he had in vain exercised all his ingenuity for the preceding two years. The principle of that cutting device is the principle of all of the great harvesting machines, and its benefit to the farming industry of the entire world has been unsurpassed by any other invention for use on the farm.—George F. Stratton in St. Nicholas.

Honest Surprise.

"King Lear is a great character," remarked the friend.

"Yes," answered the actor. "I suppose you remember my performance last season?"

"No, I must confess I have never seen you in the part."

"Indeed!" was the rejoinder, in a tone of gentle surprise. "Then how on earth did you know it was a great character?"—Liverpool Mercury.

BROCKVILLE, Jan. 9.—With the municipal elections over the personnel of this year's council to represent the united counties of Leeds and Grenville is available. The representatives elected show that many new faces will be seen on the board. The majority of the old members have been returned and among these the choice for warden goes to Leeds County, with Hugh Stinson, reeve of Kitley, as the most likely candidate.

FIRE AT NAPANEE.

At One Time Entire Business District Was in Peril.

NAPANEE, Jan. 10.—Fire, which broke out in the Mack House last night about 11 o'clock, destroyed the hotel, a three-storey brick structure and the opera house, a two-storey brick structure adjoining. For a time it was feared that a large section of the business quarter might be destroyed, but the efforts of the firemen succeeded in confining the flames to the two buildings, and at an early hour the flames were extinguished. The loss will not exceed $15,000. The origin of the fire is not known.

Rabbi Is Charged.

MONTREAL, Jan. 10.—Rabbi Simon Glazer of this city appeared in the police court yesterday afternoon before Judge Leet in answer to a warrant charging him with the converting to his own use the funds of the estate left in his hands as executor two years ago by a Mrs. Liza Miller, who has since died. The case was adjourned.

Rabbi Glazer gives an emphatic denial to the charge.

We earnestly commend those men who are too busy making good to nurse a grouch.

THE SPORTING WORLD

PETES SPURT IN SECOND HALF AND SECURE FOUR GOAL WIN

Oshawa Were Dangerous in the First Period, of Hard Battle on Poor Ice---New Net Guardian Showed up Well

Another step toward the championship! Oshawa Intermediates were the victims and went gamely to defeat by a score of 6-2 at the hands of Captain Giroux and his crew. It was a merry old battle on heavy ice at Brock Street Rink last night, and was anybody's game at the beginning of the last half, when the score stood 1—1, but the local septet started and nothing could stop them. The crowd was the largest so far this season and the fans were given plenty of excitement when Peterboro started piling up the score.

The sensational and spectacular work of Bert Janes, the new net guardian, was the big feature of the game. He came out on several occasions and blocked an Oshawa man after he had passed the defence. He handled the long shots to perfection and his cool-headedness and good judgment saved goals a number of times. Off the ice he is an extra quiet fellow, but once the puck is dropped, he becomes a regular captain. He coaches his defence and keeps them working and amid the noise his hearty "Now altogether fellows" could be heard. He certainly proved himself a find in every sense of the word.

Bond and Bradshaw played a great game at defence. The heavy ice suited the big fellows, especially "Brad." who rushed incessantly. Every man on the forward line worked well. Captain Giroux at right wing put up a grand battle despite the fact that his leg was still bandaged due to the game in Bowmanville. Maurice Park was on his job all the time and with Kelly united in several end to end rushes. The poor ice hindered his shooting to some extent, but at that he peppered the nets with good results. Kelly never played a better game and his back checking had the visitors looking like school boys.

Fred Denison was handicapped by the heavy ice and his fine stick handling was not so prominent as in other appearances he has made, but the way the big boy has learned to use his weight is very gratifying. "Dennie" also produced some fine back checking, which helped to keep Oshawa at bay.

Leo Quinn, whose presence attracted many Lakefield people to the game, was easily the pick of the visitors. His long rushes and fast skating made the back checking of the Petes a necessity. Freeman, their brick-top, right defence man, produced a lot of speed, considering the ice and combined with Quinn on several fast rushes. The rest of the players all played fair hockey and displayed good team work.

Jack Moxon, of Toronto, refereed and is by far the best man who has handled a game in this city for some time. He is particularly good on off sides, a point that won the crowd in the early stages of the game. It is to be hoped that Moxon handles a few more matches here this winter, for he certainly demonstrated his ability.

The teams lined up as follows:

Peterboro—6		Oshawa—2
Janes	goal	R. Fair
Bradshaw	right defence	Freeman
Bond	left defence	Quinn
Denison	rover	W. Fair
Park	centre	Smith
Capt. Giroux	r. wing	Murphy

The Play

The game opened with the locals defending the north goal. Right from the start Janes was called upon to stop a few close ones. Park was hooked over the eye and retired. Murphy being dropped to even up. Bond drew a penalty for tripping and once again Janes gave an exhibition of his class. Play centred around centre ice for a while and then Weller broke away and took a long shot. It struck the boards, bounding back, but he followed up and slammed it in. Time 5 minutes. Peterboro-0, Oshawa-1.

Park and Murphy came back but the former was sent off for chopping. While he was away shots rained heavy on Janes, but he stopped them all. On one occasion he dropped to his knees and saved a sure goal. Park came back and shortly afterwards made a nice rush and scored from outside the defence. Time 7 minutes. Peterboro-1, Oshawa-1.

Bradshaw drew a penalty for body checking and Bond closely followed him for tripping. W. Fair was knocked out by a body check and went off accompanied by Giroux. Quinn injured his knee but in a few moments resumed play. The puck hovered around centre ice till half time.

Second Half

W. Fair and Giroux came back after half time and for a while R. Fair was given several hard shots to handle. Bradshaw broke away and put the locals ahead by a shot from the side. Time 4 minutes. Peterboro-2, Oshawa-1.

A scrimmage in front of Oshawa's net resulted in Park scooping another one in. Time 1 minute. Peterboro-3, Oshawa-1.

Peterboro had the visitors on the run for a few minutes till Quinn broke away but Bond tripped him and was penalized. Park took the puck right up the centre from the face-off and scored. Time 2 minutes. Peterboro-4, Oshawa-1.

Kelly was cut over the eye and he went off for repairs, accompanied by Murphy. The players found shooting impossible and after ten minutes Dennie scored on a lift from close in. Peterboro-5, Oshawa-2.

CHURCH HOCKEY LEAGUE

An Important Meeting Called for Y.M.C.A. Monday Evening

The recently organized Church Hockey League will hold a meeting in the Y. M. C. A. parlors on Monday night at 7:15 sharp. It is absolutely essential for each church entering a team to have it's representative present as permanent officers will be elected, a constitution drafted, and the schedule of games for the season drawn up.

There is no better way of getting our young men of the various churches in touch with each other than in competition through good manly sport. Every effort will be made to keep the games absolutely clean, and members of such will be drawn from those having only an active connection with some branch of the several churches. This league will provide an opportunity for exercise for those not entered in other leagues of the city. Full information to all prospective teams can be secured by phoning Secretary Thompson at the Y. M. C. A.

LOCAL RINKS FOR SPIEL IN LINDSAY NEXT WEEK

Peterboro Club Will be Represented by Four Strong Quartettes

The Lindsay Warder says: "Secretary "Bob" Knowlson has been on the jump for weeks past preparing for the big 'Spiel and has been exceedingly busy. His work concludes Saturday night, as the club has granted him the privilege of entering a rink in the bonspiel and participating in the big events. Mr. G. H. Matthie will have charge of the various draws, and will be the man behind to keep the ball rolling."

Up to yesterday Mr. Knowlson had received no less than 94 entries which means at least some 366 players. That includes the 12 rinks from the Lindsay Club. Among the latest entries are:

Ament of Seaforth, Brock McAuley of Southampton, the only unbeatable skip at the St. Thomas bonspiel; Neil and Dickson, of Glanford; Dr. Fred Walters of Forest, an old Lindsay curler; Madden of Orillia; two rinks from Oshawa; two from North Bay, Brockville and other points.

Peterboro Rinks

Five rinks wil represent the Peterboro Club and they will leave on Monday, start to play Tuesday. The men who will make the trip are as follows: H. Rowe, H. Evans, R. Hicks, T. F. Mathews, skip. A. Archibald, R. Best, H. Foot, J. E. A. Fitzgerald, skip. F. J. Hughes, A. Kay, A. Moore, W. M. Laing, skip. M. C. Tooley, W. H. Collier, D. Davidson, Geo. Boucher skip.

J. W. Brightman, Jas. Skinner, R. M. Waddell, skip.

"Rollie Weir, a former Bear Cat, who starred last night for Syracuse, when that team defeated Toronto Argonauts 5-4. "Pete" Milloy was also in the Syracuse lineup.

PUCKERINGS FROM PUCK

It is a fact that the Boston Exploits eat nothing but spring chicken a la Graham.

In the Mercantile Hockey League games on Monday evening the Tool Room and Bankers clash at eight o'clock; the Examiner and Test at nine and the De Laval and Plumbers at ten.

Janes is there a thousand ways.

Capt. Giroux played a nifty game at right wing. He handed out a few nice body checks.

Moxon is the "best yet." The way he caught the off-sides and kicking the puck along the boards was by no means slow. He checked Weller right off the start for loafing and later penalized Denison for the same thing.

Oshawa is about "the best" in the district and they looked easy.

Belleville defeated Whitby last night by a score of 4-2. This puts Peterboro, Oshawa and Whitby a tie for district honors, each having won 2 and lost 1.

"Hounder" Ross played centre last night for Orillia Intermediates who defeated Collingwood 5-0.

"Jerry" Coughlin played great hockey for Ingersoll last night and his team succeeded in beating Woodstock 7-1.

The Oriental Tonsorial Artists hereby challenge the Oriental staff to a game of hockey to be played any old time or any old place at the Brock Street Rink. It is further understood that the losers of this game are requested to put up an oyster supper.

Already the "artists" have signed up several men for the game, having received special permits to do so. The other seven have gone into rigid training and in order to comply with the required weight, are under a course of dieting.

KING GEORGE'S LOST TO QUEEN ALEXANDRA'S

A very interesting game of hockey was played this morning on the Parker's Rink, Charlotte St., when the Queen Alexandra School defeated the King George School, 11 to 0. Although the ice was heavy, the Q. A. S. team kept the K. G. S. busy in the first half by scoring 9 goals. The second half was a more interesting session. The K. G. S. held the Q. A. S. down, only allowing two goals.

The manager of the rink will arrange for any school games by phoning 12:53 between noon and 1:30 or from 4:30 to 7.30 p.m.

ERIE GETS BERTH IN CANADIAN BALL LEAGUE

Canadian Press Despatch.

Toronto, Jan. 10.—A telegram was received here to-day from J. H. Farrell, president of the association of minor baseball leagues, assigning Erie, Pa., to the Canadian Baseball League. The franchise now held in Guelph will be transferred there. Percy Kerwin has bought the Berlin Club and is in Berlin to-day completing the purchase. It is not known whether the Berlin Club will be transferred to Niagara Falls or Toronto. This seems to portend no organized baseball in Guelph and Berlin next summer.

The editor at one of the experiment stations, desiring a complete reference library of his state, sent a circular letter to the horticultural, dairying and other agricultural organizations of Wisconsin asking for copies of their "last report."

PREMIER SPENT RESTLESS DAY

Dr. Reaume Calls at Hotel Where Premier is Ill.

NEW YORK, Jan. 10.—No material change took place yesterday in the condition of Sir James Whitney, the Premier of Ontario, who is lying ill with heart trouble at the Manhattan hotel. The bulletin issued last last night read as follows:

"Sir James Whitney has had a rather restless day. Condition this evening is favorable as could be expected."

After issuing this announcement, Dr. R. A. Pyne, the Ontario Premier's political colleague and physician, left the sickroom. A short time later, accompanied by Horace Wallis, secretary to the Premier, he went for a long walk. This circumstance was taken as a good omen in itself.

Neither Dr. Pyne nor Mr. Wallis cared to amplify the bulletin. While they appear hopeful, they guardedly expressed themselves neither one way or the other.

Among those who called at the Hotel Manhattan yesterday was Hon. Dr. J. O. Reaume, Minister of Public Works for Ontario, who reached port yesterday on his way back from Europe. He was in consultation with Dr. Pyne and Mr. Wallis, but it was not stated whether he saw his leader.

In reply to questions regarding the evening bulletin, Dr. Pyne explained that the restlessness which the patient exhibits had been more marked yesterday than on Thursday. It was also considerably more marked as the afternoon wore on.

By evening, however, Sir James quieted down, and when Dr. Pyne left him, shortly before 10 o'clock, he was resting comfortably and it seemed assured that he would have another good night's rest. The manner in which he has obtained his night's rest, and the facility with which he has taken his nourishment have been among the most encouraging factors in his condition.

WERE GUESTS OF THE CHINAMEN

Teachers and Officers of Two Churches Were Entertained.

The Chinese students of St. Paul's Presbyterian and Murray Street Baptist Sunday Schools gave their annual banquet for their teachers and officers of the Sunday School last night in St. Paul's Sunday School room. The banquet was arranged by the Chinese themselves and as caterers, they have few equals. After the banquet a short program was given which included vocal duet by Jack Kew, and Tom Qua; solo Tom Game; vocal duet Hum Jack, and Lou Chung; recitation by Mr. W. A. Logan, solo by Mrs. Perin and solo by Mr. Quick.

Rev. J. R. Webb and Mr. L. Pettit of Murray Street Baptist Sunday School gave short addresses as did Mr. H. B. Cowan, who acted in the capacity of chairman. The features of the evening were the addresses of welcome by the two most learned students, Hum Jack and W. Young. The following were the addresses:

Address of Welcome

Dear Teachers and Friends:

It is my duty and also my great pleasure to welcome you here tonight, on behalf of my fellow countrymen. You well know that the great human family, the world over, is ever thankful for favors extended to its members, and we as members of that family from a remote part of the earth, now living in your midst, take this opportunity of thanking you for your kindness in teaching us your language. By your efforts in this direction, we have been able to see Christ as we never saw Him before, and I trust we all shall grow in knowledge of Him, day by day.

We know that we can never repay you for your energies in this direction of teaching, but we are all most anxious to thank you and it is for this reason that this little repast has been provided.

I know that my imperfect English would weary you, if I should proceed and as I am quite aware that you are not at all acquainted with my own dialect, I shall thank you again for your attendance here tonight, and for your past efforts in our behalf, and close my welcome to you, by reading the first 12 verses of the 5th Chapter of St. Matthew.

HUM JACK.

Dear Teachers and Friends:

We are very glad like all the gentlemen and Mr. Madams and Miss Ladies come around to be in here had some the couple tea today.

Who give the couple tea for us is the God made the rain come down become water. We keep it water on pond, and then the water through the pipe go round to be in every house and to be in St. Paul's church we will us made it for tea.

And the God is the four seasons come over us the spring with it's green grass on the land for all the people go around playing the ball.

The summer with it's green tall tree on the park make it shade for all the school boy and girl go around picnic.

The autumn with it's fruit for all the people made its for food.

The winter is frost and snow for all the people go skating. Then the God give the world, told us the world is not flat, it is round like a ball, the outside of the earth is called it's surface. The people live on the surface of the earth. The surface of the earth is made up of land and water. One-fourth of earth's surface is land, and three-fourths is water. The ship sail on ocean, they can sail round the world. The earth is very large. Then I will hope all the people must come round to be in the St. Paul's church every Sunday, hearing the delicious gospel from all the Sunday School teachers and reading the Bible and believing the God made us, the God love us and the God forgive us the sins and made the God give us the kindness is I hope so.

W. Y. YOUNG.

There were about 15 Chinese present and their interests were looked after by their teacher, Mrs. J. Sharpe, assisted by Miss J. Garrow.

TEA IN FRIENDLY VILLAGE IN 1862

The afternoon tea held in Friendly Village 1862 was presented in the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium last evening by the Charlotte Street Ladies' Aid Society for the benefit of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Y.M.C.A. Both from entertainment and financial standpoints one of the most profitable functions held for some time by the ladies in behalf of the Y.M.C.A. was this function.

The gymnasium decorated with appropriate pictures and relics of '62, presented a realistic old fashioned aspect, making it a credit to the ladies in charge of the decorations.

HEALTH FOR BABY.

To keep the baby healthy and strong his little stomach must be kept sweet and his bowels working regularly—that is the secret of health in little ones. The mother who keeps a supply of Baby's Own Tablets in the house can feel reasonably sure that her little ones are going to escape the results of childhood ailments, for the Tablets instantly relieve and cure such troubles as constipation, indigestion, colds, colic and worms by regulating the stomach and bowels. Concerning them Mrs. Jas. Deroche, Cache Bay, Ont., writes: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets for three years and have always found them the best remedy for little ones." They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MR. G. A. GILLESPIE IS ELECTED TO THE EXECUTIVE

Eastern Dairymen's Association Concludes Its Sessions at Cornwall.

CORNWALL, Jan. 10.—An appeal to the Eastern Dairymen's Association to put forth its best efforts to increase the quantity as well as the quality of dairy products was made by Secretary T. A. Thompson, of Almonte, at the concluding day of that organization's convention here yesterday.

The past year had been a most successful one, he said, but much work still remained to be done to meet the growing demand in Canada, and the increasing dependence which the Mother Country put upon Canadian foodstuffs.

The high cost of living was discussed at some length. One delegate blamed the cold storage people for holding produce, whereupon Senator Derbyshire remarked that, as regards eggs, there were not enough in storage in the whole of Canada to last a month. The general opinion among the speakers was that the establishment of cold storage plants was one of the best things the Government ever did for the farmers.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: Hon. president, Hon. Senator Derbyshire, Brockville; president, James A. Sanderson, Oxford Station; first vice-president, J. Nelson Stone, Norham; second vice-president, R. G. Leggatt, Newboro; third vice-president, Joseph McGrath, Mount Chesney; secretary, T. A. Thompson, Almonte; treasurer, Jas. R. Anderson, Mountain View; executive committee, Henry Glendinning, Manilla; G. A. Gillespie, Peterboro; J. A. Anderson, Oxford Station; Jas. McGrath, Mount Chesney; Nelson Stone, Norham; W. H. Olmstead, Bearbrook; R. G. Leggatt, Newboro; Neil Fraser, Vankleek Hill; directors, H. Glendinning, Manilla; G. A. Gillespie, Peterboro; T. H. Thompson, Madoc; W. Farley, Cannifton; J. Nelson Stone, Norham; T. J. Wright, Picton; Fred Alexander, Napanee; Jos. McGrath, Mount Chesney; Geo. Leggatt, Newboro; J. A. Campbell, Ormond; Capt. John Gillies, Glen Norman; Neil Fraser, Vankleek Hill; Wm. Brown, Dickinson's Landing; W. H. Olmstead, Bearbrook; J. B. Ferguson, Renfrew; Hugh Clark, Roseville; Fred. Dalworth, North Gower; Jas. A. Sanderson, Oxford Station; auditors, M. Bird, Stirling; John Hyatt, Picton; Mr. Sanderson.

This closed the business of the convention.

THE LIBRARY OF THE T.A.S.

A List of New Books Recently Added to the Library.

One division of St. Peter's Total Abstinence Society that has flourished with the same unlimited strides as the society has done itself is the Ladies' Literary Society of St. Peter's T.A.S. This literary society dates back to a quarter of a century ago when it was known as the C. L.A. With that society was closely connected the name of the late Rev. Father Lynch, and through the great efforts of that reverend gentleman, a library was commenced. When the T.A.S. was founded, they took over this library, and it was, as it is now, in charge of the Ladies' Literary Society.

Rev. Father Lynch's interest did not cease when the change took place but rather it was doubled and besides assisting in a financial manner, he bequeathed at his much lamented death, books from his private library including some three hundred, the works of French authors and many of the educational class. Rev. Father O'Sullivan the founder of the T.A.S. also assisted along this line as did Bishop O'Brien ,during the period which he was the spiritual adviser of the society. The present spiritual advisor, the Rev. Dean McColl, has through his unbounded generosity presented the library with many useful and educative works. Within the past year he has given several volumes, which include the works of Tennyson, Harte, Dickens and many others. The society and particularly the Ladies' Literary Society is very thankful to Rev. Dean McColl for his able assistance and interest.

For the past number of years the position of librarian of this library has been in the capable hands of Mrs. L. McCarthy and the personal interest which she has demonstrated in this work, is very much appreciated by the society and by the members belonging to the library. The library has most beautiful quarters, and nothing is minus which could tend in any way to make it the more up-to-date. On its shelves are found over 2,000 books which include educational, fiction, works of standard authors, essays, poetry, biographical and historical, religious and miscellaneous.

During the past month the following new books have been purchased:

The Sister of Charity—Dorsey.

So far there's nothing new about the year except the fresh colds most of us have taken.

"THE LITTLE DAMOZEL"

Here Wednesday Next Jan. 4

"The Little Damozel" opens as a somewhat sordid farce, breaks into real drama in the second act and ends with a real throb of human happiness. It is rather a play to be proud of. It's treatment is so genuine a surprise to the audience, its epigrams are so sparkling; and the story of the home life in the Cafe Angelique reaches at times almost classic fineness. It reminds one of no other play, and in spite of rather cleverer bon-mots than one hears in actual life, there is a note of realism that occasionally suggests Ibsen and Hauptmann. When Mamma Bartholdy talks half cynically, half fondly of love in her quaint German way; when the genial ex-rip Recklaw Pools says: "I never see three men drinking champagne without wondering who has been done," it certainly is put right up to the stall seat holder that he isn't listening to an ordinary play at all.

Lawrence Brough and his English company have to receive many cordial congratulations for their work. As it is an Olga Esme play first and foremost, she should primarily be mentioned. And let it be said that this "Little Damozel" of hers is exceedingly taking altogether charming. She can rise to passion, too; and she can melt to woman's prerogative in forgiveness. It is rather an exacting role. Because she is the "Little Damozel" it goes without saying that she can be virtually bought. And when the transaction is signed, sealed and happily delivered, a few kisses should well enough compensate a woman who has plenty of dresses to wear and a nice flat to live in. But the "Little Damozel" is made of sterner stuff. To see Miss Esme is to know how well the part can be played.

Lawrence Brough, as maker of epigrams, calmly suave as ex-turf, ex-club-man, plays wonderfully easily. He has a part after his own heart, and with his gifted wife carries through some really difficult scenes with just that veiled touch of emotion that marks the Englishman who can still play the game. It is an excellent psychological study, excellently rendered.

The remaining members of the cast portrayed their roles in excellent fashion. The seat sale for the local engagement at The Grand next Wednesday, January 14th, opens on Monday morning at the box office.

AN AIR SPLINT TREATMENT USED

Experiments in New Tuberculosis Cure Are Hopeful.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—A new method of treating tuberculosis is being investigated by the public health service through experiments at Fort Stanton, N.M., and officials of the service last night said they were inclined to be hopeful of important results.

The methods is known as artificial or induced pneumo-thorax. Air is pumped into the patient's pleural cavity every day or two to maintain pressure, and the results watched by means of X-rays to ascertain the extent to which the diseased lung is compressed. The lung, figuratively, is put into an "air splint," and nature given a chance to cure.

The reports so far tell only of the progress of the experiments, and the officials, while optimistic, said it was too early to prophesy. They are inclined to believe, however, that it may prove effective in any stage of the disease.

Since Sept. 1st there has been 134 cases of scarlet fever in Stirling.

Fifty-five great irrigation projects involving nearly 10,000,000 acres of land, are under consideration for India.

MAYOR BULLER'S ADDRESS TO THE COUNCIL OF TEN

Ald. Saunders and Ald. Stratton Welcomed as New Members

A BIG PROGRAM

His Worship Deals With Important Questions in Inaugural Address

The City Council of 1914, met this morning in the Council Chamber, with all members present and Mayor Buller in the chair. Three citizens made up the audience and ex-Mayor Bradburn had a seat inside the railing.

The inaugural address by Mayor Buller and the drafting of the various committees were the chief items of business.

Ald. W. J. Johnston moved the first motion of the year, when he moved, seconded by Ald. Langford, that the matters contained in the Mayor's address be referred to the committees for consideration. His Worship's address was as follows:

Gentlemen:

Permit me to welcome you to your duties as members of this city council for this year, and especially the members new to those duties, Ald. Saunders and Ald. Stratton. I congratulate those members who having sought re-election, were so heartily endorsed by the ratepayers and returned by such handsome majorities.

The duties of the council of a city of this size are always important, but this year we will have to attend to work of special importance, and I am sure that we will all give our best attention and our best judgment to the subjects that will come before us.

Sewage Disposal

Works for the disposal of the sewage of the city will have to be constructed. The plans for these were partly prepared last year, and it will be necessary to have them completed as early as possible, and passed upon and forwarded to the Provincial authorities for their approval, so that the work may be proceeded with promptly. Great care will need to be exercised, both to construct a system that will be efficient and adequate, and to keep the expenditure down to as low a figure as can be done and accomplish the necessary results.

Hydro-Electric

The Hydro-Electric scheme for the city must be carried forward to completion with the co-operation of the Hydro-Electric Commission. An application made to the County Judge for an order for possession of the Peterboro Light and Power Co.'s plant has not been decided, and the fact brought out in the proceedings that the Peterboro Light & Power Co., had purchased the Auburn Power Co.'s dam and power house after the city's legislation had been dealt with will need attention. Hydro-Electric power for light and power purposes must be obtained by the city as soon as possible, and the remaining action for this purpose taken.

Street Paving

The street paving contract let last year was not completed when weather conditions stopped the work for the season, and the work contracted for will be completed. It will be well at the same time to consider whether further work of this character should be undertaken this year and what streets should next be paved.

Street Railway

Steps should be taken to secure extensions of the street railway. The ratepayers having decided that a bridge should not be built at Dalhousie Street at this time a belt line across the river at that point cannot be constructed now, but other belts or extensions would be useful for the people and should be feasible for the company. This question might be taken up by the Railway Committee.

Water Service

There are sections of the city that should have waterworks that are now without that service, and the council will, on doubt, be ready and willing to co-operate with the Water Commissioner so far as we can, to secure needed extensions of the mains.

The Assessment

The assessment being the foundation for the collection of the bulk of the revenue of the city, including the moneys of the Board of Education and other bodies, is one of general interest and importance. Permit me to ask you to have immediate attention given to the question of the publication of the assessment roll. It seems to me that it should be feasible and not [illegible] expensive to have it published [illegible] if so, it's publication will meet general approval.

Sanitation

Sanitation is a subject of great importance, and while it is one that comes largely under the jurisdiction of the Board of Health, the council can assist in the work of securing cleanliness and pure food and other supplies, and arrangements might be made with the hospitals or the City Health Department for a free medical dispensary sufficiently organized to be of service to the people who need it and would be benefited by it. In this connection the system of garbage collection will need further consideration. There will need to be a decision as to whether the area from which the collection is made, will be extended, and a change made in the law at the last session of the legislature necessitates a revision of the method of collecting the revenue to pay the expense.

Moral Conditions

Moral conditions may not have been considered the primary interest of a municipal council, but prevention is better than cure, and while policemen are rightly employed for the protection of the citizens, it will be our duty to take any steps we can that will conduce to the moral welfare of the city, especially in shielding and guiding those young in years.

Building By-Law

The Building By-law should receive attention with a view to revision and better provision should be made for the protection of the public using the sidewalks where buildings are being erected.

High Cost of Living

The high cost of living has been brought home to everyone, and I wish to ask you to consider carefully how the market regulations may be wisely amended to encourage lower prices of articles of food.

New Industries

It has for many years been the policy of the council to secure manufacturing industries of a substantial character, and we will continue to work together in that matter. If we are fortunate in securing new industries this year, we should try to arrange among the other conditions, that at times when men have to be laid off, the preference will be given to men with families by retaining them at work.

It has been suggested that, especially as the Water Commissioner will have new duties it would be well to have provision made so that the Mayor would be a member of that Board. This would ensure a closer touch between the Water Commissioners and the Council, and if you think it would be of any advantage to the city, legislation to this end can be asked for.

It may seem that I have outlined a fairly heavy program, especially as other important matters will no donbt, come up to be dealt with, and the general work must be carried on, but I have done so with confidence, knowing that you will give serious consideration to any subject introduced with a view to benefiting the city and will take such action as you believe will advance the interest of the ratepayers.

It is the interest of the city, we wish to serve and I am confident that we will work together in harmony for that purpose.

ALD. LANGFORD AND GREEN GET CHAIRMANSHIP; ALD. DUNCAN TO LEAD BOARD OF WORKS

The following is the draft of Committees as recommended by the Committee of the whole Council this morning:

BROKE THROUGH THE ICE NEAR BURNHAM'S POINT

Timothy Whaley Was Able to Reach Safety After a Cold Bath

An unexpected cold bath was the fate of Mr. Timothy Whaley, 272 Wescott street, early Saturday morning. Mr. Whaley is employed in the mills of the Peterborough Lumber Company and as is customary, was crossing the ice from Point St. Charles. The mild weather of the few days prior to Saturday had no doubt made the ice unsafe and when Mr. Whaley was about 20 feet from shore he went through the ice. Presence of mind and a little tact enabled him to pull himself out, and outside of missing a half-day's work he was none the worse for his mishap.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE CANADIAN GENERAL

As Told in the Address of President Frederic Nichols—A Career of Unbroken Prosperity.

The President of the Canadian General Electric Co., Ltd., Mr. Frederic Nichols, has issued an address to the Company and which has appeared in pamphlet form. It is a very interesting account of the inception of the Company and its development. From the address the following excerpts are taken:

The address was read at a meeting of the directors held on December 27th, 1913, to commemorate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the formation of the syndicate which ultimately established the concern in question. At the outset it was sought only to inquire into the feasibility of placing on a permanent basis a system of incandescent lighting. So promising appeared the outlook at the time that immediate steps were taken to carry out the undertaking. The preliminary steps were tedious. Six months were consumed in negotiating an agreement with the Edison Electric Light Company, of New York, for the exclusive use of their system, and by prolonged negotiations with the City of Toronto for a franchise to generate electric light and power and distribute the same by underground conductors.

Inception of Enterprise

It was on the 27th of December 1883, that a number of Toronto's public-spirited citizens joined Mr. Nicholls in providing a fund to defray the necessary preliminary expenses. Little did any of them imagine the tremendous development that lay before their enterprise. Ten of them undertook to subscribe $1,000 a piece. Those assets amounting in the aggregate to $10,000, have now grown into assets in the neighborhood of $25,000,000. An average steady growth in this department of one million dollars a year would be remarkable enough in the case of an industry in a new country exploiting a new field of enterprise, but more remarkable still is the fact that a dividend has been earned and paid every year on the outstanding capital since the day of organization. Surely Mr. Nicholls and his associates well may be proud of a record so unique. And Mr. Nicholls is not left alone to indulge in personal pride in this connection, for six out of the original eight directors are still acting in that capacity after an unbroken period of a quarter of a century.

The First Company

The first concern organized by the syndicate was the Toronto Incandescent Light Company, on June 26th, 1889, which, after a most successful career, was finally amalgamated with the Toronto Electric Light Company. Then came the parent of the present Canadian General Electric—the Toronto Construction and Electrical Supply Company, which was set on foot on Feb. 11th, 1891. Electrical apparatus and supplies were to be sold and an alliance, with this object in view, was made with an American company, following the same line of business. So successful was this company in obtaining the recognition of the purchasing public that negotiations were entered into to secure all the Canadian property and interests of the Edison Electric Light Company, including their factory at Peterboro. After some delay an agreement was concluded, and the Canadian General Electric Company was organized on Sept. 5th, 1892. At that time the company's assets consisted solely of the land and buildings at Peterboro, now it owns ten manufacturing establishments, the head office and six branch office buildings.

Attained It's Majority

Having attained its majority, the Canadian General Electric can look back over a career of unbroken prosperity. So conservatively have its operations been conducted that, in addition to having paid out no less a sum than $6,286,744 in dividends, during the past twenty years, a surplus nearly equal to 40 per cent. of the paid-up capital, both common and preferred, has been accumulated. In the company's capitalization there is absolutely no "water" every share of whatever rank having been sold for cash at par or better, and the average cash received by the company has been $118 per share sold. Mr. Nicholls is quite right in claiming this to have been unusual in the annals of Canadian industrials. The company has sufficient cash and current assets to pay off every dollar of indebtedness also the entire issue of preferred stock, and still leave nearly $50 in net quick assets, for every share of common stock in addition to all the capital assets. Mr. Nicholls looks forward to the future with confidence. The prosperity of the company is sure to run parallel to the country. The trunk line railways will undoubtedly electrify certain sections, such as terminals and mountain divisions, and this will mean much. Always the utilization of the Dominion's magnificent waterpowers will impart impetus to this industry. Already nearly every city town and village has the advantage of hydro-electric power.

THE WEATHER

Yesterday was the coldest day of the winter up to the present time, and 17 degrees below zero was reached in the early morning hours. During the day the temperature moderated considerably and 18 degrees above was reached. This morning's temperature was 5 degrees above, with a strong wind blowing. At noon it had gone down to zero. The prospects are for a low figure tonight.—W. P.

SIR JAMES HAS CHANGE FOR THE WORSE

Doctors Report His Condition as Less Favorable.

HAD POOR NIGHT.

Members of Premier's Party Anxious and Worried.

Canadian Press Despatch

NEW YORK, Jan. 12.—A change for the worse this morning was indicated by a bulletin issued at Manhattan hotel in regard to Sir James Whitney's conditions.

For nearly a week the doctors had daily reported little change, but at eleven-thirty today after examination, doctors Pyne and Biggs were compelled to state the Premier's condition was "less favorable and that he had spent a poor night." A change was immediately reflected in the conduct of Sir James' party. An anxious and worried look came back to the faces of Dr. Pyne and Secretary Wallis, and it was decided that one or the other must remain within call of the sick room until the relapse is over.

LATER.

New York, Jan. 12.—At two o'clock there was no improvement in the condition of Sir James from his eleven-thirty condition, at which time the doctors issued the bulletin: "Less favorable."

Dr. Pyne is in constant attendance and Dr. Biggs is ready to rush to the hotel on receiving a call. Sir James' private car is on a siding only a few yards from the hotel, but Dr. Pyne is obviously afraid to order the patient's removal.

PETERBOROUGH, MONDAY, JAN. 12, 1914.

LEGISLATION AND EDUCATION.

AT THE T. A. S. anniversary the other evening Mr. C. J. Foy made a very strong appeal for temperance and gave some convincing arguments against liquor. But there was a slight inconsistency in his attitude toward temperance legislation. Mr. Foy contended that temperance can only be brought about by education. He did not believe in Local Option or any of the popular methods of dealing with the evil.

Apart from the merits or de-merits of Local Option or any other kind of legislation, Mr. Foy must admit that to govern any country properly you must impose definite restriction upon certain things. Mr. Foy himself cited the case of Mexico as being an instance where liberty had become license. Education is a good thing, it is the best thing, but to educate you must have fixed rules, you must have discipline. No child will be good or obey its parent by mere verbal instruction, any parent knows this. All men will not obey the moral law or the laws of the country for the love of them. Does Mr. Foy suppose that if murder, robbery, bigamy, were not prohibited and punishable by law that these crimes would not be committed more than they are ? To institute a law against bigamy does not get rid of bigamy, but it brands the bigamist as a criminal, and that fact has a restraining influence upon men, giving them a distinct sense of right and wrong.

"The fear o' hell's the hangman whip
To keep the wretch in order."

The Bishop made a very sensible comment on the address when he said we should support every legitimate and fair means of dealing with intemperance. While we do not believe in extreme legislation we cannot agree with Mr. Foy that the only way of getting rid of the liquor evil is by education. If Mr. Foy followed out his own very excellent arguments to their logical conclusion he wuold see that education involves restraint and outside force. He himself quoted the words, "lead us not into temptation."

The T. A. S. has done a good work in Peterborough, its methods have been largely along educative lines among its members, but no society lives unto itself and many of its members have used their influence in the direction of practical methods of dealing with the problem during the fourteen years the T. A. S. has been in existence.

ORE SMELTING IN EASTERN ONTARIO.

BRITISH TRADE is growing. There is a great increase in both exports and imports. The largest increases in exports were coal, iron and steel. When one considers that England has been exploited for over a thousand years as a mining country it seems nothing short of marvelous that today the British Isles should still lead the world as a mining country. It is true that England is perhaps one of the richest pieces of earth on the globe, for its size, but the riches would have still lain idle and unprofitable but for the insistant and intelligent enterprise of the British people. There is not an inch of the British Isles that has not been ransacked for mineral since the days when Julius Caesar mined for copper and tin. It would be safe to say that if the virgin mineral fields of Ontario were worked with the same diligence and skill that England puts into her old mining areas, Ontario would be a more prosperous country and our exports would not be so much below our imports as they are today. There is sufficient mineral in this country for our own use and for the establishment of our export trade as well.

The mining industry in Eastern Canada has always been seriously handicapped by the lack of smelting facilities at home, and the necessity of marketing all the copper, lead, zinc and complex ores in either Europe or the United States. Certain spasmodic and generally misguided attempts have been made form time to time to treat lead and copper ores, but the plants have always been too small and the metallurgical knowledge of the operators too limited to produce any profitable results.

Distributed through the Province of Ontario there is a large quantity of smelting material with both a lead and copper content and carrying gold and silver. The Provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia also contain considerable lead, copper and antimony ores that have no market in this country. The only smelting plants in existence in Eastern Canada are in the nickel and copper plants in the Sudbury region, and the small combination works such as Deloro, Thorold, Trout Mills and Swanset, treating high-grade cobalt-silver arsenides by both wet and dry methods. These latter units rarely exceed a capacity of 10 tons per day and will not handle gold-bearing ores. During the past year some attempts have been made to operate small lead smelters, but to a person possessing any metallurgical ability whatsoever, these cannot be regarded as commercial possibilities. We have no doubt that the establishment of a general centrally placed smelting works would act as a powerful stimulant to mining and more especially to the owners of lead and copper bearing ores. On looking closely into the situation it is surprising how many workable deposits of this nature have been opened up, and abandoned merely for want in treatment facilities. The variety of smelting material obtainable is practically unlimited, and no difficulty should be experienced in procuring profitable mixtures.

It is suggested by a practical engineer that the plant should consist of the following appliances and equipment :

One 50 ton per day Standard Matting furnace.

One smaller matting furnace, for handling speiss and matte.

One sintering or pot roasting unit, small size.

One hand roasting or reverberatory furnace for matte.

One hand roasting or reverberatory furnace for ore.

One smaller roasting or reverberatory furnace

One culpallation furnace and accesories pertaining thereto.

Lead refining and softening kettles.

A tank system for wet treatment, designed so as to allow the different standard hydrometallurgical processes being carried out therein.

Crushing and sampling plant.

Such a plant as outlined above would take care of any complex ore that Eastern Canada produces. The most desirable location would probably be along the north shore of Lake Ontario. It only needs some one with sufficient brains, capital, confidence and vision to take hold of a scheme such as is here suggested to give a new lease of life to Eastern Ontario.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

FARMERS are said to be working on the land harrowing in Alsask, Sask. One farmer will sow five acres of wheat as an experiment of January seeding.

A MOVEMENT is on foot for the holding of a world's fair in Montreal in 1917. It would be of a National, Imperial and International character. The occasion would be the celebrating of the Jubilee of Canada.

NORTHERN ONTARIO is to have a school of mines. That is a move in the right direction. A little more education in this important business would mean less failures among our mining industries. There are too many amateurs, not to say bunglers at the job.

"DON'T BELIEVE the pelt of the skunk is the only part of him that is worth while," says an Amercian writer. "If Philadelphia cooks only knew how to prepare it, skunk meat would be as popular with men who like gamey food like 'possum, roast coon and bear steaks as the pelts are with the women folks." But the skunk has got a bad name—and a bad smell.

A HUSBAND in Jersey City is charged with murder for pouring alcohol on his wife and setting her on fire with a match. This is at least a quicker way of murdering a wife with alcohol than that of drinking alcohol and murdering her by slow degrees with worry and wretchedness, as is the case with many men who call themselves husbands.

SATURDAY NIGHT tells a story of the late Rev. Starr, of Toronto, as follows :

"Are you a Christian ?" Mr. Starr asked a little negro.

"Yes, sah ; I'se a Christian."

"Well, are you a Methodist ?" continued the minister.

"Oh, no, sah ; I'se a niggah, and that's bad enough," was the child's unexpected answer.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

Home Lessons.

Montreal Gazette.

The movement to abolish home work for school children is again being advocated, one of the reasons advanced being that the youngsters would thus have more time to spend in social pleasure with their parents. Perhaps that would be the effect in some cases under the suggested order. On the other hand it might mean additional time spent on the streets and at cheap theatres by children who would be better off in the house at night.

How to Tango.

Gazette.

Some church dignitaries and peeresses who witnessed a special performance of the tango gave it a clean bill of health, the vote being 731 to 21 in its favor. One of the guests found the dance so modest that it bored her. It is suspected that the dancers were careful not to offend the observers. The tango may be good or it may be evil. It all depends upon how it is tangoed, just as it depends upon how the waltz is waltzed.

"The Hound of Heaven."

Colliers.

In these days when the song of the efficiency engineer is daily heard louder in the land, let us beware of exaggerating his quality at the expense of all else. Francis Thompson was perhaps the most "inefficient" human being in Europe. To his dying day he was unable to acquire the slightest regularity in the mere business of living.

His (says his biographer, Everard Meynell) was a long series of broken trysts—trysts with the sunrise, trysts with Sunday mass, obligatory but impossible; trysts with friends. . . Dismayed, he would emerge from his room upon a household preparing for dinner when he had lain listening to sounds he thought betokened breakfast.

He probably never earned so much as $2,000 a year, and had it not been for his friends the Meynells, he could hardly have existed even the half a life that was his: he died at forty-seven. Yet he wrote some of the finest poetry in the English tongue, including such a piece of genius as "The Hound of Heaven"—the Odyssey of that divine love (of which human love is an aspect) that pursues us all through life:

So, all things fly thee, for thou fliest Me! . . .
"Rise, clasp my hand, and come!"
Halts by me that footfall;
Is my gloom, after all,
Shade of His hand, outstretched caressingly?
"Ah, fondest, blindest, weakest,
I am He whom thou seekest!
Thou dravest love from thee, who dravest Me!"

What could the efficiency engineer have done for Francis Thompson?

AFTER THE HOLIDAYS

By Walt Mason

Am I the same good natured jay who beamed so much on Christmas day, who said, with fervor in my cry, "The Christmas spirit should not die?" Am I the same old gun who smiled on every grownup, every child, and radiated peace on earth, good will to men, and sterling worth? I have to wonder when I note that I'm as surly as a goat. I come home from the beastly grind with business cares upon my mind; I have a dark and brooding brow, and wear my grudge out on the frau. I growl and snort and fuss around because my slippers can't be found; I cuss because the dinner's late, because the clinkers choke the grate, because the kids, with Christmas toys, are kicking up a beastly noise. And when I'm done with snorts and sneers, I have the whole blamed bunch in tears. And when to roost I go at last, and study o'er the recent past, I wonder if I am the same old scout who played the Christmas game, with beaming smile and beck and nod, with softened heart and loosened wad. The fairies must have come along when I wound up my Christmas song, and then, to their and my disgrace, put some cheap faker in my place.

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

MONDAY, JANUARY TWELFTH

This is the seventy-second birthday of Sir Alexandre Lacoste, former chief justice of Quebec, now living retired in Montreal. Sir Alexandre received his knighthood in 1892, following his elevation to the bench as chief justice of the province, therein enjoying the honor usually accorded to occupants of this position. He had been previously a member of the Dominion Senate and for a short time was its speaker. A man of fine character and high attainments he was an ornament to the bench for many years. His eldest son, the late L. J. Lacoste, was known to fame as the inventor of the Lacoste ship-brake, intended to control the motions of ocean liners, a device which received a great deal of attention from marine engineers.

SIR ROBERT BOND RETIRES

Former Premier of Newfoundland Resents Fishermen's Actions.

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld., Jan. 12. — Sir Robert Bond, the former Premier, announced last night his withdrawal from public life. In an open letter he gave as his reason alleged bad faith on the part of the Coakerites, otherwise known as the Fishermen's Union, which, with the Liberals, formed the opposition led by Sir Robert against Sir Edward Morris, the present Premier, in the general election last October.

After saying that he will abandon the leadership of the Opposition and resign his seat in the Legislature from the Twillingate district, Sir Robert adds:

"I will never be a party to allowing any organization representing one element in the community to gain control of public affairs to the exclusion of other interests, as is now the avowed policy of the Fishermen's Union."

Sir Robert Bond has long been one of the most prominent figures in the public life of Newfoundland. For many years he was Premier until the Liberal party was overthrown by the people's party, headed by Sir Edward Morris, who was once Attorney-General in Sir Robert's Cabinet.

The Right Hon. Sir Robert Bond was born in St. John's, Nfld., in 1857, and entered the Legislature in 1882, and became Speaker of the Assembly in 1884. He was made Colonial Secretary, with a seat in the Cabinet, in 1889.

The ex-Premier has been a prominent figure in international politics for many years.

UNION MEN UNDECIDED.

South African Situation Is Better Over the Week End.

JOHANNESBURG, Jan. 12.—The situation with respect to the railway strike was more faverable last night. The mass meeting called by the council of trades federation was held in the market square and proved to be quite orderly. Martial law was not proclaimed and conditions were quiet both here and at Pretoria.

The Government appears to retain full control and the mass meeting at Cape Town was unable to agree to a resolution either for or against the strike.

The warrants for the arrest of Bain and Mason, the leaders of the trades federation have not yet been executed owing to the vigilance of their followers. Nine thousand persons attended the market square meeting. Not a single policeman or soldier was visible, although there were plenty secreted within the hall. Mason delivered a violent speech, but the other speakers counselled respect for the law.

"Damaged Goods" Hooted.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J., Jan. 12.—Richard Bennett, playing the leading role in "Damaged Goods" at the Apollo, was hooted off the stage Saturday night by gallery artists. He bore the running comment shouted from the third tier as long as he could and then, breaking off his line, turned to the tormenters and cried:

"I've gone through hell to produce this play and do not intend to have its effect spoiled by rowdyism."

Such a volley of shouts followed this remark that Bennett turned and fled.

The play was reviewed by municipal officials and recommended to the public.

Girl Leaps From Aeroplane.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Jan. 12.—One of the two women passengers carried Friday by Glenn Martin, an aviator, stepped from his machine when it was 850 feet in the air. She reached the ground safely and demonstrated to Martin's satisfaction the practicability of a new aerial life preserver.

Policeman Knocked Out.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Jan. 12.—When Patrolman Charles Smith attempted to arrest George and Fred. Henderson on intoxication charges at Falls and Second street last night, he was knocked out, being unconscious for fifteen minutes.

Jack Hunter's Thanksgiving

How He Dined on Thanksgiving Day

By DELIA ELLISON

Jack Hunter, a sailor boy, having come ashore with some companions on the arrival of his ship after a three years' cruise, following sailor customs, proceeded to blow in all his savings within a few days.

Now, this was sowing the wind to reap the whirlwind, for they had all received permission to go to their homes to spend Thanksgiving, and, having spent all his money instead, he had not the wherewithal to pay for a ticket on the railroad to anywhere.

"What'll you do, Jack," asked Joe Baxter, one of his mates—"go back aboard the ship for the ordinary Thanksgiving dinner of salt pork, with plum duff thrown in for Thanksgiving, or walk where you are going?"

"I'll not go to the ship," Jack replied. "I don't like the railroads, anyway. They're dangerous. They swing around the curves in a way to make an old salt sick, and if they don't make him sick they scare him to death, which is worse. There's no sea room on a railroad, and when two trains are comin' together head on on the same track there's no sheerin' off, and there's no savin' of life by jumpin' into the water, for there's nothin' but hard ground below. No, sir. I want an open sea for my meanderin's. I'm goin' to walk."

"What you going to do for grub on the way?"

"Reckon I'll fish in the streams."

"Fish! You can't eat the measly little fish that swim in fresh water."

This staggered Jack. He was born on the ocean, his father having been captain of a schooner, and his knowledge of the land was very meager. His parents were both dead, and he had no brothers or sisters; consequently he had no reason for going to where his mother had lived. There was no one he cared to see, no one with whom to eat a Thanksgiving dinner after he got there. He was somewhat discouraged at the information that fresh water fish were not eatable, for he could not think of any way to support himself on a journey except by grub out of the water. He hesitated whether to try it or go back on to the ship.

But there was one attraction that decided him to go on. During one year that he had lived on land he had played with a little girl named Margie. What her other name was he didn't know. Margie was the only being living—if, indeed, she did live—who connected him with the past. He longed to see her just once to ask her if she remembered playing hide and seek in the haycocks with him.

So he started out the morning of Thanksgiving day to walk to the village where he had spent this one year. He didn't remember much about the route, but had been told that he must proceed in a northwesterly direction. Baxter had 25 cents left, which he bestowed upon Jack. After a discussion as to how the money had best be spent it was decided that Jack would need a compass even more than food. So they stepped into a shop, bought a compass, and after a farewell handshake Jack started on his journey.

Jack soon found that he could get on better by inquiring the way than by relying on his compass, for sometimes the compass would take him across a bay, and a man he met told him how he could go by road. About noon, getting hungry, he stepped into a small restaurant and traded his compass for a couple of sandwiches. During the afternoon a glimmering of memory came to him as to the route he passed over, and here and there a house, a clump of trees, a meadow, a bridge, struck him familiarly. About dusk he came to the schoolhouse where he and Margie had learned to spell words of one and two syllables, had played at recess and had gone together to their homes after school let out.

"YOU CAN'T BE MY MARGIE!"

After that he didn't need a compass or any one to tell him the way—that is, he wouldn't have needed either had it not been for night coming on. He pursued his way, guided rather by distance than sight, and, presently coming to a crossroad, he remembered that Margie used to live down the road to the right for about half a mile. So he turned into it and walked on, though overhanging trees darkened the way.

Jack had proceeded down the cross road about a quarter of a mile when he came to a house. It couldn't be the house where Margie had lived, for that house, as has been stated, was half a mile from the crossing of the roads. At any rate, it had seemed that distance to Jack sometimes when he triangulated it with his little seven-year-old legs. But what surprised him was that the house looked like the house in which Margie had lived. The only light was one downstairs in the rear. Jack went back where he saw the light and looked in through a window.

The sight he saw excited an appetite already keen. He was looking into a kitchen, and viands were cooking on a stove. There was no sound except the sizzling of the cooking viands. Jack put his hand to the sash and found he could easily raise it. He did so, and the odor of the cooking, mingled with the sound of the sizzling, was delicious to a hungry man. Together they took away every vestige of conscience. He climbed into the window, determined to partake of the refreshment before him.

The first thing he did was to throw open the oven door, and there was a turkey just turning a delicious brown. Jack had served a term in the galley aboard ship, and he instinctively basted the sizzling bird. Then he uncovered a dish on the rear of the stove and from the delicious odor it emitted judged that it was a mince pie being warmed. Other dishes were in process of preparation, but Jack was so entranced with the turkey and the pie that he took little notice of them.

It was hard for him to wait till the turkey was thoroughly cooked, but he held on to himself and waited. Finally he could refrain no longer, and "dishing up," he placed the various viands on the table and sat down to eat.

Jack remembered that his mother used to ask a blessing before each meal. He could not repeat a blessing to save his life, but he was so thankful for the delicious dinner provided for him by Providence that he shut his eyes, bent his head and expressed his thanks in his own peculiar way. Then straightening up and opening his "blinkers," he sat for a few moments rigid. A young woman stood looking at him from the other end of the room. On her face was an expression of consternation at seeing a man sitting at her table about to eat her Thanksgiving dinner.

"Ship ahoy!" said Jack by way of speaking to this person, who had so suddenly appeared on the scene.

"Well, I declare!" was the reply.

"Would you mind tellin' me what port you hail from?"

"Would you mind telling me what you mean by making yourself at home in my house and eating my dinner?"

"Is this your dinner?"

"My dinner! Goodness gracious, what impudence!"

Had Jack not been in his sailor togs doubtless the girl would have been frightened out of her senses. As it was, she was simply astonished. Besides, Jack was a good looking chap with an honest eye in his head, and when, realizing the situation, a smile broke out on his comely young face the owner of the dinner could not help responding in kind. Jack rose and in a few words told her how he had just reached port and had been given leave to go home for Thanksgiving; that he had no home and had been looking for a little girl he used to play with called Margie when hungry as a bear he had stumbled on a dinner. Then he begged her pardon for proposing to eat what belonged to her and added that he would go on a quarter of a mile farther to where Margie used to live when he was a boy.

"Why, my name is Margie," said the girl. "I'm Margaret Wharton."

"You can't be my Margie! She was a little bit of a— Anyway, it was farther from the crossroads to her house than this house is."

"Are you Jack Hunter?"

"Of course I am. How did you stumble on that?"

"Why, Jack!"

"What's the matter? Is this a story in a book, or am I Jack Hunter, able seaman on the"—

"You're Jack, and I'm Margie, and you've just come in time to eat a Thanksgiving dinner with me. Sit down."

They talked so fast, each constantly breaking in on what the other was saying without stopping from doing justice to the dinner, that it would be impossible to lay down just what they said, but Margie got in information that her parents were dead, her only brother was somewhere else and she was teaching school in a neighboring city. She had come to the old homestead to spend Thanksgiving by herself and while waiting for the dinner to be cooked had gone to a neighbor's to borrow some articles which she had forgotten to provide.

Well, to make a long story short these two, each being quite alone in the world, decided, as Jack expressed it, to convoy each other. Jack concluded not to go back to sea, accepting a position with a boat builder. In time Margie gave up her school, and the couple are now quite contented with their lot and under Margie's able management of their finances slowly accumulating funds as well as a family.

Taft as Chief Justice?

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 11.—It was stated here yesterday by a man who has just returned from Pass Christian, where President Wilson spent the Christmas holidays, that the President had said that he is going to appoint Prof. William H. Taft, one-time President, to be Chief Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court.

Chief Justice Edward D. White is to retire soon on account of the age limit. Prof. Taft declines to discuss the report.

STUTTERING.

Treatment by Which the Affliction May Be Overcome.

There is no cure for stuttering. This does not mean that no stutterer can be cured—far from it—but that there is no treatment which is sure to cure. If a stutterer be taken in childhood, when the affliction is first noticed, and carefully treated he can sometimes be cured and generally much improved.

Dr. Frank A. Bryant of New York, writing in the Medical Record, says the first thing to do is to make sure that there are no obstructions in the throat or nose, such as enlarged tonsils or adenoids. The child must be taught to breathe through his nose deeply and slowly, as a habit. He must not be allowed to speak when excited nor when laughing or crying or in the paroxysms of whooping cough. He must never be tickled. All causes of excitement must be removed. Fresh air, scrupulous cleanliness, plain, nourishing food, moderate exercise and plenty of sleep in a dark room are essential.

Mental treatment is of great importance. Any measures that will increase mental poise are of incomparable value. The stutterer must be impressed with a desire to overcome what is only a bad habit. He must be persuaded to study the great art of speaking correctly. Thus, by careful, patient work on the part of his parents, teachers and physicians, will he gradually cure himself, or at least so improve as to make the affliction cease to be serious.

Try a Starch Bath.

It comes from Paris, the latest beauty hint. A society woman of the French capital has made a wonderful discovery. It is a starch bath. A pound of starch dissolved in a saucepan full of hot water is poured into the well filled bathtub at blood heat and then the bath is taken for twenty minutes with all but the face and hair immersed. The result is quieting to the nerves, a delightful sense of exhilaration, and a soothing effect upon the skin. This bath should be taken before breakfast or before dressing for dinner. For the limp or washed out it does what a laundress does to a crumpled shirt.—Leslie's.

SERVANTS OF ROYALTY.

In England They Are Supplied by a Regular Employment Agency.

Even royal palaces have their servant problems. The general opinion seems to be that the servants who attend upon kings and queens are of a race apart, but such is not the impression given by a remarkably frank interview given in London by a registry agent who has frequently had dealings with Buckingham palace.

"We are held responsible for the people we send to the royal household," he said, "and we send no one who has not lived in good houses and has had at least two years' 'character.'

"Only British servants are engaged. The men must be between twenty-two and twenty-eight years old, and the women between eighteen and twenty-two.

"The wages are no better, to begin with, than in other households, but there are better allowances—in liveries and in plain clothes. There is the chance, too, of promotion to something better.

"A head housemaid might get $250 a year, and of course there is a pension for every servant who has served a certain number of years.

"Ten years is generally considered the minimum time for a pension, but when a case of misfortune occurs an application is made to the king, who approves a special grant.

"The servants have plenty of work to do in the palace, but ample leisure and very good quarters and living. The maids are required to dress alike—in the same colored prints. The state porters and marshal men are engaged directly by the king on warrant.

"The ordinary household servants are resident, with the exception of a personal housemaid, who travels with the royal family."—New York Press.

ONE AND ONE MAKE TWO?

Not Always, by Any Means, According to Sir Oliver Lodge.

Sir Oliver Lodge has attracted a tremendous amount of attention by telling scientists to whom he is one that he believes in immortality in spite of science. This is not the first time he has locked horns with scientific dogma. In his book, "Modern Problems," he affirms that one and one do not always make two. And this is the "almost frivolous" way he makes his point:

"I would contend that, whereas the proposition that one added to one makes two is abstractedly beneath controversy, it need not be true for the addition of concrete things. It is not true for two globules of mercury, for instance, nor for a couple of colliding stars; not true for a pint of water added to a pint of oil or vitriol, nor for nitric oxide added to oxygen, nor for the ingredients of an explosive mixture; not necessarily true, either, for snakes in a cage, or for capital invested in a business concern, flourishing or otherwise, nor is it true, save in a temporary manner, for a couple of trout added to a pond. Life can make havoc of arithmetic.

"The moral of all which is that propositions can be clear and simple and sure enough, indeed absolutely certain, as long as you deal with abstractions, but that when you come to concrete realities and have all the complexities of the universe behind you—not only behind but in front and among and intermingled with every simplest thing—then we perforce step out of the realm of positive dogmatic security into the region of reasonable and probable inference, the domain of pragmatic conviction, of commonplace intuition, of familiar faith."

Took a Mean Advantage.

Returning from South America, a New York man vouches for the ingenuity of the city officials in Rio de Janerio. The householders on a certain street received notices that the city fathers had heard complaints of the high tax rates along that particular thoroughfare, and in order that justice might be done the residents were asked to submit their own valuation on their property. When the prompt and joyful responses had all been received the lots were condemned and bought for a contemplated public improvement.—New York Tribune.

Grandest of All.

"What is the grandest thing in the universe?" asks Victor Hugo. "A storm at sea," he answers and continues: "And what is grander than a storm at sea?" "The unclouded heavens on a starry, moonless night." "And what is grander than these midnight skies?" "The soul of man"—a spectacular climax such as Hugo loved and still, with all its dramatic effects, the picturesque statement of a vast and sublime and mighty truth.

Unfortunate.

"What are you crying for, Peperl?"

"Because I am so unfortunate."

"How do you mean unfortunate?"

"The teacher told us that there were 1,500,000,000 people in the world, and he said I was the most stupid of them all."—Fliegende Blätter.

PREPARING FOR OLD AGE.

If You Reach Sixty-five Years What Will Be Your Condition?

Actuaries say that of each thousand men living at the age of twenty 500 will still be alive at sixty-five. Economists declare that of the 500 living at sixty-five 200 will be in want; that eight-ninths of the pauperism in America is among people who have passed this same age of sixty-five.

A man is, of course, sometimes brought to want in old age through accident, through continued illness of himself or his family, through a dozen and one mischances against which even the wisest is helpless adequately to provide. In spite of this, however, there are certain tried and proved recipes by which a young man may guarantee at least the probability that he will not be found among the unfortunate 200 after the age of sixty-five.

Avoidance of wasteful, destructive habits; thrift, economy, the practice of spending habitually less than one earns, the habit of study, which increases one's usefulness and earning power—such are a few of the stable qualities which distinguish the young man approaching an independent old age from the one approaching a condition of want. Stand the actuary's thousand men in a row, divide them into two groups, the 999 possessing the habits and qualities noted above and the other lacking them, and there would be little difficulty in telling from which group will come the 200 and from which the 300.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

WOOD FROM THE MOON.

Queer Decision of the Most Primitive Race on Earth.

The "north pole natives" alluded to by Captain Amundsen in a recent lecture were discovered by him while he was navigating his little craft, the Gjoa, through the Northwest passage in 1903-7.

He christened them "Nechilli" and considered them to be the most primitive race on earth. No white man had ever before invaded their icy fastnesses. Consequently they were ignorant of the use of iron. Their fishing implements were long spears, fashioned out of reindeer horn. They knew no other method of procuring fire than that of rubbing two pieces of wood together. They were, in short, still in the stage of civilization reached by our ancestors of the stone age.

So cut off were they from others of their kind that they imagined their tribe was the only one in the world and displayed the utmost astonishment when told of populous countries far to the south, where neither ice nor snow was. The Gjoa and her crew they thought to have dropped from the moon, and the first Nechilli to come aboard felt the deck, masts, boats, oars, all the while whispering to one another in amazement. "How much wood there is in the moon—how very much!"—London Standard.

Too Eager.

There is a lady in Richmond who has in her employ a darky servant of a most curious disposition.

"Did the postman leave any letters, Lily?" the mistress asked on one occasion on returning from a call in the neighborhood.

"There ain't nuthin' but a postal card, ma'am," said Lily.

"Who is it from?" asked the mistress craftily.

"'Deed, I don't know, ma'am," said Lily, with an air of entire innocence.

"Well, any one that sends me a message on a postal card is either very stupid or impertinent," suggested the lady of the house.

"Excuse me, ma'am," said Lily, with dignity, "but that ain't no way to talk 'bout yo' own mother!"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Population of Earth.

The population of the entire earth is around 1,600,000,000. Of this number, Asia has over half, 850,000,000; Africa, 127,000,000; North America, 120,000,000; South America, 45,000,000; Australasia, 5,000,000; Europe, 380,000,000; polar regions, 300,000. There are no means of estimating the increase in the earth's population, owing to the paucity of statistics and the comparatively recent date at which any sort of statistics were possible. But it is safe to say that from now on, owing to the spread of science the human increase will be greater than ever before. New York American.

ADVERTISING

A STORE'S importance is rightly judged by its advertising. Not altogether by the size of the advertisement, but by size and tone, and quality of announcement.

What the store has to say is one thing. Quite as important is how it says it.

Given that the clerical force is competent and up-to-date, it will say, over the counter, the very best to be said in reference to the goods enquired for. It may, and should, suggest other goods, not in the customers view.

This implies that the customer is in the store. But what brings him or her there? The wish to buy and the belief it is a good place to buy at.

How is this learned of?

By advertising. The advertisement is a message, an intelligent middleman, doing service between seller and buyer. The space talks to thousands, even while the store is closed for the night.

Use The REVIEW and tell the story of your store and its opportunities for good service.

VILLA'S FORCES TAKE VILLAGE OF OJINAGA

Huerta's Northern Army Holds Out Against the Rebels Until Late on Saturday Night, When One by One the Nine Generals Run For U.S. Frontier.

PRESIDIO, Texas, Jan. 12. — The Mexican Federal army, with its nine generals, evacuated Ojinaga at ten o'clock Saturday night. The triumphant rebel forces under Gen. Francisco Villa immediately occupied the village.

Gen. Salvador Mercado, who was Huerta's chief military commander, crossed the river and surrendered to Major McNamee of the U. S. army.

The defeat of the Federal army followed only a few hours' fighting, in which the rebels, beginning at sundown, started to close in on the besieged garrison with a cannon and rifle fire.

Gen. Castro and Gen. Mercado of the Federal regulars saw that the assault was to be nothing less than a massacre. The Federals had left only fifty rounds of ammunition for each man. Generals Castro and Mercado, therefore, gave the order to evacuate.

All the Federal soldiers and their officers who could scramble to the American side did so. The others ran ran in all directions.

About nine o'clock, when the fighting had been in progress about five hours, seven wagon loads of documents belonging to the Huerta Government came over and were captured by the United States border patrol. This was believed to be a preliminary to evacuation.

Major McNamee, commanding the United States patrol, immediately ordered out all cavalry men to meet an emergency. Women and children and wounded soldiers had been crossing in numbers, but the apparent advance of the rebels to the very heart of the Federal garrison gave reason to believe a greater rush across the border was imminent.

For five hours the sharp flashes of the rebel fire had been seen drawing closer to the Federal entrenchments. The whole scene was bathed in a moonlight, partly obscured by dust and powder smoke.

The country about Ojinaga is mostly desert, with little to sustain life. Without food, the impoverished Federals would be unable to proceed any great distance.

Among the Federals were nine generals — Castro, Mercado, Orozco, Manuel Landa, Ynez Salazar, Antonio Rojas, Blas Orpinal, Lozaro Alavis and Roque Gomez.

Some of them were men upon whom Huerta depended to maintain his military power in the north. Defeat of the Federal army at this point marks the most important rebel victory of the present revolution. It leaves the rebels in possession practically of all the north of Mexico.

Mercado, Castro and Landa were the only remaining commanders of the Federal regulars. The other generals commanded volunteers and had been threatened by Villa with death should they be captured.

After his picturesque flight from Juarez, Mercado elected to make a last desperate stand on this little hilltop of Ojinaga, in an obscure border village, 67 miles from any railroad, and that in the United States.

He said he would never give up unless his men ran short of ammunition. He kept his word. For six days, ending last Sunday, he had fought pluckily against odds. The rebels fired more than 1,000 rounds into the Federal trenches without avail. It was not until Villa, now the military head of the revolution, but once a bandit, appeared on the scene that the reverse came for the Federals.

None of the wierd scenes in the moonlight while the horde of rebels was pouring into Ojinaga and the Fderals were rushing about in disorder was more intensely pathetic than that of Gen. Mercado, an old campaigner in various revolutions, who appeared at the river bank and informed an orderly of the United States army that he wished asylum in a foreign country.

Pancho Villa, hunted for nearly twenty years as a bandit, is now the undisputed military leader of northern Mexico. He joined Madero's revolution and was mustered out at the close of the campaign. Six months ago, he joined the constitutionalist movement, his only weapon being a borrowed revolver, and now he threatens to take Toreon and march on to Mexico City, to depose Huerta.

Rebels Buy Armored Cruiser.

MEXICO, CITY, Jan. 12.—It is reported here that the rebels have acquired in Europe an armored cruiser which, though regarded as obsolete, would be more than a match for any war craft belonging to the Mexican Government.

It is said that this cruiser is about to put in at New Orleans to take aboard gunners and crew and that with it the rebels hope to capture the more important gulf ports.

Prof. Binion worked until late on Thursday afternoon to complete the manuscript of his last book, "A Dictionary of Personal Proper Names and Their Derication." He was stricken soon after he reached his home, and died three hours later.

Prof. Binion was widely known to the reading public for his translation from the Polish of "Quo Vadis" and "Fire and Sword."

TRADE HAS INCREASED

Greatest Advance in Canada's History Shown in 1913.

OTTAWA, Jan. 12.—The trade of Canada during 1913 increased by $210,000,000 over 1912. This is the greatest increase in one year over a previous year ever recorded in the history of Canada. The total figures for 1913 are $1,085,264,449; of this $686,604,413 was imports and $337,-068,365 exports. The duty collected amounted to $114,501.67. This was nearly $30,000,000 more than before.

Canada's trade with France increased by $4,000,000. The increase was largely in imports, although half a million dollars' worth of goods more than in 1912 was shipped to France. The total trade was slightly over $17,000,009.

Canada's trade with Germany did not increase so much as did that with France. The increase was a little less than $3,000,000. The total trade done was $17,876,227, of which no less than $14,500,000 was imports and less than $3,500,000 exports.

Trade with Great Britain increased by over $48,500,000. The exports to Great Britain increased by more than the imports from that country. The imports were $139,646,356, a gain of nearly $22,500,000, while the exports amounted to $117,982,002, an increase of over $26,500,000.

But Canada does nearly double the trade with the United States that she does with Great Britain. The United States trade amounted to $622,432,-937 in 1913. This was the tremendous increase of nearly $137,000,000 over 1912.

M'PHEDRAN OPTIMISTIC

Doctor Said He Hoped For Sir James' Removal in a Few Days.

NEW YORK, Jan. 12.—While the official statements with regard to the condition of Sir James Whitney, the Ontario Premier, who is ill at the Hotel Manhattan, continued to be non-committal on Sunday, there was a distinctly hopeful feeling apparent among those who knew the real conditions at his bedside.

Last night's bulletin read: "Sir James Whitney had a rather restless day, but otherwise his condition is unchanged."

Both Dr. Pyne and Horace Wallis spent a considerable time away from their chief yesterday. More significant still, Lady Whitney, who kept constant watch while her husband appeared in a critical condition, went out for a walk during the day.

Dr. McPhedran went back to Toronto Saturday night. It had been intended that he should remain for a few days, but this was not found to be necessary.

Dr. McPhedran expressed the hope that it would be possible to remove th stricken Premier to his home in Toronto "within a few days." Dr. Pyne last night, while he expressed a similar hope, said it was impossible for him to fix a date for the removal.

The patient rested well at nights towards the latter end of the week, and the periods of delirium were not long nor serious.

Schmidt Trial Postponed.

NEW YORK, Jan. 10.—The retrial of Hans Schmidt, for the murder of Anna Aumuller, was yesterday postponed a week and set for Monday, Jan. 19. It is said that Schmidt's mother would accompany them.

REPORTS ON THE WORK OF HEALTH ASSOCIATION

The following are reports from the Health Association, which follow the reports published in Saturday's issue:

Secretary's Report

During the past year the Association has continued the good work began in the summer of 1912. Until July of 1913 one nurse only was employed, tubercular patients being almost exclusively picked and looked after by the society. Miss Sparkhall's resignation was handed to us in April 1913, and regretfully accepted. It took effect in June, and it was decided by the executive to employ two nurses in future as it seemed necessary to extent the work in the direction of general nursing, in order to get better results and arouse more interest among the medical men, and the public generally. Miss Mercier and Miss Edith Hamilton of Peterboro, were engaged with us. A great many patients have been looked after in everyway, and necessary supplies of milk, eggs, drugs, furniture and other comforts have been provided; 348 dozen eggs and something over 2,000 quarts of milk have been given away. Our financial condition is sound, for the present, the expenditure keeping well in bounds. It is the earnest desire of the executive to take some steps in th direction of providing accommodation for advanced cases, and it has been suggested that the Association arrange for the renting and furnishing of a building suitable for a sanitarium for all cases, but more particularly for the advanced ones, which are considered to be a menace to the citizens as a whole.

During the first six months of the year, Miss Sparkhall carried on the work alone, as district nurse. However, in June the committee considered it advisable to appoint two nurses, one whom would be engaged for general work, that is for cases apart from tuberculosis.

By this plan we hoped to get in touch with more cases, and also secure more co-operation from the medical men.

As a result Miss Mercier and Miss Hamilton were engaged to take up their duties beginning July 1st, 1913.

Since then both nurses have been kept busy, and by their co-operation have succeeded in carrying on a work that could not be accomplished by one nurse alone, and have been employed by practically all the doctors of the city.

From January 1st until December 31st, 1913, the total number of visits made by Miss Sparkhall, Miss Mercier and Miss Hamilton were 2745. Of these visits 370 were paid visits and 2375 free.

NUMBER OF CASES.

Number of Cases.

During the year the number of tuberculous cases attended was 52. Made up as follows :—

Tuberculous Joints	4
Tuberculous Spines	3
Tuberculous Glands	2
Tuberculous Meningitis	1
Tuberculous Peritonitis	1
Tuberculous Pleurisy	5
Pulmonary Tuberculosis	36
	52

Of these cases 12 are under the age of 15 years.

37 between the age of 15-50 years.

3 over the age of 50 years.

During the year there have been 13 deaths, among the cases attended, while two have removed from the city. 1 was sent to Muskoka Sanatorium, and 1 to Weston.

In the city during the year, there have been at least 30 deaths from tuberculosis, showing that while much work has been done, much remains undone.

Of the 2745 calls 1178 were made on the tuberculosis cases, and 1567 for Medical, Surgical, and Obstetrical Cases.

Of those, there were about 77 Medical Cases, 30 Surgical, and 15 Obstetrical.

Thus the total number of patients attended during the year were as follows :

Tuberculous Cases	52

In addition to this the nurses have also distributed literature, besides giving daily instructions on all sanatary points.

Medicines, and requisites for the sick room have also been given. A supply room, on Water Street, at the South End of Masons' Conservatory has been fitted up by the ladies, and a sign put above the door.

Maps and charts have been prepared showing the location, where tuberculosis is most prevalent, and the number of cases, compared with other infectious diseases. These may be seen and studied by anyone interested.

During the year donations of literature, absorbent cotton, clothing-bed-linen, etc., have been received from the following :

The Young Women's Christian Society, Miss Morrow, Miss Myers, The Ladies Auxiliary, Mrs. Coughlin, Mr. Gorman, Mrs. Scott, Mrs. Fortye, Mrs. Vincent Eastwood, Mrs. Travers, and others, for which the committee express their appreciation.

Lately our Board of Education have appointed a School Nurse, who will shortly take up her work, and judging from the results in other places, this will mean more work during the coming year, for both our nurses, and for the Health Association.

There will be increased opportunity for educating the parents, and gaining entrance into many new homes.

At the last monthly meeting of the Committee, they recommended to the Executive that steps be taken to provide accommodation for indigent cases of tuberculosis in our city, and as a result a committee was appointed to consider the question.

All of which I respectfully submit, and move the adoption of this report.

Have Ample Funds

The Finance Committee was called together four times during the year. At the first meeting held on the 14th of February last, owing to the Association having ample funds on hand for present needs, it was decided that the efforts of the Committee should be confined to increasing the membership. At the beginning of the year there were some twenty-five members, since which have been added one hundred and three, the total membership at the moment being one hundred and twenty-eight. I have to thank the following members of the Committee for their assistance in securing members: Mrs. Denham, Mrs. Grant, Miss Denison, Mr. Downie, Mr. Wainwright and Mr. Walker.

Your Committee made a grant of $50.00 a month to the Nurses' Supervision Committee. This Committee at the close of the year had a balance of $166.77 on hand after expending $433.23 for supplies, etc. A statement of this expenditure is hereto attached.

I have to advise you that since the beginning of the year Mrs. Geo. Burnham, wife of Dr. Burnham, has made a contribution of $100 to the funds of the Association. I would suggest that a resolution be passed at this meeting thanking Mrs. Burnham for the gift. Under the by-laws of the Association she is entitled to a life membership.

A list of the names of the members of the Association is hereto attached, all of which is respectfully submitted.

W. H. DUNSFORD,

THE LADIES' AID.

The Ladies' Aid of the Peterborough Health Association have held meetings each month, except through the summer months, with an average attendance of ten members.

Besides paying the rent of Mrs. Profit's house for one month, $50 was paid towards her passage money to England. Necessary clothing for herself and children was purchased.

Through the kindness of the different members of the Ladies' Aid, in giving their homes for teas, money has been raised in this way to help pay this debt.

New sheets, pillow cases, and towels, also bundles of old linen have been donated by different members and placed in the rooms.

Material for six comforters was donated by some of the members, sewing meetings were held and these comforters were made up and handed over for the use of needy patients.

At the December meeting the following resolution was read by Mrs. Grant, seconded by Mrs. Vincent Eastwood and unanimously carried.

That whereas the three committees of the Peterborough Health Association, which were organized at the annual meeting in Jan., 1913, are doing all the work of the association as at present constituted.

And, whereas—The Ladies Aid of the association, although called into existence at the same meeting, and made thereby an auxiliary of the association, has had no instruction for work during the year.

Whereas—The said Ladies' Aid are not empowered to collect nor spend any of the funds of the association, nor have they been called upon to do any definite work—Therefore be it resolved that we ask permission to retire from the Health Association, as part of its organization.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

GEORGIE EASTWOOD,
Secty. Ladies' Aid.

Education Committee.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen,—Your Education Committee beg leave to report that several meetings were held during the year and some work accomplished.

Addresses were given in most of the churches either by medical men or by the ministers on the subject of tuberculosis. These addresses were of an educational character and were conducted without any cost to the Health Association.

The papers were interviewed and free space secured for the publication of any material bearing on our work. Articles have been furnished from time to time. The cost of this amounts to 75c. for two cuts of the double cross, the emblem of the Health Association. One being furnished to each of the evening papers in order to make our contributed articles more conspicuous.

Literature was also distributed to the school children at a cost of 50c. for cartage and 50c. for typing notices to the schools in regard to this matter.

Your committee had also approached the School Board with the suggestion that the Board might test the value of a school nurse by accepting the loan of one of our nurses to carry on the work in one school for a limited period free of charge. The Board received the proposal cordially and your Education Committee passed a motion requesting the Health Association to loan a nurse for this work. Since that time the Women's Council have taken up the matter with the School Board with the result that a nurse has been appointed to this work, which makes it not necessary for the Education Committee to press their resolution re the loaning of one of our nurses to the School Board.

Your present convenor will not be eligible for re-election.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Convenor Education Com.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES---DR. GRENFELL'S MESSAGE FROM LABRADOR

THE CALL TO SERVICE

By Dr. WILFRED GRENFELL.

(From "The Continent.")

This is an age of awakening intellect. Even down here in Labrador men are waking up and refusing to submit to propositions and conditions they once bowed beneath. It is almost an age of suspicion, with capital and labor ,overnerned and governing. It is an age of accumulated speed in revolution and the remedy that is to reach home and overwhelm opposition must be adapted accordingly. Men listen to what the parson or leader of any kind says; they criticise more and more what the parson says.

A small sailboat has just gone by as I write. It has a ten horsepower kerosene engine, and is constantly cruising from place to place along this rough and lonely coast. The grimy looking individual in overalls driving her is the parson. He cannot afford a yacht's crew, and the comments on him are: "There be something to dat parson—he does things." Of cousre he does not escape criticism; there are still a few unco' guid who prefer a white collar to a horny hand, and alas! their tongues are no kinder than the rest on that account. But the virile folk are always interested in doing things. That "deep calls to deep" is no new discovery and nothing so commends the service of Jesus Christ to young manhood as the fact that it does things, and calls on them also to do things and make sacrifices also. I have in my cabin specimens of various tracts, genuine efforts no doubt to attract men to Jesus Christ. They are sent out from time to time, often in large numbers. I received once a compliment of 10,000 of one single variety, a heavy load to carry and quite impossible to distribute, the very gift signifying impracticability. The whole appeal of many of these is "Nothing to do; only believe." "No cross for you to bear, no struggle to carry, no defeats to suffer, no working out your salvation with fear and trembling. Only an intellectual process, momentary and easy."

What Christ and Manhood Want.

As a remedy for indifference to church-going this mental submission if once accepted, is obviously valuable. And I am witness to scores of lives saved by that combination. But I am certain that the permanence of the result depends not on the mental process, but on the continuous association with the church and its environment. And further that it will develop the abounding life in the individual only as the church is itself "doing things." Fortunately that is what Christ wants and at the same time what manhood can rejoice in. The appeal that by believing we may verily escape the righteous punishment of our wrongdoing is a mean one anyway, and the resulting faith is too often of that sickly variety that we surgeons frequently see. "When the devil was sick the devil a saint would be; when the devil was well the devil a saint was he."

The call to Christ's service to which I myself responded was that of D. L. Moody. Let each man of the thousands who answered it interpret his view as he likes. I understand their mental attitude well enough to have a tender place in my heart for all those who think honestly that the success of that message was "You have only to believe to be saved from punishment." A man who did things and whose permanent monuments of practicality are at Mount Hermon Northfield, Glasgow, Chicago and elsewhere, can be excused if, like Browning, societies should have to be formed to study his meaning. But to me Moody taught the one and only thing that could have interested me and that was that God Almighty really wanted such work as I could do to help him out. That had never occurred to me. I had thought service as far as God was concerned, meant unattractive conventional gatherings which I loathed and went to sleep if I could. Thus, to defend a boy who was being bullied against his enemies was sport to me; but that would have been the last thing I should have thought of as being "religious service." That that was a finer means of grace to my soul than the good of books, or the too stereotyped Sunday, had no more been taught me than that the eating of my porridge for my breakfast was. And yet that is a means of grace and to teach that it is so is divine service.

How many hundreds of men good natured, honorable, unselfish, in the busy world downtown does one meet who would laugh right out if you said, "I want you to come and preach the gospel with me"—men who would instantly help in any genuine effort to "help others," enjoy it, jump at the chance of it, and yet will smile again afterward, when you argue that the rendered service was really divine service, was preaching the gospel; and if so, why not acknowledge it? For my part I once recognized it was true, for I felt this was as essential to explain things as was immortality.

It gave a dignity and intelligence to life. I had never dreamed that Christ's call was to follow him. The transient joys of meat and clothing and even athletic honors I well knew never satisfied anyone worth while.

However much we owe to the old method of exhibiting the remedies for loss of life we must look at facts squarely; and act just as we doctors do who argee with teachers of religion as to the great value of physical treatment, and yet differ from the Christian Scientist as to the value of training the leucocytes with vaccines, or even making use of the knife. If we can realize the truth of this—we who work among sailors and fishermen, advocating the claims of the Master on their lives; a body of men as emotional as any in the world, as tender-hearted and unsophisticated as any class anywhere—then how much more must this be true where the childlike nature that responds most readily to sentiment has been hardened and made callous by blatant and shallow skepitcism and the bitter experiences of life in big cities?

The service of Christ is the real "service" and the preacher who seeks first to conserve energy and save men's lives for "service" looks not for a community hereafter of men who have escaped punishment, but a world of men now who are rendering the "service of their reason."

To them heaven is a place not merely of men singing because of their escape, but a place of which it can be said that "there His servants serve Him"; religion means not the holding of services but the rendering of them—not a cerebral process so much as a manual one.Is it our hand or merely ourbrain action God wants?

This was to me Moody's message. And I believed and still believe that it was Christ's. Hundreds of young men from colleges, universities and wealthy homes have paid their own expenses these past years to come and do anything, even dig drains, when it was helpful. More than half of my colleagues are volunteers. Men are eager to accept a gospel so satisfying and that gives such zeal of life. They know the hollowness of conventionalities. So I believe in the inspiration of this gospel of Christ. Why? Because it is such a desirable gospel. It my nature wanted, and I know it's just exactly what is in the bottom of the same with every man. It is an interpretation about which in my bluest moments of life and in many hours facing death I have never had one single doubt. Just as I want to live again, so I want to believe I am of use while I am alive. And this is the one justification I can find. When things look darkest it has never gone back on me.

BEARDS AND BARE FACES.

Shaving Was at One Time Considered Almost a Crime.

We need not go so far back as the eighteenth century to find Englishmen who held that shaving was "agen God and nature." In the nineteenth, James Ward, R. A., in a "Defense of the Beard," set forth eighteen reasons for retaining it, mainly Scriptural, re-enforced by artistic considerations. "What would a Jupiter be without a beard?" As late as 1800 Thelugus published a treatise entitled "Shaving—A Breach of the Sabbath and a Hindrance to the Spread of the Gospel." One of his points was that "Providence had manifestly designed the beard as a protection for the throat and chest." But what about the woman's throat?

Nowhere was there more prejudice centuries ago against beards than at the inns of court. The "black books" of the inns tell us how offenders were fined for wearing beards, and sometimes were even compulsorily shaved by order of court. And the prejudice against the bearded barrister still lingers. Vice Chancellor Bacon carried his dislike to bearded or mustached barristers so far that he always refused to hear them. Even now there are very few leading counsel with beards and I can remember only one unshaved barrister of the greatest eminence, the late Judah Philip Benjamin, Q. C.—silver tongued Benjamin, who wore a mustache and a goatee. — London Chronicle.

FIRST OF SERIES OF SPECIAL SERMONS

Rev. T. J. Mansell Speaks on the Apostle's Creed to Large Congregation

Charlotte St., Methodist Church was filled to the last pew Sunday evening when the Rev. T. J. Mansell, the pastor, delivered the first of a series of sermons on the Apostles' Creed. In opening up the subject the speaker said there were three principal creeds, the Apostles, the Nicean and the Athenasian. The history of the Apostles' creed was clearly set forth with enough detail not only to interest the audience, but to convince it of the speaker's conclusions. The creed arose from the command to go forth into the world to preach and baptize. At first the creed was forbidden to be written, but had to be committed to memory, which accounted for so many differences in the writings of the fathers of the early Christian Church.

About 178 A.D. an early rendering of the creed occurs in the writings of Irenaeus Bishop of Lyons and he reported it's use to be universal in his day. The first appearance of the creed was in a sermon of Caesarius, Bishop of Arles, in the first half of the sixth century, and in the ninth century it was made authoritative through its acceptance by the Roman See.

A Natural Development

The Creed was not the work of one man, but a natural development from the Christian Church. It is recited in the Roman, Anglican Greek, Methodist Episcopal Church and the Wesleyan Church in England.

In John Wesley's order of service for the Methodist Church in America, it was included in the order of Sabbath worship, but about one hundred years ago the leaders of the Methodist Church excluded it from the service.

If an educated gentleman, the speaker went on to say, attended an Anglican Church, he could very soon get a clear idea of the principles for which that Church stood in the recitation of the Apostles Creed. But if he went into a church where this was not done, he would likely be a long while in finding out the main tenets of its faith. Owing to the fact that the Apostles' Creed is receiving more attention in its relation to the Church, than ever before its importance to the people is manifest. But what is of more importance than discussion or argument is that the Apostles' Creed is next to the Bible, the clearest and most important embodiement of the principles of the Christian faith. In order to give greater definiteness to the faith of both old and young, the use of this classic of the Christian Church, would be a benediction on the people.

The service was greatly enhanced by the able assistance of the choir, which called forth the thanks of the pastor. The power and quiet dignity of Mrs. Richardson's rendering of "Fear Not Ye, O Israel," was an inspiration to all.

REV. T. B. BROWN AT MURRAY ST.

Friend of the Pastor Came for the Anniversary.

Interest was added to the services at Murray street Baptist church on Sunday, by the visit of Rev. T. B. Brown, of Edmonton, who, besides being a warm friend of the pastor, Rev. J. R. Webb, is also known to many of the congregation.

It was the seventh anniversary of Mr. Webb's pastorate, and at the morning service Rev. Mr. Brown tendered his congratulations to both pastor and congregation. He gave a very fine address.

In the evening Mr. Brown conducted the service and Rev. J. R. Webb delivered the sermon.

It was announced that the annual meeting of teachers and officers would be held on Tuesday night and that the annual Sunday school entertainment would be held on Friday night.

TWO VISITORS AT PARK ST. CHURCH

Mr. Thos. Marks and Mr. Jos. Wearing Gave an Address.

At Park street Baptist church on Sunday morning, Mr. Thos. Marks, a student at Woodstock College, gave an address in which he dealt with the subject of "Expectancy."

At the evening service Mr. Jos. Wearing, M.A., of the legal firm of Wood and Wearing, spoke on the changes of life and the things that are unchangeable. He dealt with the changes as seen in nature, and then of those things that do not change. Mr. Wearing pointed out that God did not change; the plan of salvation was ever the same and the love of God was unchanging.

The music by the choir included a quartette number at the evening service.

USE SHORT SENTENCES.

The Benefit of Brevity Very Pointedly Emphasized by a Writer.

Writers who wish to impart to their productions power and pungency, who wish to keep the reader's attention upon the tiptoe of activity, who desire to escape the imputation of pedantry and who seek to surcharge their sentiments with sparkle and spirit, will do well to bear in mind constantly that long, lingering sentences, unduly over-burdened with an abundance of phrases, clauses and parenthetical observations of a more or less digressive character, are apt to be tiresome to the reader, especially if the subject matter be at all profound or ponderous, to place an undue strain upon his powers of concentration and to leave him with a confused concept of the ideas which the writer apparently has been at great pains to concentrate, while short, snappy sentences, on the other hand, with the frequent recurrence of subject and predicate, thus recalling and emphasizing the idea to be expressed as the development of the thought proceeds, like numerous sign posts upon an untraveled road, these frequent breaks having the effect of taking a new hold upon the reader's attention, oases in the desert of words, as it were, will be found to be much more effective, much more conducive to clarity and far better calculated to preserve the contact, the wireless connection, so to speak, between the writer and the reader, provided, however, and it is always very easy to err through a too strict and too literal application of a general rule, the sentences are not so short as to give a jerky, choppy and sketchy effect and to scatter the reader's attention so often as to send him wool-gathering completely.

China's Stiff Problem.

China was confronted with a stiff problem at the introduction of the telegraph. It was hopeless to think of combining the western Morse dots and dashes in sufficient variety to express the 3,000 or 4,000 characters used by a fairly literate Chinese, not to speak of the entire 40,000 or so known to the highly educated men of that race. A phonetic system was barred by the fact that the same Chinese monosyllable means different things according to the context or intonation and also by the diversity of dialects.

A Dane, Prof. Schellerup, found the solution. The 7,000 characters most commonly used are given their equivalents in a code of numerals and these numerals are telegraphed. Thus, "cash" in the code is 6030.

The institution of its Parliament also brings embarrassment to China, there being so many dialects within the vast republic. Pidgin-English has long been the Esperanto of China. A traveler tells, for instance, how he heard a man from Canton and a native of Tientsin resort to it as the only possible medium for mutual understanding. But why not write the speeches instead of speaking them? Not only are the written characters the same throughout China, but they are almost identical in China, Japan and Korea, however widely the spoken words differ.

HE ASKED FOR A COT.

And He Got a Cot, or What They Call a Cot, in Scotland.

A resident of Terre Haute was traveling in Scotland and met a congenial acquaintance on the train. The new found friend insisted that he be permitted to show the Indianian the best hotel in the small place where they were both stopping. When they got to the hotel it was full. As the Indiana man was only going to stay one night, he said he was not particular, but would sleep any place.

It was finally agreed that he should sleep in the hotel parlor. But the lounge proved too hard. So he called the porter.

"I can't sleep on this lounge. Bring me a cot, will you, my boy?" he asked.

"A cot, sir? Did you say a cot, sir?"

"Yes, a cot. I can't sleep on this."

"Did you say a cot, sir?"

"Yes. You put a cot in here for me. I'm going out, but shall return presently."

When on his return he opened the door to what he thought was the parlor he was amazed to find a cradle near his suit case. He summoned the porter.

"Boy, I asked you to bring me a cot. That is not a cot. That is a baby's bed."

"No, sir; that is a cot, sir."

"Well, but I can't sleep in that. What I want is a cot—a long frame, you know, with springs on it," at the same time measuring with his hands.

"Oh, I see, sir," replied the boy. "You don't want a cot, sir. What you want is a stretcher, sir."—[illegible]

I claim that the prices heretofore asked for coal have been reasonable, considering the expenses of the business. Below I give a statement of facts in connection with the cost of handling coal in this city. One ton of coal of 2,000 lbs.

1 ton nut (at Buffalo)	$5.36
Freight from bridge	$1.25

COST OF ECONOMICAL COAL HANDLING
(From the Coal Trade Journal.)
In answer to an inquiry with reference to the net profit per ton on coal we state that the profit can fairly be assumed by deducting the following items of expense, these being based upon a fairly equipped yard, up-to-date generally:

Advertising	$0.03	per ton
Breakage, lost in transit, culm	.15	" "
Dumping in pocket	.01½	" "
Office and general expenses	.12½	" "
Insurance and taxes	.03	" "
Yard superintendent and employes	.13	" "
Interest on investment or rent	.10	" "
Bad debts and equipment depreciation	.02	" "
Office employes	.15	" "
Owner's salary	.15	" "
Interest on stock carried	.02	" "
Average cost of delivery	.50	" "
Total handling cost to the dealer, per ton	$1.42

The public may ask how I can afford to sell coal at the prices I now make. I am selling the coal at cost on track and only adding the cost of cartage to consumers (70c. per ton.) Overhead expenses will be charged to other lines of business.

PLUM COULEE MURDERER MADE SENSATIONAL ESCAPE

Details of the Delivery of Slayer of Bank Manager Arnold Have Leaked Out and Show That He Suddenly Produced a Revolver and Imprisoned Guards.

WINNIPEG, Jan. 12. — While a close official silence is still being kept, details of John Krafchenko, committed for trial for the murder of Manager Arnold and the robbery of the Bank of Montreal at Plum Coulee, escaped from the Winnipeg police station at two o'clock Saturday morning have leaked out. The desperado had a key for the door of his cell. How he got it is still a mystery.

Two unarmed constables were locked in the room or cell with Krafchenko. They had no keys, the door having been locked from the outside by the sergeant in charge of the station. The room had a barred window.

Krafchenko did not sleep Friday night. A short time after midnight he rose and started to pace his cell. Suddenly he stopped in front of the guards, and when one of them looked up his eye ran along the barrel of a revolver.

Enjoining them to silence on penalty of their lives, he backed them into a clothes' closet in the corner of the room and locked the door. There was a glass in the door and the guards saw Krafchenko take a key from his pocket and open the door of the cell. Passing out into the hall he entered the photographing room next door.

He tied the clothes line he had had concealed about him, to the steampipe, raised the window, and departed. He slid down the rope three stories and since that moment [illegible] appeared as completely as if the earth had swallowed him up. It took the guards several minutes to make their way out of the closet. The alarm was given and the police dragnet thrown out.

Percy Haget, Krafchenko's counsel, had an interview with his client at 11 o'clock Friday night. While the interview was going on the guards were out of the room. They waited in the corridor. Haget, having been appraised that he was under suspicion in police circles, yesterday issued a statement in which he defies the police to make a definite charge.

Judge Meyers, a member of the police commission, in a statement yesterday charged both the city and provincial police with carelessness. In view of rumors going around town for weeks that Krafchenko would never be sentenced, he says the police should have taken special precautions.

Six thousand dollars is now offered for Krafchenko dead or alive, the Attorney-General for Manitoba making the announcement. When the city council meets to-night another $1,000 will be offered.

One sensational statement made by a reliable authority, but which may be taken for what it is worth, is to the effect that Krafchenko was freed by former pals because they feared that before the murder case was concluded they would all be implicated one way or other.

The same authority declared that Krafchenko would never get away alive, as delivery was made for the purpose of removing him for all time.

HON DAVID LAIRD DEAD

Serious Fears Entertained For the Recovery of Indian Commissioner.

OTTAWA, Jan. 12.—Hon. David Laird, Indian commissioner, is seriously ill. He is suffering from bronchitis and fears are entertained for his recovery. He is 80 years of age.

Mr. Laird had much to do with the entry of Prince Edward Island into Confederation, and himself entered the House of Commons in 1873. He became Minister of the Interior in the Mackenzie administration, and in 1876 was appointed Lieutenant-Government of the Northwest Provinces. At the conclusion of his term of office he became editor of The Charlottetown Patriot, which he conducted until he was appointed to his present position.

People of Albania Starving.

VIENNA, Jan. 12.—Private letters from Avlona depict Albania as the prey of famine and anarchy. Owing to lack of money business is at a standstill. Exports have ceased and imports are so small that the people face absolute starvation. Flour and meat are at exorbitant prices, and other food can scarcely be obtained. The towns and villages are overrun with hordes of beggars, whose importunities are so threatening that they really amount to robbery.

Archbishop Secures Reform.

MONTREAL, Jan. 12.—Following the recent visit of Archbishop Bruchesi to Bordeaux jail, the matter of the solitary confinement of prisoners has been brought to the notice of the authorities, and it is reported to-day that new regulations altering the present system af the jail may come into force early next month.

The archbishop visited the jail on the feast of the Epiphany, following his usual custom.

Egg Dealer Fined.

NEW YORK, Jan. 12.—A fine of $500 was imposed Saturday on the James Van Dyk Co., egg dealers, on their plea of guilty to selling cold storage eggs as fresh. It is the first conviction of its kind in this state.

The action was brought by the state department of health, which has been conducting a crusade against the practice of misrepresenting cold storage products.

Viscount Bryce of Dechmont.

LONDON, Jan. 12.—James Bryce, former British ambassador to the United States, who was raised to the peerage on New Year's Day, has taken the title of Viscount Bryce of Dechmont, in Scotland.

A lot of so-called society leaders are never heard of until they figure in some sort of scandal.

OFFICERS ACQUITTED

Triumph of Militarism Over Civil Law Arouses Germany.

BERLIN, Jan. 12.—The acquittal of Col. Von Reuter, Lieut. Schad and Lieut. Baron von Forstner at Strassburg of all charges in connection with the Zabern affair is apparently a victory for the army all along the line, but it is already evident that there will be a serious aftermath, and a crisis graver than that in December is predicted.

The court-martial in the case of Von Reuter upheld the validity of the almost forgotten decree of 1820, authorizing the military commander to assume control whenever in his judgment it was necessary, and approved acts which the Imperial Chancellor, Dr. Von Bethmann-Hollweg, in December, declared to be unquestionably illegal.

The parties, whose vote of non-confidence in the Government was prompted by indignation over an isolated incident of military, are now lining up, it is said, to defend constitutional principles and demand the nullification of the decree which sets at naught subsequently enacted laws and which, if upheld, subordinates civil to military authority anywhere in Prussia.

The National Liberals, who were the most uncertain element in the December majority, will, according to an evening paper, participate in the new attack on the Government next week.

Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg, speaking in the House of Lords Saturday, flung defiance at the Liberal critics and pledged himself to maintain inviolate the army's rights to prevent Parliamentary control. He also referred to the Ministry's regard for the resolution of non-confidence adopted by the Reichstag.

BANKS CENSURED.

Grain Growers Will Draft Reforms In Financial Facilities.

BRANDON, Man., Jan. 10. — The Manitoba grain growers' convention came to a close here at a late hour last night, after a keen day's session.

During the afternoon a vigorous arraignment of the banking institutions was made and the executive was instructed to take up with the Government the matter of financial facilities for the farmers. Another important matter was a demand that bribery and corruption be made punishable by terms in prison, it being felt that fines were useless.

A motion supporting direct legislation and another in favor of woman suffrage as well as one to prevent indiscriminate selling of farm machinery was passed with little or no comment.

Pleasure was expressed at the efficient manner in which the C. P. R. handled the 1913 grain crop.

Burglaries at Welland.

WELLAND, Jan. 10—D. J. Smith's shoe store was broken into Thursday night and over $100 worth of shoes stolen. The burglars broke the glass in the front door, and reaching in turned the Yale lock. The theft was not discovered until the next morning.

The same night the plate glass window in Frank Ahman's store on Muir street was broken and the thieves helped themselves to about $10 worth of tobacco and other small articles. Both burglaries were committed by the same men, the police say.

Boy Murdered In Train.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—A startling tragedy was discovered at the Shoreditch station of the North London Railway Thursday, the body of a seven-year-old boy being found by two boys in an empty compartment.

There were marks on the neck indicating strangulation by a thin cord and the body had been carefully placed underneath the seat.

Local Option Recount.

AYLMER, Jan. 10.—A recount into Monday's local option vote, the majority against being now 1 2-5 votes, will be conducted before the county judge next week. Meanwhile, some of the more rabid "pros" threaten to divert their trade from local merchants, who opposed the by-law, to other towns.

BLIZZARD IN BELGIUM.

Enormous Loss and Suffering Result From Cold Spell After Rains.

BRUSSELS, Jan. 12.—The thermometer dropped suddenly twenty degrees yesterday morning, converting the torrential rain into a stiff blizzard. Throughout Belgium the snow is many inches deep.

The people are beginning to realize the enormous losses caused by the flood. The subsidence of the Vesdre river has left a deep coating of mud over thousands of houses. Firemen everywhere are pumping out cellars and spraying disinfectants to prevent an epidemic.

Streets are strewn with the bodies of cattle, fowl, dogs and cats. The machinery in numerous mills and factories has practically been ruined, and this means a long suspension of operations and the prospect of great suffering among the industrial population, of whom many are homeless. In some places where the waters reached a height of eight feet in the principal streets the residents took refuge in the upper part of the houses and were rescued by boats.

TAKES ILL BEFORE MASS.

Father Ambrose Nolin, S.J., Dies Suddenly In Toronto.

TORONTO, Jan. 12.—Just as he was preparing to say mass at 7.30 yesterday morning at St. Michael's Hospital, Rev. Ambrose Nolin, S.J., a priest well-known to Roman Catholic churches in Ontario, took suddenly ill and died fifteen minutes later. Death was due to heart failure. Father Nolin, who stood 6 feet 2 inches, was 73 years of age.

Rev. Father Ambrose Nolin came to Toronto about three years ago from Waubaushene, Ont., where he had spent two years with his brother, Rev. Father P. Nolin, who has a church there.

Before he was relieved of active duty, 13 years ago, Father Nolin had charge of a church in Pembroke diocese.

All Taft's Suits Too Big.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 12.—Losing weight has compelled former President Taft to have his garments modelled on less generous lines. Saturday he gave a local journeyman tailor an order for changes to be made in 35 pairs of trousers.

Mr. Taft has reduced his weight 80 pounds and his waist line has drawn in six inches, so that it now measures 48 inches. Mr. Taft stipulated that a reef should be taken in the waist of each pair of trousers, the fullness to be "gathered in" at both sides of the front. The tailor will also alter 35 coats and vests to conform to Mr. Taft's bodily measurements as a Yale professor.

Monarchists Escape.

LISBON, Portugal, Jan. 12.—Eight prominent Portuguese monarchists escaped during Friday night from the ancient fortress prison at Coimbra, where they were incarcerated on a charge of conspiracy.

The prisoners had found an old underground passage in the fortress and through it reached the court yard, where three soldiers were on guard, whom they beat off with stones when they tried to capture them. They then scaled the wall and escaped into the country.

Judge McDougall Hurt.

MONTREAL, Jan. 12.—While going to the court house Saturday morning Justice McDougall was struck by a rig when dismounting from a car and seriously injured. The judge's back and one hand were badly hurt. He was taken to the court house and to the chief justice's room, where a physician was called and the injuries were attended

Comets.

Statistics collected by Borrelly, the French astronomer, show that since the sixteenth century 376 comets have been discovered, of which 106 were periodic and 19 have been seen at more than one return and 56 have been visible to the naked eye, with 7 that could be seen in full daylight. Nearly two-thirds of the discoveries appear to have been made in the morning before sunrise, more than half in the second half of the year. The French observatories have led in discoveries, 87 of the comets having been first detected at Marseilles and 46 at Paris, but only 16 at Geneva, which has the next highest record; 15 at Florence and 14 at the Lick observatory.

They Die Young In Greenland.

Neither old age nor matrimony is at all popular in Greenland, according to the latest census of that country, which also sets forth the fact that civilization has imposed its restrictions even on this remote realm with such effect that during the last decade there have been so far as the public was aware but three inhabitants of the region who possessed more than one wife each. There are only twenty-six men and forty-four women who have passed beyond the age of sixty years, and in every thousand of the population there are 650 unmarried, 319 married and 31 widowers.—New York Herald.

Five Whites and Seven Negroes Perish In Alabama Mine.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 12.—Twelve men—five whites and seven negroes—were killed in an explosion in the Rock Castle mine of the Davis Creek Coal Co., 35 miles south of Birmingham, in Tuscaloosa County, early yesterday. More than 200 men were at work in the mine when the explosion occurred. All but twelve got out of the workings before the after damp affected them seriously.

The dead: W. W. Quarles, foreman; Frank Tillery, blastman; Joe Bocsnick, Phil Maneer, John Hoadley, miners; seven negroes.

Mine Foreman Quarles had gone into the mine only five minutes before the explosion to set up some brattices.

Rescue gangs were rushed from Birmingham as soon as news of the explosion reached here, but there was little for them to do when they reached the mine.

Chinese Parliament Dissolved.

PEKIN, Jan. 12.—The Chinese Parliament, which has been practically non-existent for months, was definitely dissolved by proclamation yesterday, the administrative council having approved the proposal, purporting to emanate from Gen. Li Yuenheng, vice-president of the republic, and the military and civil governors of all the provinces last December, suggesting the termination of the Parliament.

The proclamation says that the Parliament "will be reconvoked in due course of time."

It is now intended that the administrative council shall draft a constitution.

KOESLIN, Germany, Jan. 12.—A high tide submerged the village of Damkerort on the borders of Buckow Lake adjoining the Baltic Sea Friday night and the fate of its 100 inhabitants is unknown.

Troops have been sent from here to assist in the work of rescue.

CANADIAN LEAGUE TEAM TO BE PLACED IN TORONTO

Bright days are ahead of the Canadian League, says the Hamilton Spectator. President James P. Fitzgerald, of the Canadian League, announced this morning that the league has been granted the Erie, Pa., territory by the National commission and that the Guelph franchise would be transferred there, while he also made the sensational and unexpected announcement that "a gentleman by the name of Mr. Percy Kerwin" had purchased the Berlin franchise.

For the benefit of the fans it might be said that Percy Kerwin is secretary of the Toronto International League baseball club, and that the understanding is that he has purchased the Berlin club for the Toronto club, which intends to place the franchise in Toronto, playing at the Island Stadium while the Toronto International League club is on the road, the decision to take this step having been hastened by reason of the activities of the Federal League in Toronto, the Toronto owners believing that the Canadian League can be used to advantage to fight the Federal advances in the Queen City.

President Fitzgerald would not say if this was true or not. Other than to repeat that Percy Kerwin had purchased the Berlin franchise and would leave for that city today to close up the deal, he would not talk. When pressed for an explanation of Kerwin's activity in the matter, Mr. Fitzgerald would only go as far as to say "it looks that way,' meaning that it looked as if the Berlin franchise would be taken to Toronto. That this is a fact is only too evident and is supported by the following item which appeared in the Toronto Globe this morning:

The Toronto Federal leaguers are still very much in the air. Beyond the positive statement that this city will be represented in the new league and the vague assertion that efforts are being made to sign players, there is nothing doing.

The Federals and the motordrome promoters are conferring anent the establishment of a joint park for gasoline bikes and baseball on the site secured by the motordrome people on Greenwood avenue, near Queen street. Scarboro Beach is too far from the centre of the city for Federal purposes.

President McCaffery presented a new tangle to Federal League affairs in Toronto yesterday when he announced that the Toronto International leaguers were considering allowing the Canadian League to enter this territory. The Canadian circuit has wanted Toronto for two years. Should a Canadian League team be installed at the Island Stadium to clash with the Federals during the absence of the Leafs on the road, the people of the Queen City will have ball enough.

Should the Canadian leaguers come in there will be no chance for the Tecumseh lacrosse club at the Island Stadium, and the Indians would have to secure new grounds.

Richard Carroll and B. R. Hepburn M.P., of the local Federals, were in conference here yesterday, but had nothing definite to give out concerning their plans.

The decision of the National Commission of Minor Leagues that the Canadian League was entitled to the Erie, Pa., territory, and the decision of the Toronto magnates to allow the Canadian League to invade that city under International League patronage are the biggest things that have happened in minor league baseball in some years, and will prove a source of much satisfaction to all Canadian League fans. The replacing of Guelph and Berlin by such cities as Toronto and Erie will place the Canadian League in Class B. company and make it the strongest minor league circuit in America. Here are the cities that will comprise the circuit for the season of 1914, with the population figures:

Toronto	500,000
Hamilton	100,000
Ottawa	90,000
Erie	80,000
London	55,000
Brantford	30,000
Peterboro	25,000
St. Thomas	20,000
Total	898,000

BELLEVILLE TO BE SEEN HERE THURSDAY NIGHT

Secretary Bond has arranged for the Belleville Intermediates to play here Thursday night instead of Friday as the schedule reads. The local executive do not wish to conflict with the concert of the Conservatory Orchestra, Friday night and Belleville is willing to come Thursday.

Peterboro Intermediates will make a big attempt to win in Oshawa tomorrow night, and the strongest team available will be taken.

Bert Janes will work between the posts, and the remainder of the team will be picked from the following players: Bond, Bradshaw, Denison, Giroux, Kennealley, Park, Kelly. Captain Giroux and Pete Spratt have been appointed as a committee to pick the team for every game. The fans will regret to learn that Pete Spratt is not available. He has a good position with the De Laval Company and he will attend strictly to business.

BASEBALL DIRECTORS MEETING

Managership of Local Team Will be Considered To-night

The recent developments of the Canadian League has diverted the attention of some of the fans from hockey, and rumors as to how the Peterborough Club will fare next year are beginning to float. The first question which confronts the local directors is obtaining a manager. Jack White, the old Toronto and Buffalo player, who had some differences with the Syracuse Club, for whom he played last year, is willing to land a managerial job in the Canadian League. The local management have been dickering with White and a meeting of the directors is called for to-night, at which business of this nature will be discussed. Davey Rowan, George Ort and several other men have also made application for the vacancy.

The addition of Toronto and Erie will put the Canadian League in Class B., but it is hardly likely the Canuck circuit will raise the class this year. It rests with the club owners whether this step is taken and the majority of them are against it, it is said.

About the only difference the Class B brand of ball would make in the Canadian League is that it would boost the salaries without making any noticeable improvement in the class of ball dished up. There is very little difference between the two c[illegible] outside of the salary question. The London club has gone on record as being opposed to Class B ball, and it is also said that Ottawa is against it. There is no doubt that the weaker clubs in the league would all oppose it, although Toronto and Erie would likely hold out for it.

In speaking to the president of the local club about jumping to Class B. ball The Review learned that he is opposed to such a step inasmuch as it would increase the salaries without obtaining any better ball and this could not be profitable to the Canadian League as it stands at present.

BEST ICE OF THE SEASON

For Opening Games in the Mercantile League To-night

THREE CONTESTS

Mr. R. Dobie, of C. G. E. to Face the Puck

With ice, the equal of which has not been seen this year, the Mercantile Hockey League opens to-night at Brock street rink. As there are no other games till Thursday night there should be a large crowd out and by all reports there will be no disappointment for every team is expected to unearth a dark horse. The first game between last year's champions, the Tool Room, and the Bankers, should prove a rattling good opener. The Tool Room will have Egbert Kelly, who played last year with Norwood, and Robertson, who chased the disc for Galt Intermediates, three years. These men and Barrie, Primeau, Regan, McGrath and Cassidy, should give any team in the league an argument. The Bankers' roster is not known very well but since they have such a large territory to pick from, it is a certainty that they will put a formidable brigade on the ice. This game commences at eight o'clock.

The second game at nine o'clock between the Test and the "Examiner" will be awaited with interest as the Test are credited with having several fast men. The last game between ten and eleven between the De Laval and Plumbers, should also be a good attraction.

Mr. Len Dobson will referee and as there is a fine levied on teams not ready to start at the appointed times there should be no waits whatever between the games. The admission is ten cents to all.

The Mercantile Hockey League will be formally opened when Mr. R Dobie, Mechanical Superintendent of the C. G. E., drops the puck.

The line-up, the Test will send against the Examiner team is as follows: Goal, Dwyer; right defence, McKean; left defence, Braikenried; rover, MacDougall; centre, Carter; right wing, Boone; left wing, Munro; spares, Cranfield and Allen.

The following is the line-up for the opening game:

Tool Room		Bankers
Cassidy	goal	McCrimmon
McGrath	right defence	Phelan
Kelly	left defence	Corkery
Barrie	rover	Carson
Robinson	centre	Minorgan
Hillier	right wing	Peyton

ORIENTAL STAFF ACCEPT CHALLENGE

The Oriental Staff accepts the challenge of the Troop of Full Course Lewisers (Luizers) at any old place in the Brock street rink, possibly the goal or the gallery, as the tonsorial artists will not be able to display the same witch hazel steam cutting hockey ice as they do in the chair with camphor ice. The shavers will be up against the same proposition scoring goals as they are making hair grow on bald heads with herpicide.

We Don-a-hue the Lewisers have to shine, but our manager is on the job (if pleased tell others if not tell us.)

It has been said the Booster Boys are dieting on June clover and shaving soap. With this mixture the massage men, if they appear on regula blades, will sure make a lather.

We presume our opponents will appear in lemon and egg colors, daintily scented with lilac de France.

We suggest no practice before hand as it might take the dander off and we wish the game to beReilly.

Line-up to appear later.

THE VOICE OF A CHILD.

How One of the World's Greatest Song Birds Was Discovered.

Many years ago a maid employed by Miss Lundberg, a famous dancer of the Royal Opera in Stockholm, was given a holiday by her mistress and set out to take a walk. Passing a shabby little house in the poorest section of the city she heard a child's voice, which seemed to her wonderfully fresh and beautiful, and, looking up, she saw a little girl sitting near the window singing to a pet kitten. In great excitement she rushed to her mistress and told her of the exquisite voice she had heard.

Miss Lundberg was somewhat skeptical, but finally went to the house and heard the sweet song. She, too, was convinced of the great natural beauty of the child's voice and reported it to Croelius, the singing master of the opera.

Croelius was also somewhat skeptical at first, but at Miss Lundberg's request he, too, went and, standing on the sidewalk, heard the child sing.

Enraptured in turn, he told Count Puke, manager of the Royal opera, and arrangements were made by which the little girl sang for the count.

She was at once taken as a free pupil in the Royal Opera school and thereafter received the best instruction Sweden could give. The child was Jenny Lind, the famous "Swedish Nightingale."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Not Much Doubt.

Several Americans in London recently applied to an agency for an automobile in which to go sightseeing. There was difficulty in getting one on such short notice, but when the hour arrived a luxurious limousine car was placed at their disposal. The chauffeur proved well informed. When they returned they remarked that they had never had such a car or such a driver.

"Well, it is not often that one like this is for hire," was the reply. "Did you notice the coat of arms on the door? That automobile belongs to Lady ——," naming one of the wealthiest American heiresses married to an English peer, "but she is out of town."

The Americans who had the use of Lady ——'s car are wondering whether she or the chauffeur enjoyed the profits.—Detroit Free Press.

She Investigated.

What Elsie's sister wanted to know was where Elsie got that beautiful silver mounted walking stick. But Elsie didn't want Elsie's sister to know, so Elsie's sister got Elsie's father to ask Elsie.

"I found it." Elsie poutingly informed her father, "floating like a schooner on the waves one day when I was bathing."

But two days later Elsie's sister said to Elsie:

"Come—tell me! What is his name?"

"Name!" repeated Elsie blankly. "What do you mean?"

"I mean, dear," said Elsie's sister, "that last night I tried to make that stick of yours float in the bath, and—well, darling, it sank!"—Pearson's Weekly.

Many a man's failure in this world may be attributed to the fact that he used blank-cartridges when firing at the target of success.

WOULD ADOPT WOMAN.

Dr. Arathena Drake Wants Housekeeper as Daughter.

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 12.—Dr. Arathena B. Drake of 35 G street, South Boston, has petitioned the probate court for the right to adopt her housekeeper, Miss Matilda Bailey, 58 years old, as her daughter. Miss Bailey has been in the employ of Dr. Drake, who is 86 years old, and the oldest woman physician in New England, for thirty-eight years.

Dr. Drake was a close friend of Wendell Phillips, Theodore Parker, Louisa M. Alcott, author of "Little Women," and of the latter's father.

"When my husband died," said Dr. Drake, last night, "Miss Bailey came to live with me. She has been a faithful companion. She has been a daughter to me. I want to show her that I appreciate her kindness. That is why I want her to be recognized as my legally adopted daughter. I want her to be a legal heir to all my property in case anything happens to me."

WHY THE WOMEN SHOULD HAVE THE RIGHT TO VOTE

An Article Contributed by the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

Women have to bear all the burdens of citizenship, they should have the privileges. They have to pay taxes on their property; they have to obey the laws that they have no part in making. If they break a law they must pay the penalty. "Taxation without representation is tyranny." This is the principle which caused the American colonies to rebel against the Motherland and nobody today can blame them. Some may say women are represented by their male relatives. What about the thousands of women who are matrimonially superfluous; the wage earning women; the bread winner who has no male relatives?

Women cannot always control the vote of their male relatives, neither is it desirable that they should. Each person should have her own opinion and a right to express it. Men alone are not capable of making just laws for men and women. Our laws show this for even in this day of enlightenment the laws show a trace of barbarism. There is still a faint shadowing of the old barbarism when men owned women as their chattels. The laws regarding the guardianship of children show this. A child born in marriage has only one parent in the eyes of the law—the father; a child born out of marriage has only one parent—the poor unfortunate mother. If a child is a treasure, whose possession is to be desired, it is given to the father; if it is a burden and a disgrace, the mother gets it. The woman gets the worst of it either way. Our own province, (Manitoba), gives a man all rights to his property. He can sell it without his wife's knowledge or consent. Laws are more rigid regarding property than they are in the matter of ethics. A man is punished more for stealing ten dollars worth than he is for stealing a woman's virtue, or a child's happiness.

Woman's place is in the home. So it is if she has a home, and she should have every means of defending her home. What about the countless thousands of woman who have no home, and who are forced out into the world to earn a living under conditions they are powerless to control? When people cry out that woman's place is the home, do they mean that every woman should be a housekeeper, whether she has a home to keep or not? As well say every man should be a blacksmith. There is no subject in the world about which more absurdities are uttered than the subject of women and the vote.

Woman's influence must be felt outside her home. She may do all she can in her home to train her children, but as soon as they go out they are under evil influences that their mother has no control over. It is true that woman's place is in the home, but so many influences beat upon the home from outside that women must go out and free other homes from drunkenness and want, and create homes of purity, love and industry. It is not enough for the mother to have influence in her own home. The maternal instinct is needed in the world. When the daughters grow up and go out to work in a factory it would be a safer place for them if the mother had a voice in determining the conditions under which they work. It is not enough for the mother to say "My place is the home." The state is only an enlargement of the home, and needs, sorely needs the true mother-spirit, as housekeeping is not the only thing in home-making.

The ballot puts the power in woman's hands so that she may make her influence felt. If woman's indirect influence is good, her direct influence will be better. Then too, power brings respect. Boys accustomed to lean great weight on their mother's opinions, must wonder why their mother's opinions are not considered on election day. One of the reasons that men of a certain class are given to speak disrespectfully of women, is because women are not recognised politically. Power brings respect. Responsibility develops character. If women are given the responsibility of citizenship they will measure up to it and fit themselves for it. They are needed in politics.

Politicians freely admit that politics are in a state of corruption. This is surely a confession of their own inability to grapple with the situation. It is really a cry for help.

LEATHER FROM FISH SKINS.

All Kinds of Fish Supply Leather Both Curious and Beautiful.

Many kinds of leather are got from sea creatures, some of which are very curious and beautiful. The skin of sharks, says The Youth's Companion, is a beautiful burnished gray or bluish color. The surface resembles finely grained leather, inasmuch as it shows many tiny prickles set all one way. They are quite invisible to the naked eye, but there are so many and they are so finely set that you distinctly feel the roughness of the surface if you rub your hand over the skin in the direction opposite to that in which the prickles point.

This property of shark skin renders it especially valuable to the manufacturer of "shagreen." Since the skin is at once tough and easy to work, it can be used for any purposes where decorative effects are desired.

In spite of its lumpy armor, the sturgeon furnishes a valuable and attractive leather. It has been found that when the bony plates are removed, the patterns remain on the skin, just as the patterns of alligator scales remain on alligator leather, a circumstance that adds greatly to the value of the product. From the sturgeons that abound on our Pacific coast and in the great lakes we get a tough leather that is used for the making of laces to join leather belting for machinery. It is said that the lacing frequently outwears the belting itself.

There is found in Turkish waters a strikingly unattractive fish called the angel fish, classed among the littoral sharks. This fish yields an extremely high quality of green leather, much esteemed in the Ottoman dominions.

In Russia certain peasant costumes are trimmed with the skins of a food fish, the turbot, and in Egypt men wear sandals made from the skins of fish caught in the Red Sea. In our own country, too, the cod has been used in a similar manner, for in bygone days a good many shoes and gloves have been made in Gloucester from the skin of the bumble cod.

Eelskin is useful for many purposes, among them the manufacture of leather binding for books and for braiding into whips.

HEART PALPITATION.

As a Rule, It is Caused by Nervous or Digestive Trouble.

It is rarely, if ever, that palpitation is due to any disease or weakness of the heart. It is almost invariably the result of nervous or digestive trouble. The beat of the heart arises within itself. There are nerves in the muscles of the heart, and they regulate its beating, although the speed or rate of the beating is not of their choosing. If they were not held in check they would set a rate about double that which is actually maintained.

The heart is supplied from the brain with two pairs of regulating nerves. One pair, the cardio-motor nerves, act only to spur up the heart to quicker action. They are usually inactive, waiting the occasion for applying the spur. The other pair, the cardio-inhibitory nerves, are always in action.

It has been said that the heart runs in a pair of tightly held reins, and the simile is true, for these nerves check the speed. Fear, worry, disorder of the stomach or nervous system, cause these cardio-inhibitory nerves to relax; then the heart begins to race.

There is nothing the matter with the heart itself, and no one need be alarmed about that organ just because it beats too rapidly. Its palpitation is due to a psychological or a physical cause, something that has caused the relaxation of the reins and allowed the cardio-motor nerves to apply the spur.

Jersey City will probably be the first city to have women as autobus conductors.

Italy Still Firm.

ROME, Jan. 10.—While Premier Venizelos has been the recipient of great consideration in Rome, the attitude of the Italian Government concerning the fundamental lines of the agreement between the powers as to the South Albanian frontier and the Aegean islands has been firm. The belief is expressed that M. Venizelos will find the same feeling in the other capitals he will visit.

It is felt here that his tour will strengthen relations between Greece and certain of the European powers, but that he will not obtain practical results so far as further territorial expansion by Greece is considered.

WONDEREUL SOLDIER DOGS.

Which the German Army Finds Quite Indispensable.

There is in Germany a regular dog corps for service in time of war. Although these soldier dogs do not shoot guns or fire cannons, there are duties for them to perform that are quite as important as carrying arms. Most of the dog corps are composed entirely of Pomeranians or Spitzers, and these are mostly white in color. Occasionally a gray dog is chosen on account of his color, for he can escape more easily than a white dog, though even the white dogs are not likely to stay white in time of war. Each dog is equipped with a light but strong metal collar and a pouch for letters.

The soldier dog is given a peculiar education and it is given with regularity and care. First of all, the dog is taught to recognize men by their uniforms and is carefully taught the difference between the uniforms of Germany and those of foreign countries. Then he is taught the uniforms of the officers of the German army. This is done by patient and regular training.

After he has mastered the uniforms of the various armies the soldier dog is taught how to tell his master of the approach of an enemy or friend or of any other unusual discovery he may make.

His next step in education is the delivering of letters. These letters are placed in his pouch and the soldier dog runs from post to post delivering them. He is taught to know many other posts besides his own, to recognise them by name, to take a pouch full of letters to any post designated, to deliver them to an officer, to wait for a reply, and to return to his own post. After he can do this satisfactorily and without error he is "graduated" into a higher class and his education is partially completed.

The next lesson of the soldier dog is to look after the wounded. He is taught to discover wounded soldiers to take water to them, and to tell superior officers of his discovery He is also taught to take care of stragglers of the regiment. After this and after he knows whom to and whom not to obey, his education is completed and he is a real "soldier" and is assigned to a regiment.

ALD. DUNCAN WOULD START WORK TO GIVE EMPLOYMENT

He Thanks Council For Honoring Him With Board of Works' Chairmanship and Says He Will do His Best.

In accepting the position of chairman of the Board of Works, Ald. Duncan told the council last night that he appreciated the honor that had been conferred upon him. He realised what lost time and trouble be would be put to, but at the same time he had considered these facts and had decided to accept the chairmanship of the committee. He would do his best. He asked the council to help him to give an equal share to each ward with the money that would be given the Board. The Board could not expect to receive the same amount as last year. In his opinion it would not be wise, although he realized that a large amount of work should be done in the outskirts of the city. But the centre of the city could not be neglected.

There were, he said., many men out of employment at the present time. Council should do something right away, in connection with the new sewerage system or some other work, so that these men might find work. The new sewer work, he thought, could be started now and some of the work done as cheaply as later on. He would see the City Engineer and if the plans could be secured, council should start and give employment as much as possible. Ald. Duncan in closing, said he had the assurance of the members of the Board that they would assist him with their best efforts and he would do his best.

Mayor Buller said he would do all he could for the Board when called upon, and he was sure the members of the council would assist. The chairmanship as he knew, required much time, care and energy. It was a very hard task.

TWENTY-EIGHT MARRIAGES BY REV. CANON DAVIDSON

Rev. R. B. Grobb is Next With Twenty-five Weddings Last Year

A review of the records for the past year as to the number of marriages solemnized by each minister of the city, shows that the Rev. Canon Davidson leads the list with a total of twenty-eight marriages. Rev. R. B. Grobb of All Saints' Church, seconds the list with twenty-five marriages, while Rev. Robert Pogue of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, tied the nuptial knot twenty-three times. Rev. Isaac Couch, who made his departure from the city in June, officiated in no less than twenty-two weddings. Last year Mr. Couch led the list.

Rev. T. J. Mansell of Charlotte St. Methodist, is next with twenty. Father McCauley is next and so on until the list tapers down to only one marriage per minister. This happens in a number of cases owing to the fact that the ceremony was performed by an outsider.

The list compiled is:

Rev. Canon Davidson, St. John's Anglican	28
Rev. R. B. Grobb, All Saints', Anglican	25
Rev. Robert Pogue, St. Paul's Presbyterian	23
Rev. Isaac Couch, George Street Methodist	22
Rev. T. G. Mansell, Charlotte St., Methodist	20
Father McCauley, St. Peter's Cathedral	17
Rev. F. J. Sawers, St Luke's Anglican	14
Rev. H. G. Keith, Knox Church, Presbyterian	13
Father F. J. O'Brien, St. Peter's Cathedral	11
Rev. C. E. Cragg, Mark Street Methodist	9
Rev. Jas. Rollins, St. Andrews' Presbyterian	9
Rev. R. G. Peever, George Street Methodist	8

Rev. J. R. Webb, Murray Street Baptist	7
Rev. Jas. Clarry, St. James' Methodist	6
Rev. Father Phelan, St. Peter's Cathedral	6
Rev. E. E. Johnston, Bethany Tabernacle	3
Rev. F. A. Conners, Park Street Baptist	2
Father Cote, St. Peter's Cathedral	2
Rev. Jas. Price, St. George's Anglican	2
Rev. Dr. Marsh, Springville Presbyterian	2
Rev. Father McColl	1
Rev. Bond	1
Father Kelly	1
Rev. Mr. Ayarest, Toronto	1
Rev. R. Gay	1
Rev. Chas. Duncan	1
Father Meagher, St. Peter's Cathedral	1
Adjutant McElheney, Salvation Army	1
Rev. Mr. Gilchrist	1
Rev. Mr. Riddiford, Park Street Baptist	1
Rev. Mr. Defoe	1

The total number of marriages performed by each denomination is as follows:

Anglican	69
Methodist	67
Presbyterian	47
Roman Catholic	35
Baptist	10
Salvation Army	2

The total number of marriages for the entire year is 248.

The statistics compiled for the city in 1912 give 251 as the number of marriage registrations, therefore making a decrease of three.

The month of January, February, and March was the lowest quarter, when only fifty couples were led to the altar. The gordian knots tied in the months of April, May and June numbered seventy-five. The months of July, August, and October contributed fifty-seven while in the last quarter, sixty-six marriages were solemnized.

LOS. ANGELES HAS PUBLIC DEFENDER

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Jan. 13.—Los Angeles is setting a precedent in creating novel municipal offices.

First, it was the policewoman; now the California city presents the public defender. Walter J. Wood, a lawyer, has been appointed to the new office and he is expected to be as vigorous in the defence of his clients as the district attorney is in their prosecution.

COASTING ON THE HILLS

Police Chief Will Likely Take Some Action in the Matter

"What are the regulations regarding coasting?" asked Ald. Johnston at council meeting last night.

He said his attention had been drawn to the matter from what he had seen and heard. He had seen some narrow escapes of the young codgers, as he termed the youngsters, who jump on a sleigh and ride down a sidewalk to the danger of pedestrians and with their own lives in the balance, as trains and horses come on the scene without warning.

"It's a pretty serious matter up in our end of the city," remarked Ald. Green.

Members of the council thought it was a matter for the police, so Mayor Buller said he would speak to the Police Chief.

APPOINTED BY BY-LAW

Dr C. H. Amys, New Member of Board of Health

Mr. E. H. D. Hall is Re-appointed to the Library Board

The City Council passed by-laws last night, re-appointing Mr. E. H. D. Hall as member of the Library Board, for three years, and Jas. A. Hall, to the Board which has to do with the distribution of charitable funds, under the will of the late Almira Grover Foley, for two years.

Board of Health

Dr. Amys, Jas. Murty and Ald. Duncan were appointed as members of the Board of Health. These appointments are made every year. Dr. Amys takes the chair made vacant by the resignation of Dr. Young. Ald. Duncan and Mr. Murty were re-appointed.

Sewer Outlet Wasted.

A communication received from J. C. Shook, on behalf of the Dickson Estate, relative to a sewer outlet for Harvey and Waterford streets, between McDonnel and Dublin streets, was referred to the Board of Works.

Lights Removed.

The Peterborough Light and Power Company wrote that they had removed 12 arcs and 2 incandescent lamps from the area covered by the new system and should the Council wish to have any others removed, notice to be given to the company.

J. J. Turner & Sons renewed the correspondence in regard to enamel signs for the streets. This matter was sent on to the Board of Works as was also a request for a granolithic sidewalk to the south of the factory of the same firm.

A third communication from J. J. Turner & Sons in regard to an advertising sign was referred to the Manufacturers Committee.

All the members with the exception of Ald .Gordon, were present at the meeting.

COMMITTEE WILL REPORT

On the Power Proposition Brought Forward by Mr. O'Connell

The proposition of Mr. D. O'Connell, made to council on behalf of the Peterboro Light and Power Co., in which council is asked to permit the Otonabee Power Co. to sell their distribution plant to the other company, for $48,000, will be discussed in committee, and a report prepared for the next meeting of Council.

Mr. O'Connell accompanied by Mr. Munro, waited on the council last night in regard to further discussion of the matter.

The claim of the Company is that the city will need the distribution system of the Otonabee Power Co., when the city expropriates the system of the Peterboro Light and Power Co., in order to give a service to the whole of the city.

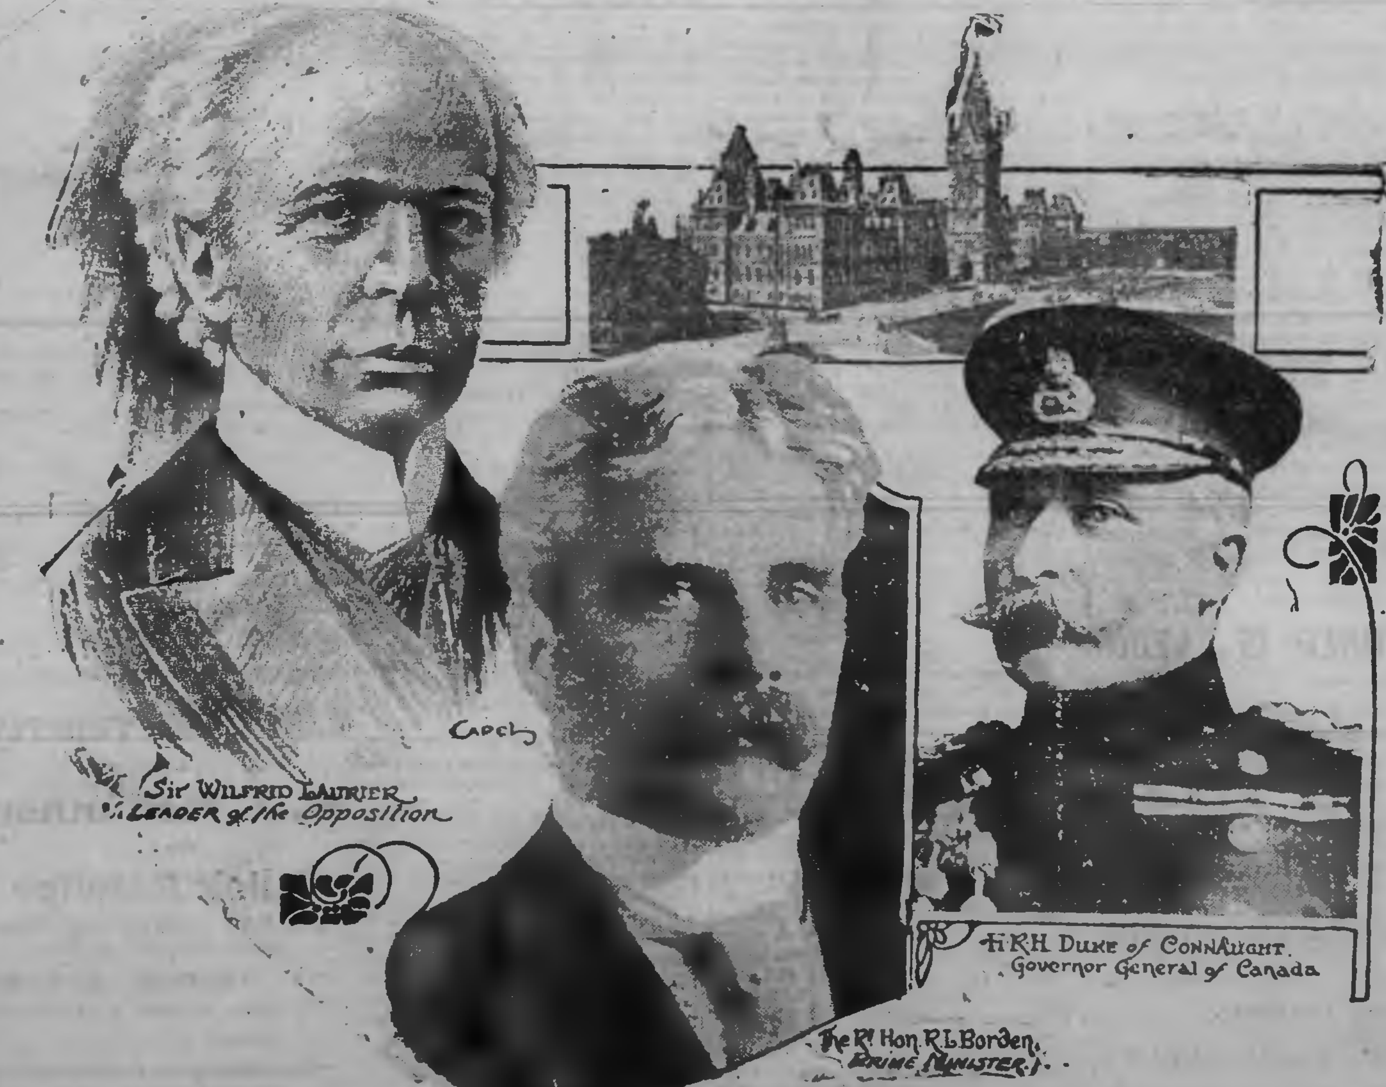
It would be provided that the city could purchase the Otonabee system at the same price paid by the Peterboro Light and Power Co., and if the city thought the price excessive, the price could be arbitrated. In the meantime, the Otonabee Power Company is continuing the service as formerly, permission having been given by council.

HIS LIFE SAVED BY POLICEMAN

So Magistrate Dumble Tells Man in Court, This Morning.

"You would have been frozen to death had it not been for the policeman." Such was the statement made by Magistrate Dumble to a Pontypool man by the name of Alex Hoskins, who appeared in court this morning, on the charge of being drunk in a public place last evening.

In the condition in which the man was found, there is no possible doubt but that he would have been frozen stiff in a very short while.



Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Leader of the Opposition

The Rt Hon. R. L. Borden, Prime Minister.

H.R.H. Duke of Connaught. Governor General of Canada

OTTAWA, Jan. 13.—Redistribution, free wheat and the naval question—these are three topics which promise to make the third session of the twelfth Parliament of Canada a memorable one, particularly if the last item on the bill becomes a subject of debate by the re-introduction of the bill providing for a contribution of $35,000,000 for the purchase of dreadnoughts. It is not at all certain, however, that the Government will bring down either its bill of last session or a similar one; but the one assured thing is that should such a bill be presented at the forthcoming session it will be opposed by the Liberals as vigorously as was the Naval Bill of last session which was thrown out by the Senate. It is safe to predict that in the event of a second Naval Bill meeting with similar treatment, some measure of Senate reform will be introduced. This might reasonably be expected to range between a proposal to change the Upper House from an appointed body to a partially elective or wholly responsible one, and providing that a bill passed three times by the House of Commons should become law regardless of its rejection by the non-representative body, as is the case in Great Britain. A move for the total abolition of the Senate is generally regarded as too radical to be seriously considered in Canada for some years at least.

The Redistribution Bill will meet with strenuous opposition by the Liberal party as a matter of policy, and because of the fact that the Maritime provinces will lose several seats it will be interesting to note how the Conservative members from the East act in the matter.

More seats will be created in the larger cities and in the West, but rural Ontario will suffer because it has failed to maintain its increase of population at the same ratio as the urban centres and the West. The actual carving out of the new constituencies will provide material for endless debate. Members with safe seats will view with misgiving the alteration of the boundaries of their constituencies, and others less securely ensconced will welcome a change.

The agitation for the removal of the duty on wheat in order to take advantage of the United States' offer to admit Canadian wheat free, is, of course, far less sweeping in its scope than was the reciprocity proposal of 1911, and the Government is not committed to any course of action.

The deputation from the Dominion Council of Agriculture was promised by Premier Borden that the arguments advanced in favor of free wheat would be carefully considered, together with the protest by the fruit growers of the Niagara district against any free interchange of food products. In this connection it will be recalled that Hon. Robert Rogers, in a speech at Carman, Man., intimated that the Government was open to conviction and would avail itself of the offer contained in the Underwood Tariff Law if it were convinced that such legislation would be in the interests of the Dominion at large.

In a social sense the session will be the most brilliant Ottawa has ever known, for it will be the last for many years perhaps, when Government House shall be occupied by Royalty. And it is a Government House more in keeping with the dignity of the capital of a great Dominion that their Royal Highnesses returned to a couple of months ago—a building splendidly adapted to the requirements of state balls and receptions and less formal affairs which are equally of interest to the society leaders of the capital. All that is necessary to ensure a brilliant social finale to the Connaught regime is the good health of the Duchess, who is now said to be almost entirely recovered from her illness of last year.

TWENTY LASHES AND ONE YEAR

BELLEVILLE, Jan. 13.—Albert Clapper, who some time ago was paroled from the penitentiary where he was sentenced to ten years for an inhuman act, was yesterday on trial before Judge Deroche with two offences. It is alleged that he stole a horse and vehicle and also indecently assaulted a little girl. A number of witnesses were called to give testimony. Mr. Anderson, County Attorney, represented the Crown, and Mr. E. F. Butler the accused. The result of the trial was that Clapper was convicted of the more serious offence and was sentenced to one year in the Central Prison and to receive twenty lashes.

ALDERMEN SHIE AT PROBABLE OUTLAY FOR OPEN AIR RINKS

But Committee Will Take up the Matter and Take Action if the Expense is Not Too Great.

Little drops of water more than slightly cooled, fell on the open-air skating-rink-for-every-ward movement, when the question came before the council last night.

After some discussion it was moved by Ald. Johnston, seconded by Ald. Duffus, that the Mayor with Ald. Duncan, Gordon, Green, Langford and McIntyre be a committee to deal with the matter, with power to act.

Mayor Buller said Dr. Morrison, chairman of the Board of Education, had informed him, a site for a rink was available at the new West Ward school.

Ald. Langford said he had a site in view for the North Ward and Ald. McIntyre said he had secured one for the West Ward. Added to this ex-Mayor Bradburn had offered a lot next to the Bell Telephone Co., for the Centre Ward. A letter was also received from Col. Clegg, stating that he did not think the Department of Militia would object to the use of the parade grounds. This space could be increased if the Board of Education would permit the use of the part of the Collegiate grounds.

Use Money for Charity

Ald. Green opined that if the money was used for charity, it might be spent to better advantage. There were a large number of poor people in the city at the present time.

Ald. Anderson questioned the advisability of spending much money for caretakers and shacks. "We might spend $700 and if the weather turned soft the whole thing would be spoiled."

Ald. Johnston pointed out that already there was the Street Railway rink in the West Ward; the canal in the East Ward; and Little Lake in the South Ward. It might be alright to take the space in front of the Armories and make a rink.

Ald. Green also expressed himself to the effect that the school trustees spend some of the money, he understood, they would ask from council and provide a rink in the school yard.

Ald. Duffus' opinion was that the rinks could not be handled without caretakers and that would take money. He mentioned that he had seen Rev. H. J. Keith, who spoke of a site in the South Ward.

Finally the question went to the committee.

Free Supply of Water

It will be remembered that at the last meeting of the 1913 council, a communication was received from the Water Commissioner, making the offer to supply the water for a rink in each ward if the council would provide a caretaker and some protection for the skaters.

A Question of Expense

Members of the council last night were of the opinion that considerable expense would be incurred, in arranging the grounds for flooding purposes, and supplying a caretaker and a building.

32 DEGREES BELOW AT SEVEN THIS MORNING

City Visited by Real Cold Spell — 19 Below at Noon—Trouble on the Railroads and Also in Homes—Coldest in 25 Years Says Mr. Jas. Connal, Sr.

The popular sign to-day is please shut the door. Needless to say, there are no garden flowers blooming.

The weather man says:—A cold wave of the old fashioned variety has been hovering over this section of the country for the last few days. While Sunday was a cold day, with 17 below zero, it was haridy in the same class as what we are experiencing to-day. Last night at six o'clock we had it 12 degrees below; at 9 o'clock 20 below, and this morning at 7 o'clock, 32 degrees below zero. No lower during the night. At noon to-day it was 19 degrees below — a very low figure for the middle of the day. While other thermometers may have given still lower readings these are official, and are correct. Thirty-two degrees below zero does not constitute a record for Peterborough, but it has been exceeded but a couple of times during the last twenty-five years.—W.P.

Trouble With Pipes

With burst water pipes throughout numerous homes in the city, with some of the poor up against one of the hardest propositions that has struck this city for some time, Peterboro is experiencing more than considerable difficulty as a result of the cold wave that has struck the city. With the thermometer registering as low as 32, the furnace is certainly eating up the coal. In conversation with Adjutant McElheney who is acting for City Relief Officer Finch Miller, who is in Winnipeg. The Review was informed that the poor of the city are undergoing considerable hardships and are suffering more so today, the principal cause being unprepared as to clothing and also as to fuel.

The plumbers are busy as a result and with the intense cold the city is almost at a standstill.

Coldest in Years

"This is the coldest day I have experienced in twenty-five years," was the opinion of Mr. J. H. Connal, Sr., this morning in conversation regarding the severe cold spell. Other pioneers also expressed themselves as the mark of 32 being a corker.

Mr. Charlie Noyes, the genial G. T. R. gatekeeper in conversation with a Review scribe, said that this was about the coldest day he had experienced for a number of years. Mr. Noyes has seen some hard winters on the railroad, and when he says it's cold, he means it.

Railway Mishap.

Last evening about five o'clock the heavy frost caused a flange to fly off the drive wheel on a Grand Trunk engine which was drawing a freight near Jackson Park. By the time the engine was drawn to a siding a number of trains were held up, and the line was not cleared till midnight. The train due here at 8.20 this morning was held at Millbrook when the engine broke down. In order to have the local curlers in Lindsay on time, the Belleville train went on to Lindsay. All the trains were more or less delayed and the Port Hope noon train was over an hour late. This however will not affect the hockey team as their train for Oshawa does not leave Port Hope till six.

Similar conditions prevail with the C. P. R. on account of minor accidents.

QUIET NIGHT BUT WEAKER

Dr. Pyne Says he Has Not Given up Hope

Canadian Press Despatch

NEW YORK, Jan. 13.—A bulletin issued by the doctors at eleven o'clock, covering Sir James' condition for the previous twelve hours, says, "Sir James' condition is not improved, although he had a fairly quiet night and he seems rather weaker than yesterday."

When inteviewed this morning Dr. Pyne admitted Sir James Whitney's condition had shown a gradual retrogression since Sunday. "Will Sir James last a week under the present circumstances?" asked the interviewer.

"He might, but we cannot tell," answered Dr. Pyne. "If no particular exertion is imposed on him his tremendous vitality and physical strength might carry him along for quite a while."

When it was pointed out to Dr. Pyne that the bulletins were creating a pessimistic feeling among the public, he acknowledged this was warranted, but added he had not given up hope.

Consumption causes one-seventh of all the deaths in the world.

New York women suffragists desire women watchers at the polls in 1915, when the suffrage question will be in force.

SUCCUMBS TO APPENDICITIS

Mr. Edward Greenland. Died While on Visit to Orillia.

Many friends and acquaintances will regret exceedingly, to learn of the death at Orillia, of Mr. Edward Greenland. The late Mr. Greenland went to Orillia to visit his brother, for New Year's and he was stricken with appendicitis. He passed away early Sunday morning.

Mr. Greenland had resided in this city for ten years, coming from England. He was employed with the Canadian General Electric Company, and he was a man whom everyone respected and held in high esteem. Several years ago his son, Reginald Greenland passed away.

In religion Mr. Greenland was an Anglican, and on speaking of his death this morning, Rev. R. B. Grobb said he was one of the most faithful members of All Saints' Church.

He had made his home with Mrs. Fair, at 212 Reid Street. The funeral will be held in Orillia.

DEATH OF MRS. INCE

The funeral of the late Mrs. Helen Jane Ince, widow of the late Wm. Ince, of Perkins-Ince Company, who have a branch in this city, was held in Toronto yesterday.

PETERBOROUGH, TUESDAY, JAN. 13, 1914.

THE SWEET-PUFF BASIS.

IT IS GRATIFYING to find from the reports of the Peterborough Health Association that there is a determined attempt to grapple with disease in the city. There is no doubt that efficient, tactful and diligent nurses can do much to stem the inroads of disease, alleviate suffering and in many cases put helpless stricken ones on the way to recovery.

The most important aspect of the work of these visiting nurses is that of prevention. To educate the people in the essentials of health. It is amazing the amount of ignorance which prevails among parents as to what is good and what is not good for a child. Our nurses might well turn their attention to the question as to what is best for a growing child to eat. Many parents seem to think that the child itself is the best judge on this point and invariably give the infant in their "care" just what it asks for. No child is born with the capacity for discrimination in food. A baby would as soon eat a piece of coal—or try to—as anything else. With most of us our tastes are acquired, and it is certain that we can acquire a taste for almost anything if we start early enough.

When a meal is set out on the table the first thing that any ordinary child sitting in the high-chair will get its eye upon is the "icing cake." Now, "icing cake" is the last thing in the world to start a meal upon, no normal grown-up person would start a meal with "icing cake." Yet how many parents have the common-sense or the will-power to refuse a child the top piece of an "icing cake" the moment it reaches out its hand for it? There are some parents who can arrange the diet of their children and insist upon them eating just what is nourishing and not what is pleasing to the palate merely. We do not eat to please the palate but to build up the constitution. It is a good rule to observe Shakespeare's dictum in this matter of feeding children: "What's sweet to taste is in digestion sour."

More than one-half of the puny children are puny because of indiscriminate feeding. If their cases were looked into it would be found that such children were the victims of a depraved taste of some kind, that their little lives had no solid foundation to build upon, that instead of good concrete being put into the base of their constitutions, in the form of plain wholesome food, their lives were based upon nothing more substantial than sweet puffs.

It is little wonder that so many children die young and it is a pity so many of such ill-fed children survive, for the rest of their days are spent in misery from dispepsia and fall easy victims to the more malignant diseases. There is a delusion that "sugar is fattening" and that we should eat lots of it in order to keep warm in this severe weather. Our nurses and our doctors can do very much in educating us as to what is the best for us to eat; but experience teaches us that the plainer the food, using sugar as you would salt in moderation, the better it is for digestion and for the sustaining of our physical organizations.

GOVERNING A CITY.

MONTREAL is perhaps the most self-maligned city on the continent just now. If one half the things the Montrealers have said about their city were said by anyone outside of Montreal there would have been some shooting going on. Every man has got the sole right to call himself a fool, and he is generally right when he exercises his prerogative. Some of the choice epithets attributed to the city of Montreal by itself are quoted by the Montreal Herald. They at least show the elasticity of the English language. The following are examples of saying the same thing in sixteen different ways:

"Rotten mess."
"Dirtier than Constantinople."
"A very dirty city."
"A disgusting mess."
"A disgusting hole."
"The sort of government we have in Montreal."
"Cancer infected."
"Diseased body politic."
"A futile government."
"Inevitably ignorant."
"Ignorance, graft and laxity."
"Disgusting conditions."
"Disgracefully governed."
"Absolutely inefficient."
"Symptoms of disease."
"Inefficiency and slackness."

As we all know, the cause of this eruption was the water famine which prevailed in the city recently through the breaking of one of the conduits. It can be well believed that the foregoing list of choice expressions are filtered through the newspaper office, and that the language used by citizens, on coming down in the morning and finding the water off, was in many instances much more turbid than the drop of water which had to serve for the family-washing of dishes and faces for two or three days.

We say many things when we get mad which we are sorry for when something pleases us, and probably Montreal is not so bad as it makes itself out to be. Still, open confession is good for the body as well as the soul and there are evidently many things in our Canadian Metropolis which want looking into. The same may be said of any city. There is scarcely a city in the Dominion but has its secret sins and sores. There is a platitude, which too many people take for a truism, to the effect that "everything you say against your own city is going to injure it." "It is a dirty bird that fouls its own nest," and so forth.

There is a small percentage of truth in all this, but if a city is bad at heart no amount of boosting can make it better. The above platitudes are the inventions of grafters who have something to hide. The healthy and straight city has nothing to fear from the search-light of criticism. A city generally gets the kind of government that it deserves. If the citizens will not take an interest in municipal affairs, only for a week or so at the tail end of the year, then they generally receive profits in proportion.

A local contemporary the other evening patted our present council on the back with one hand and gave it a black-eye with the other by saying something like this after the election: "We have now a splendid council, composed of men who can be relied upon to work for the good of the city;—if they are watched." If we were a city council we would regard this as a very doubtful compliment. Indeed we would take it as a nasty remark. At the same time there is good sense in it and we advise citizens who want a well and efficiently governed city to do their duty as citizens and criticise or encourage (a little more encouragement please) the men who have to bear the brunt and the responsibility of civic government. The press is an open forum for all kinds of questions and we are willing and eager to publish any reasonable and useful correspondence upon any subject under the sun or moon, but especially upon topics that concern the welfare of our city. A lively public opinion will save us from deserving the accusations contained in the above list.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

"WHEN LAURIER comes in food taxes go out," says The Globe. They kept very close company for fifteen years, anyway.

The word Tango is a thorn in the flesh to the mad rhymer, but one has been equal to the occasion and has used his license pretty freely in changing it to "Tongo."

There was a young man on the Congo
Who wanted to master the Tongo,
But he tried for a year
And then said, "I fear
It is very immodest to Tongo."

A HAMILTON PREACHER has been saying some severe things about newspaper reporters: "You newspaper reporters, you garbage vultures," he cried in his condemnation of them. "Why do not the papers print heart stories? Why do they give to a public stories that are worldly and seamy rather than those which tend for the social uplift? I could tell many true tales of husband and wife staying side by side through thick and thin. I could tell of family affection beautiful beyond words. Why are these stories not printed? Has the public no use for them?"

If this condemnation applies to Peterborough reporters this is surely yet another province for the vigilant supervision of Sanitary Inspector Spence.

OUR CITY FATHERS have got to work in earnest under the Grand Father Bailey. His Worship's address was a fine and comprehensive setting out of the programme for the year. If the programme goes through successfully we are in for a very good performance.

The items are "Sewage Disposal, Hydro-Electric, Street Paving, Street Railway, Water Service, The Assessment, Sanitation, Moral Conditions, Building By-Law, High Cost of Living, New Industries.

This promises to be a specially fine entertainment and it is up to the audience to see that each "number" comes on in its turn and is carried out. Citizens should keep this programme before them, so that they can follow the performance intelligently.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

High Praise for Tom Terriss.

Hamilton Herald.

Mr. Terriss is perhaps the most versatile male player who has been seen in Hamilton in years. He follows splendidly in his father's footsteps. In the character are to be found as many or more angles, twists and turns as there are in any well known dramatic character, and Mr. Terriss was never wanting. Dickens lovers in the audience had every reason to feel grateful for the faithful presentation of A Christmas Carol, and could not do else than admire the players for their ability and skill.

The Six Great Americans.

Colliers.

Irving Bacheller, who writes popular novels, got up at a dinner and named

"Six great men who had done all the big things accomplished in America since 1850. These he named were Commodore Vanderbilt, business man; Abraham Lincoln, statesman; Thomas A. Edison, inventor; Mark Twain, novelist; Horace Greeley, journalist, and Walt Whitman, poet."

Do you agree with him or can you name a greater half dozen? What would the United States be like if these men had done all the big things since 1850?

The Forgotten Things.

Collier's.

We have forgotten our friends the stars
And our mother the moon,
How the north wind under the stars
Danced to a scrannel tune.

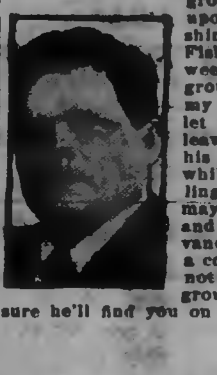
We have forgotten our love the sea
And our neighbor the earth;
How we cursed the wrath of the sea
With our spoils of death and birth.

Our new mistress has yellow eyes,
Long fingers quick to hold;
We call her Beauty, we praise her eyes,
Her name is Gold.

—Ethel Talbot Scheffauer.

RED LETTER DAY

By Walt Mason



The Christmas time has passed away; we're now approaching groundhog day—that day momentous, fraught with fate, when from his underground estate the groundhog comes and casts his eyes upon the bleak midwinter skies. And if the sun is shining then, he goes into his hole again and says, "'Ods Fish!' The storms will roar and whoop around for six weeks more!" But if dark clouds obscure the sun, the groundhog says, "Now spring's begun, and I'll forsake my dingy lair and breathe again the open air!" So let me live and train my soul that when the groundhog leaves his hole he will not find me unprepared, nor by his stern decision snared. If winter's due to last a while, may I be found with goodly pile of coal and kindling for the grate; and if the spring is coming straight, may I be fixed with rakes and hoes, and garden seeds, and things like those. The prudent man plans in advance, and then whatever luck may chance he is not in a corner caught, but he is Johnnie on the spot. So do not sit and twirl your thumbs, but, when the stately groundhog comes, predicting weeks of cold or heat, be sure he'll find you on your feet.

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

TUESDAY, JANUARY THIRTEENTH

George Hague, the veteran Canadian banker, who is eighty-nine years of age to-day, came to this country from England sixty years ago to act as financial manager for a firm of railway contractors. Chance brought him to Toronto and there he fell in with the little group of men who were organising what was to become the Bank of Toronto. The young Yorkshireman was offered and accepted the post of accountant in the new institution. A few years later he was promoted to be cashier or general manager. After he had been in office for thirteen years he transferred his services to the Merchants' Bank, of which he remained general manager until twelve years ago. Mr. Hague is one of the foremost authorities on the Canadian banking system and has written several books on the subject.

BEER IN ANCIENT ENGLAND.

When the Law Demanded "Drynke" For the King's Subjects.

Authorities in England formerly took pains that the Londoner should not miss his full share of ale. In the sixteenth century, for instance, the brewer who ceased to brew was faced with the loss of his business. Thus, if the mayor got wind of "any of the saide brewers, of their frowarde and perverse myndes, shall at any time hereafter sodenly forbeare and abstayne from bruyinge, whereby the king's subjects should be destitute or unprovided of drynke," he knew exactly what to do. The city council was empowered to take over the business as a going concern and to take measures to see that it was kept going.

The cry then and for centuries after was all for beer. There is record of a petition of 1673, for instance, praying that tea, coffee and brandy be banned. The petitioners reasoned that the laborers needed "good strong beer and ale" which "refreshed their bodies and neither did them prejudice nor hindered their work."

Besides, it cost little and was the product of home grown grain, whereas the new fangled drink was enervating and destroyed his majesty's subjects, "not agreeing with their constitution."—Chicago News.

Unkind Criticism.

"I go to these concerts merely to kill time."

"Well, I'm sure you often find it being murdered there."—Baltimore American.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

THE ONTARIO FARMER.

To the Editor of The Review:

Sir,—It begins to look as if the Government intended to bring in free wheat, free flour, free semolina and free by-products. How this will affect the Ontario farmer the latter has not told the press or government. He has held no meetings and promoted no discussions hence it looks as if he had no objection. If the freight rates and mill-machinery prices are equalised it will not hurt the Ontario miller. Ontario farmers are not as a rule feeding their land. Their grain is not up to the original standard. They will have to feed all their grain to the cattle, etc., in the future and rely upon the home market more than ever. Ontario grain (speaking generally) stands no chance of export in any form. The Ontario farmer will do well to keep his ear to the ground or he may find himself largely sidetracked by foreign enterprise. Agriculture has suddenly come into its own all over the continent and indeed all over the world (Britain excepted). We must see to it in Canada that we get our share of the good things as a nation and not merely in a narrow local way.

Yours,
INTERESTED.

LIGHT AND HEAT.

How They Reach Us From Out the Icy Coldness of Space.

In answer to the question, "It is thought that in space eternal cold and darkness prevail—what then is the explanation of the fact that both light and heat from the sun, some 93,000,000 miles away in cold space, reach the earth?" Edgar Lucien Larkin in the New York American says:

"Heat and light as such do not reach the earth from our own and 100,000,000 more suns. Radiant energy is transmitted by undulations or waves in electrons, which energy is in the forms of waves of varying lengths and amplitudes. When some of these energy impulses impinge on matter able to receive and appropriate them heat and light result.

"Many molecules in many thousands of kinds of matter are able to translate energy waves into heat, while others are translated as light on the retina of the eye and in the brain. But no heat nor light develops until the waves strike forms of matter fitted to receive, appropriate and translate.

"Thus energy will pass through a 'burning glass' made of ice, converge to a focus and set light objects on fire."

Shipwrecks and Courts Martial.

The custom of holding courts martial in the British navy after every case of shipwreck has a curious origin. In 1741 the Wager, one of Commodore Anson's vessels, was wrecked off the coast of Chile, most of the crew being saved. The men and some of the junior officers held that they were no longer amenable to discipline because their pay ceased with the wreck, but the captain, whose name was Davy Cheap, differed, treated them as mutineers and shot one of his midshipmen. He was then deposed, and most of the crew made off in three of the boats. Later when it was proposed to proceed against the so called mutineers the law officers of the crown decided that the men had been correct in their view. This discovery led to the framing of section 91 of the articles of war, which provides that in the case of shipwreck, destruction or capture by the enemy a ship is held to remain in commission pending inquiry by a court martial.

October 6 Important Date.

October 6 has been of singular political importance in recent times. On this date in 1881 Gladstone made the famous speech at Leeds warning Parnell that "the resources of civilization were not exhausted," and describing the Land Leaguers as "marching through rapine to the dismemberment of the Empire." Ten years later, to the very day, Parnell died, and that same October 6 was the death-day of Sir John Pope Hennessy, the anti-Parnellite, who won the first bye-election in Ireland after the great split of the Irish party. October 6, 1896, brought the resignation of Lord Rosebery, and on October 6, 1903, Mr. Chamberlain opened the Tariff Reform campaign at Glasgow.

Climbed 24,600 Feet.

An expedition to the Karakoram range and western Himalayas some time ago succeeded in climbing to a height of 24,600 feet. But for a heavy mist it would have reached the summit, 25,110 feet.

Exeunt Scrubbers!

The second attraction wasn't a game of hockey; it was a tragedy. One of those cruel, heartrending affairs that would tempt a man to join the gentry above via the carbolic acid route. The Examiners alias Scrubbers, were trounced by the C. G. E. Test by the modest score of 8—0. It was sad.

From the very outset the C.G.E. brigade had it on the so-called Examiners like a Ladies' Aid Society missionary quilt. It was such a rank exhibition of hockey that the fans wished that the Scrubbers and their silver-toned manager had checked their outfit for another destination in preference to entering the Mercantile Hockey League. The so-called manager can hardly be blamed for wanting to call the team the "Newspapermen," for let it be known, without pulling out the tremolo stops, that there are some people in the newspaper establishments of this city who can play hockey. Take Swanson, Manion and Clancy off the Scrubbers, and there would be nothing left but some sticks and cheap uniforms.

At half time the score stood 3—0 but after that they just piled up. The manager (?) stood like a Napoleon and was heard to exclaim "Oh, ye gods, ye gods, must I endure all this," some cruel bystanders answered "All this, aye more," and then "Dick Boone" scored again. He allowed his pipe to go out and opened his coat, uncovering a garment of the brightest of red. It may have been a sign for blood for his team started "roughing" it. Referee Dobson was equal to the occasion and banished a few of them.

The Test have a fairly good aggregation and can be counted upon to be in the running all the time. McDougall and Carter, their centre ice men, are very fast. The fans will be able to get a better line on them when they clash with a hockey team.

Those who participated in the farce were:

Test—8		Examiner—0
Dwyer	goal	Swanson
McKean	right defence	Lees
Breckenried	left defence	Clancy
McDougall	rover	Heard
Carter	centre	Armstrong
Boone	right wing	Barringer

At ten o'clock Peter Spratt led his DeLaval Brigade against the Plumbers. The latter team was right at home "working in the cold" and handed the boys from the southern factory a neat little trimming by the score of 3-1. The hockey played was not of the very best calibre, both teams showing lack of practice. Reynolds of the Plumbers, was a tower of strength to his team and his back-checking had the De Laval forward line thrown into confusion. The wing men of the winners, Logan and Grange, put up a nice game considering their size, and Logan drew considerable attention when he checked Spratt two or three times just as Peter was starting to "get away."

The teams:

Plumbers—3		De Laval—1
Dunsford	goal	Fitzgerald
Reynolds	right defence	Spratt
Mallett	left defence	Rulter
Dobson	rover	McCloud
Helson	centre	Todd
Logan	left wing	Patterson
Gangre	ight wing	Hill

SAME TEAM FOR OSHAWA

No Change in Lineup for Important Game Tonight

Goal—Janos.
Right defence—Bradshaw.
Left defence—Bond.
Rover—Denison.
Centre—Park.
Left Wing—Kelly.
Right Wing—Giroux.

The above was the team which was picked by Messrs. Giroux, Spratt and Bond to represent the local intermediates at Oshawa tonight.

Without a doubt the ice should be in fine condition and this should favor the locals.

To stay in the running, the locals have to win and if they do, it will only be after a hard battle, for this Oshawa aggregation are fast. A great game is expected.

PUCKERINGS FROM PUCK

The astronomers will look in vain before they'll discover any stars amongst the Scrubbers.

This McDougall of the Test is there.

By all appearances the Tool Room have won their last Mercantile Hockey League championship.

Len Dobson handles a game as well as most of the O. H. A. men, we have had here, so far this season.

Licked by 8 to 0 reminds us, Mogul Russel's out of date. He might try his team at marbles some night when its good and late.

Who did "Pastor Russell" ever beat anyway?

And after all, what's in a name.?

Now they say Richardson is eligible for the Junior City League. Such being the case, the Boston Exploits will please add a little more speed.

BONSPIEL AT LINDSAY

One Hundred and Four Rinks Entered in Competitions

Lindsay, Jan. 13.—Lindsay is gaily decorated and the townspeople are enthusiastic over the big bonspiel which started this morning.

One hundred and four rinks are entered including about [illegible]venty from Toronto. There are ten sheets of ice and there will be five draws daily.

Rochon, the Winnipeg skip, and McAulay, of Southampton, who are playing in St. Thomas, will not be here until Wednesday.

The draw for games at 12.30 brought Boucher, Peterborough, and Gilles, Brampton, together, and Stevenson, Peterborough, and Beck, Brampton.

For later games, Fitzgerald, Peterborough, was drawn against McCainus, Keene, and Waddell, Peterborough, against Findlay, Norwood.

Sturgeon, Peterborough, was included in the byes.

SACRET HEART RINK NOW OPEN

The Sacred Heart skating rink in the south end of the city is now open for the season.

The rink presents a very beautiful appearance by the addition of new Tungsten electric lamps. The dressing rooms have been remodelled and will be found warm and comfortable for the accommodation of its many patrons.

We Use 'Em All.

The export of butter and eggs from Canada to Great Britain has entirely stopped, and the export of live cattle from Canada to Britain is decreasing. Apart from the Irish supplies, the total cattle received in Britain in 1912 was only 49,000. In 1905 over half a million were landed. The figures relating to sheep are even more remarkable, falling from 1,000,000 in 1895 to 150,000 in 1912. The supply is by no means equal to the demand.

The decadence of the trade in animals on the hoof, however, has been partly balanced by the increased imports of dead meat. Over eight million hundredweight of fresh beef was imported in 1912, having doubled in ten years. Over five million hundredweight of fresh mutton was imported, an increase of one million in a decade.

Taking all kinds of meat together, the aggregate overseas receipts last year were about 21,000,000 hundredweight, valued at about $232,000,000.

A LONELY PASTORATE.

Half of the Ungava Church Staff Is Now on Furlough.

Half the staff of what is perhaps the loneliest mission station in the world is now spending a brief furlough in England. That half-staff is the Rev. S. M. Stewart, whose permanent address is anywhere in Ungava, the great ice-bound province between Labrador and Hudson Bay—a thousand miles further from civilization than the scene of Grenfell's work in Labrador.

"The most anxious moment of the year," said Mr. Stewart, "is when the Hudson Bay Company's vessel from England is sighted, and we are waiting to know whether she brings us good news or ill. A few years ago my furlough was nearly due, and I was looking forward to getting back to see my old father in Ireland. Then the ship came and I found he had died nine months before."

The equanimity with which Mr. Stewart could speak, within the very confines of Fleet street itself, of his banishment from the news of the world came as something of a shock to the interviewer.

"We get on quite well without news," the exile declared, "and I find I can pick up the threads of everything that matters within a week after I get home."

For the last eighteen months Mr. Stewart has had a colleague to share his solitude, but for twelve years before that he carried on the work single-handed.

The missionary's preaching includes the gospel of cleanliness, and he backs it up in a practical way with cakes of soap.

"Unfortunately," he remarked, "I gave them scented soap to start with, and they ate every cake they could get hold of. Now I have taken to carbolic, and they say they don't like 'medicine soap,' so they use for the purpose it was meant for."

Mr. Stewart is going back to the peace of Ungava as soon as he has found friends to defray the cost of a motor-boat that will rival his "twelve-dog-power Eskimotor" in keeping him in touch with his scattered congregations. He is looking forward with lively anticipation both to the experience of sailing the boat up from Newfoundland, and to the reception it is likely to be accorded by his parishioners.

A man can pocket his pride, but a woman, having no pockets, generally wears hers on her sleeve.

LONG TIME FARM LOANS.

Simple and Easy Credit System That Operates In Europe.

The standard length of time in Europe for a long time farm loan is fifty-four years. For such a loan at the present time the rate is 4.85 per cent divided as follows: Interest 4 per cent, administration .35 per cent and amortization (payment on principal) .50 per cent. This rate will pay both principal and interest and repay all charges due to the bank in fifty-four years. As this will seem almost incredible to some students, I will give a concrete illustration of how it works. It does not depend upon compound interest, but upon the fact that, though the rate of yearly payment remains the same, the charge for interest and administration is constantly decreasing because they are computed on the principal sum which is constantly being repaid; therefore the proportion which is applied toward the repayment of the principal is always increasing.

For illustration, if the debt is $1,000 the debtor will pay $25.25 every six months. Of the first payment, $20 will go for interest, $1.75 belongs to the bank, and $2.50 is applied to the repayment of the principal. When the debt is half discharged, however, this distribution will be greatly changed. The borrower will pay $25.25, as usual. Of this amount only $10 will go for interest, 88 cents will be retained by the bank, while $13.37 will be applied to the discharge of the principal. The final payment will be almost wholly to the payment of principal, as the first one went largely to the payment of interest. In this way one-half of 1 per cent will repay the principal in fifty-four years, provided a constant payment is maintained on the principal for interest during the entire period.—Representative Ralph W. Moss in World's Work.

ANNUAL REPORT MADE BY FIRE CHIEF HOWARD

In Responding to 190 Alarms, the Apparatus Travelled 190 Miles—420 Gallons of Chemicals Used

The following annual report on the Peterboro Fire Department, was received by the City Council in session last night:

CHIEF HOWARD'S REPORT.

Peterborough, Ont.,
January 12th, 1914.

To :—
His Worship the Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Peterborough.

Gentlemen :—

I have the honor to submit herewith my Sixth Annual Report of the Fire Department for the year ending December 31st, 1913.

During the year, the Department responded to 197 alarms of fire, and the apparatus travelled 190 miles. We have laid 31,650 feet of 2½ inch fire hose, and raised 975 feet of ladders ; in addition to attending the number of fires mentioned, fire drill was conducted at intervals turoughout the year, laying 28,600 ft. of hose and raising 1,400 ft. of ladders. In extinguishing fires, we used 420 gallons of chemicals.

Damage of $17,000.

The total damage by fire, as near as could be estimated, for the year 1913 was $17,400, divided as follows :— $8,070.00 damage to buildings ; $9,330.00 damage to contents.

The Department had to battle with a number of very serious fires, but nevertheless we have again been exceptionally fortunate in keeping the fire loss very low. The figures given in this report make a creditable showing for the City of Peterborough, and while we have been lucky in this respect, I trust the gentlemen of your Board will see to it that the Department, in strength and equipment, is kept abreast with the growth of the city. The by-law submitted to the ratepayers on January 5th, although defeated, cannot be taken as an indication that the citizens do not want proper protection. A number of explanations are offered, which justify the citizens in turning down the by-law.

As I mentioned in my report of last year, I again bring to your attention the necessity of providing additional equipment and sub-stations.

The inspection of Public Buildings, Wholesale, Retail and Manufacturing establishments has been carried on throughout the year and warnings given to persons and concerns who were inclined to be careless, have no doubt had very beneficial results.

The inauguration of the collection of garbage has had the effect of reducing the fire hazard to a very considerable extent, more especially in the business district of the city. The manufacturers and merchants take kindly to any suggestions offered to safeguard their premises, and in every instance have shown a disposition to co-operate with the Fire Department in an endeavor to reduce the fire waste in our city.

During the year 1913 five new fire alarm boxes were added to the system and I shall respectfully request a further addition during the coming year.

Firemen Well Behaved.

I have very great pleasure in reporting the excellent behavior of your firemen. They have at all times been faithful to their duties, courteous and polite to the public. There were very few breaches of discipline throughout the year, none at all worth making mention of. The Department to-day is in better shape in consequence of the general good feeling existing. I attribute this partly to the fact that the men are more contented, having received a slight increase in their salary during the past year, and I trust the gentlemen of your Board will show the Department every possible consideration in the future.

You will please find attached, to this report, a table showing the number of fires and alarms received, how received, the causes as near as could be ascertained, a stock sheet showing the amount of equipment and supplies on hand, and other general informatioin in connection with the workings and doings of the Department throughout the year. It is also a pleasure to be able to report that we have had no accidents in the Department of any kind.

In conclusion I desire to express the sincere thanks of your firemen and myself to His Worship the Mayor and the gentlemen of the 1913 Council, who throughout the entire year were most generous in their support and kind in their cooperation.

The Chief of Police and his staff of Constables have rendered valuable assistance to this Department on several occasions, which is highly appreciated. The general good feeling existing among all the city officials, which is so evident, is no doubt a source of gratification to the general public.

We wish to tender our sincere thanks to the public press of the city for the many kind references to the Department from time to time.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

I have the honor to be,
Sirs,
Your obedient sarvant,
W. A. Howard,
Chief Fire Department.

EXTEND RURAL MAIL DELIVERY IN ENNISMORE

Practically All of the Township Will Receive the Service.

The inspector of rural routes was in the city yesterday and spent the day in going over the map of Ennismore, and as result a big extension has been acquired for the farmers in Ennismore, by Mr. Burnham.

The various requests, some of them very conflicting, were considered. The plans include an excellent service for nearly all the entire township. Except in a few remote cases, the people will probably have to walk a half a mile or so to get their mail, but on the whole, the rural mail delivery is in good condition as result of the new change.

"It is for the general benefit of the township,' remarked Mr. Burnham to The Review.

The Inspector left today for Kingston.

PLANS FOR NEW ROYAL

Show Extensive Alterations for Comfort and Convenience of Patrons.

Plans for the alterations of the Royal Theatre were received to-day by Manager Clayton and tenders are advertised for.

The plans for extensive renovations in the way of seating capacity and a large gallery will also be constructed. The front entrance will be changed and among the alterations, a cigar store is billed for the front and will be constructed on the northern side of the entrance. Another store will comprise the south side with the entrance being between the two.

During his three years in this city Mr. Clayton has made a host of friends for himself by giving the public the best shows and with the improvements at the Royal, that popular theatre will be one of the best in the Province. Through his energetic and business ability Mr. Clayton is now the manager of three moving picture shows in this city.

Massachusetts this year collected $764,153 in fees from automobilists.

TO PROBE ESCAPE.

Royal Commission Will Investigate Krafchenko Affair.

WINNIPEG, Jan. 13.—Aroused at the public clamor for a thorough investigation of the escape of John Krafchenko, the Plum Coulee desperado, from the Winnipeg central police station Saturday morning, the Manitoba Government yesterday announced the appointment of a royal commission to make a complete probing. The enquiry will be conducted by Chief Justice Mathers of the Court of King's Bench.

Developments yesterday added more mystery to the escape. It was found that one of the bars of the window in the room where Krafchenko was confined had been pried loose from its cement bed and moved about four inches. The nut on the end of another bar had been removed, a feat that could not be done without a wrench.

The police now believe Krafchenko is being harbored by friends in the city.

During his preliminary trial Krafchenko openly boasted that he would be out shooting rabbits in the spring. Yesterday a rabbit was delivered to Police Chief MacPherson, with "the compliments of John Krafchenko." Close scrutiny of the handwriting proved beyond doubt that it was that of the escaped murderer, it is said in police circles. Rewards offered for information leadings to the arrest now total $6,000, and the City Council last night added another thousand to this.

Maine and Quebec Highway.

PORTLAND, Me., Jan. 13.—A new highway 224 miles long, connecting Augusta, Me., and the city of Quebec, is assured, according to an announcement by the State Highway Commission yesterday. The Quebec Government has appropriated $300,000 to build the road from Quebec to the Maine boundary, a distance of 93 miles, and the remaining 131 miles will be constructed by this state.

No More War.

SOFIA, Jan. 13.—At the opening of the Sobranje yesterday the Premier, M. Radoslavoff, energetically repudiated the rumor that the Government next spring, or at any time whatever, intended to draw the horror of a new war upon Bulgaria. He added that diplomatic relations between Bulgaria and her neighbors, with the exception of Greece, had been resumed.

Toronto Woman Released.

LONDON, Ont., Jan. 13.—Esther Sutherland of Toronto, wife of Fred. Sutherland, who, with Valentine Philip, confessed to counterfeiting here last week, appeared before Magistrate Judd yesterday morning and was discharged, the court holding that she was with Sutherland only in the capacity of a wife.

Broken Rail Wrecks Train.

ST. CATHARINES, Jan. 13. — A broken rail on the Welland division of the Grand Trunk caused the derailment of 25 cars of a 30-car train near Allanburg, several cars being smashed and traffic delayed until last night. The crew escape injury.

Chinese Idols.

The Chinese, according to a missionary, are the most exacting of worshippers. When they pray to their idols they ask for definite material blessings and they expect results. The life of an idol in China is precarious. Gifts will be heaped before it only as long as it seems to be bringing about the wishes of its followers. If the shrine falls upon evil times and disappoints its worshipers their homage soon fades. Not only do the gifts cease, but the resentful people of the countryside will come in a body and smash the inefficient symbol.

A Change.

"Tommy," said an irate mother to her incorrigible offspring. "If you don't behave I'll give you a good whipping!"

"Well, that'll be a change, anyway," replied the little fellow. "All the other whippings I ever got from you were bad."—Chicago News.

SAM LUTTRELL PASSES AWAY AT COLORADO

Well-known Baptist Evangelist Held Services Here, Several Years Ago.

TORONTO, Jan. 13.—News of the death of Dr. Samuel Luttrell, a Baptist evangelist, at Burlington, Col., reached Toronto yesterday.

The late Dr. Luttrell was a Canadian. He was between 45 and 50 years of age, and 23 years ago graduated from the Chicago School of Medicine, with a degree of M.D. After practising in Denver, Col., for fourteen years, the late Dr. Luttrell came to Toronto four years ago. Shortly after he came to this city he wandered one night into the Yonge Street Mission and was converted.

He gave up his medical profession, and allotted his time to evangelistic work. He was active until four months ago, when he retired owing to illness.

On receiving word that his brother was sick at Burlington, Col., Dr Luttrell left Toronto, when he himself was ailing, and he took a turn for the worse recently.

The late Dr. Luttrell had lived in Toronto for the last four years, and it is said that he had visited nearly every Baptist church in Ontario in the course of his evangelistic career. Mr. Moffatt has left for Burlington, and will bring the remains to Toronto for burial.

Peterboro people and particularly the congregation of Park Street Baptist Church will remember Dr. Sam Luttrell, for his evangelistic addresses at Park Street Church, where conducting special services several years ago.

Houseboats of the Thames.

The row of houseboats, each with its flowers, awning, flotilla of skiffs; the quantities of well groomed boats for hire among the willows all along the Thames' banks—this impression comes on the top of that of the half hour the other day coming into London in a sickly fog, of the horrible miles of Bermondsey and Lambeth along the lines, the ruthless heaps of rubbish, the hurry and grime of the two stations at Waterloo. The houseboats, etc., are the elaborate flower of that ugly plant called civilization. They stand for the comfort, the luxury, the high standard of England, which even in its lower walks of life offers similar prizes, similar complications, luxuries unknown abroad. One says to oneself: "How these people know how to live! How they exploit life!"—Vernon Lee in Scribner's.

Light Rifles For Cadets.

The Cadet Corps of Canada are to be supplied with 22-calibre rifles. The Ross Rifle Company is making the rifles of a pattern approved by the Militia Department. They will weigh about five pounds or less and are almost a miniature of the long Ross.

In the past, while the cadets used the long rifles for shooting over the ranges, and will do the same in the future, the rifles were found too heavy for drilling in the case of the smaller boys. The light rifles will be used for drill purposes and for indoor shooting.

First Aid to Settlers.

The lack of hospitals in the north and the scarcity of medical men in the scattered districts of New Ontario is being pressed on the Government as a necessity for the establishment of medical cabinets at certain points where supplies could be obtained and urgent cases dealt with until more expert assistance could be obtained.

Dicing For Cigars.

Throwing dice for cigars is a common practice in tobacco shops in Vancouver, and if the customer wins he pays less than the recognised price for his cigar.

Allowing for losses in slack season, three-quarters of the women workers in New York City receive less than $400 a year.

'TWAS MERE TRIFLE THIS OPERATION

Jackson, Miss., Man Took Operation Very Easily.

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 13.—"Slow down a little bit at West street; I want to go over to the sanitarium and get my appendix cut out." After making this request, Warren Pullen, a local life insurance man, jumped from a moving automobile, walked to the Jackson sanitarium, and an hour later was on the operating table watching the surgeons work on him. Mr. Pullen refused to take an anesthetic. "That ether stuff makes a fellow sick," he explained to Dr. Crisler. After the operation the young man insisted on getting a good look at the incision and then calmly requested that his wife be notified of the operation.

Storm Caused His Death.

BROCKVILLE, Ont., Jan. 13.—Wm. D. Williamson, G.T.R. engineer, died sitting in a chair at the engine shops after reporting for duty yesterday morning. It is supposed the exertion caused by wading through the heavy snowstorm from his home brought on heart failure. Williamson had been an engineer for thirty-three years.

SENATOR COX IN ILL HEALTH

Has Resigned as President of Canada Life Assurance Co.

TORONTO, Jan. 13.—Senator Geo. A. Cox, for many years a leader in the financial world of Toronto, yesterday, owing to ill-health, resigned the office of President of the Canada Life Assurance Co.

His physician, Dr. J. L. Davison; stated last night that the Senator was seriously ill, and it is known that his condition has been causing grave anxiety to his family and friends. Senator Cox is resting quietly at his home in Sherbourne street.

Merry Del Val Arch-Priest.

ROME, Jan. 13.—The Pope has appointed Cardinal Merry Del Val, Arch-priest of St. Peter's, to succeed the late Cardinal Rampolla, according to the official announcement made last night. A deputation of the Canons of St. Peter's was received in audience by the Pope yesterday afternoon and discussed with the Pontiff the appointment of the new Arch-priest.

Cardinal Merry Del Val is well-known throughout Canada, having been Papal Delegate here some years ago.

FOR WILFRED GRENFELL

Wilfred Grenfell, whom the people of Peterboro are interested in, and for whose work contributions are asked for through the local press, was born in Parkgate, Cheshire, in 1865. He was educated at Oxford and received his M. D. degree in 1889. He was trained for the practice of medicine under Sir Frederick Treves, and the late Sir Andrew Clark, and in 1890 was appointed Superintendent of the Mission to the Deep Sea Fishermen which was made a royal national institution by Her Majesty, the late Queen Victoria, in 1897. Under his leadership the Christian world has awakened to its privilege of service in the far frozen north and under his supervision, hospitals, co-operative stores, industrial schemes have been founded. He has been a true hero, and colleges, Governments, cities and individuals feel they have honored themselves in honoring him. Peterboro should become known among those who help to carry on this great Grenfellian task as a city that appreciates to a great extent his humanitarian and Christian efforts on behalf of the need people of the north.

TRAMPED TWENTY-TWO MILES WITH FRACTURED COLLAR BONE

Young Englishman Met With Accident While at Work in the Woods.

Mr. Joseph Poyner, a young Englishman, has been the victim of an unfortunate occurrence, the result of which will keep him under a physician's care for many weeks.

The young man in question was engaged to work in a lumber shanty, 22 miles north of Kinmount by Mr. Peter Connor, of town, who is agent for the lumber company, and went there last Monday, January 5th. On Tuesday morning Poyner went from the camp to the woods, where he engaged in chopping down the timber; the first tree he felled, rebounded with great force, striking him a severe blow in the breast and breaking his right collar bone. The young man was taken to the camp where he remained until Friday, January 9th, receiving such treatment as the physician there could grant, when he then undertook the journey of 22 miles to Kinmount on foot, no teams being available to transport him to the village.

He reached Lindsay on Friday evening last, and is receiving proper treatment from a Lindsay doctor, who feels the young man will never be the same as he was before the accident.

The collar bone from not being properly bandages, is now a long distance out of its proper position, which will always prove troublesome.—Lindsay Warder.

REFUGEES TO BE INTERNED.

Mexican Federal Troops Must Stay at Fort Bliss.

PRESIDIO, Texas, Jan. 13.—Six generals of the Mexican Federal army, 3,300 fugitive soldiers and 1,600 refugees who were driven out of Ojinaga, Mexica, by Gen. Francisco Villa's rebel forces, were put in readiness yesterday for a four days' march over the 67 miles of road to Marfa, Texas. The soldiers will be interned at Fort Bliss indefinitely.

At Marfa, the nearest railroad station, the Federal army which sought asylum in the United States after their defeat by the rebels, will be guarded by the border patrol pending their final disposition by the War Department. Among the civilians are 1,207 women, as officially counted by Major McNamee

The whereabouts of Gen. Pascual Orozco and Ynez Salazar, commanders of the Federal volunteers, who fled from Ojinaga with 700 cavalrymen, was unknown to the rebels.

P. E. I. TO CELEBRATE.

Semi-Centennial of Charlottetown Conference To Be Held.

OTTAWA, Jan. 13.—The Dominion Government has been invited by Hon. A. J. Matheson, Premier of Prince Edward Island, to take part in the jubilee of the Charlottetown conference which will be celebrated next midsummer. It was at the fathers' Charlottetown conference in 1864 that the first steps were taken which resulted in the confederation of the provinces of Canada in 1867. The only living member of that conference is Sir Charles Tupper, and it is hoped that he will be able to be present at the jubilee celebration.

Premier Matheson asks that the Dominion Government co-operate with the Prince Edward Island Government in making the celebration national in character.

Premier Borden has replied that the Government will co-operate in every way possible.

Losers in Titanic Disaster Want Damages Under British Law

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13. — Compensation for the stupendous loss of life and property when the steamship Titanic went to the bottom of the ocean will be put for consideration to-day by the Supreme Court. On the outcome of the argument of some of America's leading Admiralty lawyers will depend whether the Ocean Steam Navigation Co., the owners of the Titanic, must face the payment of some $13,000,000 of claims, or whether its liability is to be limited to $90,000.

Intricate questions of law which have perplexed legal minds of the United States and Great Britain ever since the Titanic's maiden voyage was ended by the iceberg's fatal blow, and which have not yet been decided by the British courts, will be up for decision.

The navigation company seeks to have the American court hold the Admiralty laws and rules of the United States applicable to the case, and thereby limit the liability of the company to the salvage from the wreck and the passenger and freight money received on the voyage, amounting in all to some $90,000.

American law does not apply, because the disaster occurred on the high seas. Furthermore, it is contended that the American law contemplates limitation of liability only when the disaster occurs from striking an iceberg. Some of the lawyers also argue further that British law fixes the liability of the owner because the Titanic carried the British flag, and that the Supreme Court should so hold.

Should the British law be held applicable, the American court would have to determine whether it shall proceed to take jurisdiction of the claims and enforce the British law, or whether the claimants must sue in Britain. In either case, it is said, a prolonged contest would result.

Cold Storage Men Repudiate Blame.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13. — Cold storage plant magnates, with press agents and lawyers, are in Washington clamoring for an opportunity to prove to the House committee on interstate and foreign commerce, that refrigerated storage of eatables has nothing to do with the high cost of living. They came to Washington confident they would be heard to-day but the committee has put the bill introduced by Representative Mackellar, on which hearings were to be heard into storage for at least a month.

Three Men Loved Same Girl.

PAUPORES, Minn., Jan. 13.—David Craig, 57 years old, and Sandy Rogers, 60, both farmers, Sunday were shot and killed by Harry Reely, aged 35, who then committed suicide.

Reely was said to have been infatuated with a 16-year-old school girl and objected to the attentions paid her by Rogers and Craig, who were also single.

PATIENT WEAK AND RESTLESS

Yesterday's Reports on Sir James' Health Were Pessimistic.

NEW YORK, Jan. 13.—According to the official bulletins the condition of Sir James Whitney, the Ontario Premier, was not nearly so encouraging yesterday as it was during the previous few days. His restlessness had increased, and besides an alarming weakness manifested itself. Dr. R. A. Pyne, his colleague and physician, admitted last night that the prospect was not encouraging, but he intimated that no danger was to be apprehended within a short time.

At nine o'clock Dr. Pyne issued the following bulletin: "Sir James Whitney's condition has not improved during the day. He is still restless and weak."

Dr. Pyne went out for a few minutes shortly after nine o'clock. On his return he was met in the lobby by Horace Wallis, the Premier's secretary, who had come to the telephone from the sick room. After a few minutes' conversation both went back to their rooms.

Dr. Pyne announced, however, about 10 o'clock that the restlessness which had characterized the Premier's condition during the day had ceased. "He is now resting quietly," said Dr. Pyne, "and the prospect is that he will have a fairly good night."

Last night the same pessimistic feeling was apparent with Dr. Pyne and Mr. Wallis as that which existed when the previous setback took place some days ago. The fact that the patient had grown weaker in the meantime was not considered to have helped the case, and while those in charge did not admit that all hope was lost, they were not looking forward to developments with any degree of confidence, although they maintained that there was no sign of a fatal termination for some time.

The census bureau reports that English is the mother tongue of 31 per cent. of the "white foreign stock" in the United States.

Stove Coal	8.25	7.25

I claim that the prices heretofore asked for coal have been reasonable, considering the expenses of the business. Below I give a statement of facts in connection with the cost of handling coal in this city. One ton of coal of 2,000 lbs.

1 ton nut (at Buffalo)	$5.36
Freight from bridge	$1.25

COST OF ECONOMICAL COAL HANDLING
(From the Coal Trade Journal.)

In answer to an inquiry with reference to the net profit per ton on coal we state that the profit can fairly be assumed by deducting the following items of expenses, these being based upon a fairly equipped yard, up-to-date generally:

Advertising	$0.03	per ton
Breakage, lost in transit, culm	.15	" "
Dumping in pocket	.01½	" "

Interest on stock carried	.02	" "
Average cost of delivery	.50	" "

Total handling cost to the dealer, per ton..........$1.42

The public may ask how I can afford to sell coal at the prices I now make. I am selling the coal at cost on track and only adding the cost of cartage to consumers (70c. per ton.) Overhead expenses will be charged to other lines of business.

BARBERS DINE AT ORIENTAL

Knights of the Razor Have Fine Time at Their Annual Banquet

"Where did all the fine looking tonsorial artists come from?" Such were comments of the guests at the local barbers' annual banquet held in the Oriental last evening, when no less than forty knights of the scissors and razor were present, and enlivened the proceedings with their usual flow of wit and current events for which one may always trust these artists to be well informed on.

The repast itself prepared by the efficient staff of the Oriental, was most appetizing and the guests enjoyed themselves to the utmost.

After the inner man had been thoroughly satisfied, chairman Geo. Campbell called the members to order and Prof. John Woodburn rendered a piano solo in his usual talented manner. Mr. Campbell also gave a brief review of the progress of the Unions of the city and also in outside points.

Bro. H. Gainey, in a neat and appropriate address, gave some very interesting facts as to the prosperity of the Unions during the past twelve years. Bro. V. Hall, secretary of the local union, also spoke a few words on the good work the union was carrying on.

Bro. Jas. Lewis in a neat and appropriate speech, expressed himself as being very glad to see such a number of respectable barbers in the city. Of late there had been more sociability between the boss barbers and the journeymen barbers.

Bro. Baker in a witty speech, claimed that some one had perpetrated a big outrage on him by asking him to speak.

Others who gave short addresses were Bros. Rylie and Donahue, who both spoke of the good work of the Union and the great benefits derived.

Bro. Campbell was of the opinion that the next meeting had better be called for the Oriental, owing to the large turn-out of the boss barbers. Others who gave short addresses were Bro. Moffat, Bro. Nicholls, Bro. Smith, Bro. H. Galfey, Bro. Welch, Bro. Henry, and Bro. Lewis, and others. Messrs. Woodburn at the piano, delighted the guests while the singing of Messrs. Smith and Hurry was also enjoyed. Bro. Dave Quinlan featured the evening's entertainment with some lively steps.

The majority of the speakers all expressed themselves as being greatly in favor of the early closing at 10 o'clock on Saturday nights, and the nights before holidays.

During the evening Mine Host Tommie McDonough was called on and made a happy speech. Mr. Don Shook, on behalf of the ladies, expressed their thanks for the remarks of appreciation of the services, during the evening.

SERIOUS MISHAP PREVENTED BY ALERT MOTORMAN

Ennismore Stage and Northbound Car Came to Grief.

The coolness of a motorman on north bound car No. 14 about 2 o'clock this afternoon was the means of averting a serious accident, when the Ennismore stage, driven by Patrick Sullivan, of Ennismor, was struck by the car at the corner of George and Hunter Streets.

The car striking the sleigh, caused the driver to be thrown forward to the horses' heels, also causing the whiffle tree to break. Fortunately there were a number of people on the corner who grabbed the horses and assisted the driver to his feet. He escaped without injury.

The sleigh was badly warped by the impact of the car, while the fender of the car was twisted and had to be removed before the car could proceed.

A few weeks ago the C. G. E. heavy electric truck was struck by a car about the same spot and strange to say, exactly the same time.

A single turn of a corkscrew implement that a Pennsylvanian has patented, cuts out the core of a grapefruit and loosens the pulp from the skin.

A GREAT COMEDY AND A GREAT ACTOR

At the Grand Theatre

Tomorrow (Wednesday) night for one night only Mr. Lawrence Brough will present Mr. Moncton Hoffe's wonderfully successful comedy. The "Little Damozel," three acts of brilliant epigram comedy and deep pathos. Mr. Brough devoted many weeks of the most painstaking care and arduous work in the rehearsal and production of this play, so that patrons of the Grand Theatre can be confident that they will witness one of the finest presentations that has come to us this season. If the opinion of the press and public of the great Dominion is worth anything, not to mention that of the big theatrical managers all over Canada, lovers of dramatic art will be fully satisfied on Wednesday night. Mr. Brough has gathered together a company of exceptional merit and ability, each artist having been selected with a view to exactly fitting the part allotted to him or her. Miss Olga Esme, Mr. Brough's leading lady, is a dainty and charming actress of great power and ability, and it is a very lovable human "Little Damozel" as played by her. Mr. Lawrence Brough as the frail, happy-go-lucky hero, gives a brilliant rendering of the part of "Recklaw Poole," and the company who support the above, include such well known names as Rule Pigott, Alfred Hemming, Andrew Buck, McLeod Foster, Amy Singleton, Edith Matheson, Cora Lambert, Aileen Macdonald and the setting of the play is identical with that of "The Prince of Wales Theatre, London" and The New Century, New York."

VARIED PROGRAM AT THE ROYAL

The management of the Royal Theatre offer a very fine program of vaudeville and pictures this week. De Rechard's aerial dogs as a head liner in vaudeville, give a clever performance of difficult feats, the like of which have not been seen before in this city. Musical novelties by Josephine Jacobs and Company are very entertaining, while Douncourt and Clay Morgan add to the merriment with their comedy singing and dancing. The pictures are up the high standard attained by The Royal.

HIGH TRIBUTE TO THE LATE GEO. RAWLING

Service Held This Afternoon at the S. A. Temple.

The funeral of the late George Rawling took place this afternoon, with service at the Salvation Army Temple at 2.30 and interment at the Little Lake cemetery. The service at the temple was opened by a song rendered by Staff-Captain Walton, of Montreal. This was followed by prayer offered by Adjutant McElheney, after which Mrs. McElheney sang "Home at Last," and during its rendering the many friends and members of the local corps present were greatly touched.

Major Moore of Toronto then read from the Book of Revelations, after which he spoke a few words about the life of the late Mr. Rawling, and paid a great tribute when he stated that in the course of all his travels, he had not met a man who was better acquainted with the Word of God. The Major also spoke very highly of the life of his wife, who predeceased him some 12 years. One everlasting immortal monument the late gentleman had left, was a son in the service of God. He then called upon Brigadier Rawling, son of the late Brother Rawling, to speak a few words.

Brigadier Rawling said it was indeed hard for him to speak under such trying circumstances, but he would like to say a few words on how good moral and honest his father had been. When he decided to take up the work of Christ his good father and mother did not put anything in his way, and in after years he would speak with pride of his vocation. The Brigadier concluded by thanking all those present for praying for his father, and also asked them to pray for his sister, and brother out west, who could not attend, and in fact, for all weary ones.

Two songs "We'll never say good bye," and "Abide with Me," were sung after which the body was placed in the hearse and the cortege proceeded slowly to the cemetery. Major Moore, who officiated at the grave, will also conduct the memorial services on Saturday and Sunday evenings.

The pall bearers were: John Boorman, R. C. Braund, T. Scott, H. Edmonson, T. Brooks and J. T. Braund.

Among those from out of town who were present were: Brigadier and Mrs. Rawling, Clayton Rawling, and Capt. Richards of Montreal, Major Moore of Toronto, Captain Smith of Kingston, and Mrs. Richardson, daughter of the deceased, who accompanied the body from Calgary.

KINGSTON, Jan. 13.—Major W. J. Neill, of Omemee, will be the successor of Lieut.-Col. James Massie as P. V. O. of the Third Division. Col. Massie retired at the first of this year. HON. MARTIN BURREL OPENS NEW BUILDING

Handsome Agronomy Department at Agricultural College, Guelph

GUELPH, Jan. 13.—The new field husbandry building of the Ontario Agricultural College was formally opened here last night by the Hon. Martin Burrell, Dominion Minister of Agriculture. Special interest was lent to the occasion by the fact that this new building, erected and equipped at a cost of $65,000, represents the first building to be completed with the money received by the Ontario Government from the Dominion under the Agricultural Aid Act.

The large gathering that last night crowded the big hall in the new "Agronomy" building was the first session of the annual meeting of the Onario Agricultural and Experimental Union.

In calling on Hon. Mr. Burrell formally to open the building, Hon. Jas. Duff, Ontario Minister of Agriculture, who was chairman, paid a tribute to Prof. C. A. Zavitz, head of the department of agronomy. Since the Ontario Agricultural College was established in 1874, he said, there was no department which had expanded so much as that of Prof. Zavitz.

Hon. Mr. Burrell referred to the great work that was being done by the Ontario Agricultural College, which he styled a national work.

Mr. Burrell reviewed the work that the Department of Agriculture was doing all over the Dominion, and the progress that had been made in the last few years. He announced that the first issue of a new Government publication was now on the press, and would appear in a few days, the "Agricultural Gazette," and would be sent to all interested in agriculture.

FIREMEN FELT COLD WEATHER

Four Alarms of Fire Since Yesterday at Noon.

Yesterday at noon the firemen were called upon to extinguish a chimney fire at 532 Patterson street. There was no damage.

At 7.10 last evening an over-heated stove in the office of Taylor's coal yard caused a fire in the interior of the office. The damage amounted to about $200.00.

At ten o'clock this morning the firemen answered a call to the old Children's Shelter, corner of Charlotte and Stewart streets. There was no damage.

At 11 o'clock they were again called out, this time to the Peterborough Fuel and Cartage Co's woodshed on Aylmer street. An over-heated box on the line shaft of the machinery started a fire in some sawdust. A few pails of water extinguished the blaze.

Inflated Theatrical Values.

"The 'show business' proper—namely the business of securing and producing plays for the entertainment of the theater going public—is a business of false and inflated values," writes a prominent theatrical manager in the American Magazine. "Reputations, receipts, salaries, expenditures, costs of production, losses on failure and so on through the list—everything is inflated.

"The $100,000 production probably cost $60,000, out of which, in case of failure, there was a salvage of $10,000. The $50,000 production can easily be duplicated for $30,000, and many a dramatic production has been made for from $4,000 to $6,000 that in the published figures represented an outlay of $25,000 before the curtain rose.'"

WILD PIGS OF BRAZIL.

Fate of a Jaguar That Fell Into Their Merciless Clutches.

The wild pigs of Central and South America have a reputation for ferocity and indomitable pluck and are exceedingly dangerous enemies to meet. Mr. J. Bigg-Wither, in "Pioneering In South Brazil," tells this story of an explorer's experience of them. Elliott, the explorer, and a Brazilian companion named Lopez were camping in the forest between two Brazilian rivers.

"Suddenly they heard, close at hand, a tremendous uproar of grunting and squeaking.

"'Pigs!' exclaimed Elliott. 'Roast pork for supper!'

"'Come on!' was the only comment of Lopez, and he led the way in the bright moonlight toward a little open space among the pines.

"In a few minutes they came to the edge of the clearing, and there they saw, not one pig, but a drove of fifty or sixty, all furious with rage and vainly endeavoring to get at a jaguar that was sitting in fear and trembling on the top of an ant hill, about five feet above the ground.

"'Don't fire,' said Elliott. 'Let's wait a minute. We haven't got too much ammunition, and we can't afford to waste any.'

"The jaguar, with his tail well up in the air, out of reach of the foe, was tottering about on the top of the ant hill, with his four feet close together and turning first in one direction and then in another to meet successive attacks.

"Just then the jaguar let his tail drop. In a second the pigs had laid hold of the appendage and had pulled the beast into the midst of them. A terrible battle ensued. From time to time the massive yellow body of the jaguar would rise above the rolling herd of pigs, and his paws could be seen dealing out deadly blows on every side. Then he would sink again and be buried under the bodies of his raging foes. After awhile the noise began to subside.

"'Where's the jaguar?' asked Elliott. 'I can't see him anywhere.'

"'Nor I either,' added Lopez.

"One by one the excited pigs moved off. When they had all departed the two men descended into the arena. There were fourteen pigs lying dead or dying on the ground, but there was no jaguar. Presently Lopez stooped down, picked up a fragment of something yellow and, holding it up, remarked:

"'Here be is.'

"He had found a bit of the jaguar's skin, almost the only fragment of his body left. He had been torn to pieces and devoured by his vicious foes, and nothing was left of him except a few scraps of skin and hair."

He Looked It.

"The last man that came by askin for work," said the farmer, "was one o' them writin' chaps."

"Did he say he was?"

"He didn't need to. I knowed it without tellin', fer he looked as lonesome as a sheddin' owl settin' on a graveyard gatepost an' as hungry as a possum up a simmon tree that had jes' been hit by lightnin'."—Atlanta Constitution.

Defining the Disease.

"I've cared for several persons," she explained, "but I never have loved any one so that I would have been willing to give up my home and work for him if necessary. That is real love, isn't it?"

"No; that isn't real love. That is softening of the brain."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Easily.

"Do you believe woman will ever be able to outstrip man?" she asked.

"It isn't a matter for speculation," he replied. "She done it."—Chicago Record-Herald.

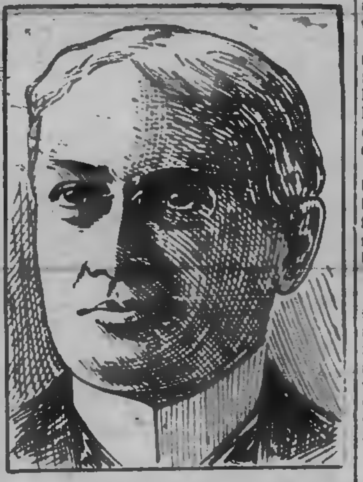
GRAHAM'S EARLY DAYS

MANY SETBACKS MARKED THE CAREER OF JOURNALIST.

Proprietor of The Montreal Star Used to Run Off His Paper In a Cellar and He Bought Steam From His Next Door Neighbor — Wrapped Up Newsboys' Pennies to Pay For It.

The present distinction of Sir Hugh Graham as a newspaper proprietor, with a fortune said to be several millions to his personal credit, stands in strange contrast to the circumstances of his early years. Those who have followed his business career from the beginning describe the heart-rending months when the first editions of The Montreal Star were run off in a cellar. The press was none too satisfactory in its performances and breakdowns were frequent. So pinched were Mr. Graham's finances in those days that he was unable to afford a steam boiler of his own, and arranged with his next door neighbor to run a pipe through the wall and supply him enough to keep an old steam engine moving at press time. The small payment for the steam often fell behind, and, it is said, Mr. Graham day after day would watch the coppers coming in from the newsboys until they grew into an amount sufficient to pay for the steam when he carefully wrapped them in his handkerchief and bore them off to the hungry neighbor.



SIR HUGH GRAHAM.

A Church Romance.

Guildford, a pretty little English-like village on the upper reaches of the Swan River, twelve miles from Perth, Western Australia, is the centre of a church-building romance which reads like a fairy tale. A beautiful church to be known as the Chapel of St. Mary and St. George is almost completed, though Guildford, in its wildest dreams, never thought of possessing such a temple. It happened in this way. The Rev. P. U. Henn, an Anglican clergyman, sent out a circular in England asking for assistance towards the building of a chapel in Western Australia. Within a fortnight a man, who has preserved his anonymity so far as the public are concerned, wrote to Mr. Henn as follows: "I shall be delighted to build the church at Guildford myself. * * I am very keen on the colonies There is no doubt they are going to have an immense influence on our history." The "good fairy" then set about giving effect to his intentions He selected an architect, had samples of stone sent from Western Australia to England, and made a choice. The church is to cost $150.-000.

Man-of-War's Hospital.

The hospital on board a British man-of-war, and which seamen call the "sick bay," is well equipped and modern in every respect. The hospital corps usually consists of two doctors, a steward and three or four assistants. The "sick bay" consists of a dispensary, an operating room a medical ward and an isolation ward. The dispensary is up to date and contains a complete outfit of drugs, which are official. Minor operations as a role are the only ones done on board a man-of-war while she is in port, but emergency operations are done on board while the ship is at sea. Ventilation in a ship's hospital is very good, and taken as a whole a hospital on board a man-of-war is a great deal better than the general public in civilian life believe.

Agriculture Course Begins.

WOODSTOCK, Jan. 13.—An important addition to the Woodstock Collegiate Institute curriculum was inaugurated yesterday morning when a four weeks' course in agricultural instruction was started. The course is being conducted jointly by the Board of Education and the local representatives of the Department of Agriculture. Representatives of the Board of Education andthe City Council were present for the opening ceremonies and gave the undertaking their approval.

New Postal Agreement.

OTTAWA, Jan. 13.—Hon. L. P. Pelletier, Postmaster-General, announces a new agreement with the Government of Australia for the direct exchange of parcels, under which the present rate of 24 cents a pound up to 11 pounds either way is reduced after the first pound to 12 cents a pound. The reduced rate takes effect from Jan. 1, 1914. This will no doubt lead to an increased volume of parcel post business between the two countries.

SOUTH AFRICA CONFRONTED WITH A GENERAL WALK-OUT

Troops Are Mobilizing With Great Rapidity to Cope With Violence and Cape Town is Like a Beseiged City—Proclamation of Martial Law is Withheld Until the Very Last Minute.

CAPE TOWN, Jan. 13.—Quiet prevails throughout South Africa to-day, but this may be the lull before the storm, as the incoming ballots from various centres make it practically certain that a general strike will be voted. The ballots received from the miners along the reef all favor a strike, and the various trades, including shop assistants, warehousemen and clerks, in Johannesburg have voted similarly.

The feeling is growing in Johannesburg that the situation is becoming more serious. The Cape Town harbor workers have not been officially called out by the union, but their response will not be known until to-night.

A ballot by the Johannesburg branch of the Typographical Union has resulted, by a large majority, in favor of a strike. This probably means that the people of Johannesburg will have no newspapers after to-day.

The most hopeful feature of the situation is the extraordinary success attending the mobilization of troops. It is estimated that there are 20,000 armed men on the Rand, most of whom have come prepared for the same kind of a campaign which made the Boers so long the despair of the English generals.

Cape Town yesterday also bore the appearance of a besieged city. A great mass meeting of workmen was held last night without the slightest indication of disorder. The impressive display of military is likely to have a wholesome effect on the Basutos, squads of whom continue to be escorted to the borders of the native settlements under armed guards.

Reports from different districts are conflicting, but the general opinion is that the situation has grown worse. Meanwhile the Government is withholding the proclamation of martial law until the last moment.

Dynamitards Will Be Shot.

PRETORIA, South Africa, Jan. 13.—The shooting of dynamitards at sight is to be a feature of the martial law to be proclaimed to-day throughout the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, and the proclamation is to be otherwise also of a most drastic character.

The Government purposes making an attempt to resume the full service of trains on all the railroads to-day, and it is in order to safeguard the train crews and the passengers that regulations usually imposed only during a state of siege are to be introduced.

BRITISH CAPITAL

Is it Frozen Out by the Rejection of the Navy Bill?

OTTAWA, Jan. 13.—Mr. A. E. Fripp, K.C., M.P., (Con.), of this city, who returned today from Great Britain and Europe, gives the opinion that the view in England of Canadian naval affairs is that the Government should reintroduce its bill this coming session to reaffirm its position.

"I have reason to believe," said Mr. Fripp, "that the failure of Canada to assist Great Britain in the naval defence of the empire has had the effect to a certain extent of estranging the desire on the part of British capitalists to invest money in Canadian enterprises as readily as they otherwise might have done."

FAVORS FREE WHEAT.

Manitoba Legislature Votes For the Removal of Countervailing Duty.

WINNIPEG, Jan. 13.—The free wheat resolution introduced in the Manitoba Legislature by H. S. Simpson, a Conservative member, was under debate in the House yesterday. It wound up with the resolution being unanimously carried. T. C. Norris, Opposition leader, was the principal speaker, devoting his time to twitting the Conservatives on their change of front since the Federal reciprocity campaign. A resolution by Mr. Norris that the resolution be redrafted to include free entrance into the United States of oats, barley, flax, and the entrance into Canada of agricultural implements duty free was ruled out of order.

Mr. Simpson's resolution memorialized the Dominion Government to remove the countervailing duty on Canadian wheat, in order that the farmers of the Canadian west might be able to take advantage of the wheat clause of the new Underwood tariff in the United States.

Berlin's Furniture Show.

BERLIN, Ont., Jan. 13.—The third annual exhibition of furniture men of Berlin and Waterloo opened yesterday. There are twenty-eight exhibitors, a number of whom are showing in the old W. G. & R. factory building on Queen street, while others are using their own show rooms at their factories. The exhibition continues for the week, with a banquet on Thursday night.

Former Creemore Man Kills Himself.

TOFIELD, Alta., Jan. 13.—Albert Trent, rancher, living ten miles north of here, killed himself yesterday in the granary on his farm, blowing off the top of his head with a shotgun. He came up here from Creemore, Ont., last spring and occupied his brother's ranch until a couple of months ago, when he purchased a farm. He leaves a widow and one son.

Academy of International Law.

THE HAGUE, Jan. 13.—An academy of international law is to be established here in connection with the peace organizations. Negotiations to this end have been in progress for several days with various committees of the peace associations, including the Carnegie Peace Endowment, and these were successfully concluded yesterday.

Would Abolish Hanging.

OTTAWA, Jan. 13.—Robert Bickerdike, M.P., Montreal, has given notice that he will move at the forthcoming session to abolish capital punishment, and J. H. Burnham, M.P., of Peterboro, will reintroduce his bill to abolish honorary titles in Canada now granted on recommendation of the Governor-General-in-Council.

A woman doesn't always better her mind by changing it.

BISHOP HURRIES HOME.

Will Charge His African Colleagues With Heretical Practices.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—Interest in the Kikuyu controversy continues unabated, and while the Archbishop of Canterbury's letter, published in The London Times last Saturday, had the effect of allaying the bitter feeling and stemming the tide of letters to the newspapers, the opinion is general that the adherents of the High Church party and the evangelical school are merely having a brief armistice, and that hostilities will be resumed with increased violence when the Bishop of Zanzibar arrives in London to make formal charges of heresy against the Bishops of Uganda and Mombasa. The Bishop of Uganda has already reached London but is maintaining a discreet silence.

The cloud of issues raised has so obscured the original issue that for an intelligent insight into the present crisis it is necessary to return to the genesis of the controversy, which is found in the Bishop of Zanzibar's open letter to the Bishop of St. Alban's charging the Bishops of Uganda and Mombasa with "heresy in their teaching of the meaning and value of episcopacy."

A canon of Worcester sums up the real question at immediate issue as follows:

"The crux of the whole question seems to me to be not the matter of sentiment of whether or not the English Church can regard the religious efforts of the various dissenting bodies with a friendly eye, but whether the English Church can formally cooperate with non-Episcopal bodies in fact, what is now the law of the Church of England guiding the actions of her ministers."

FELT 350 EARTHQUAKES.

Japanese Town Has a Surfeit of Small Shocks.

TOKIO, Japan, Jan. 13.—A series of 350 slight earthquakes shook the town of Kagoshima, at the southern end of the island of Kinshiu, yesterday, and were followed by the eruption of a volcano on Sakura, a small island in the Gulf of Kagoshima, where two villages were buried in ashes.

The earthquakes continue incessantly, and the work of rescuing the inhabitants of Sakura by boats, which have proceeded there across the intervening three miles of water from Kagoshima, is extremely difficult.

Ashes have fallen all day in Kagoshima itself, and telegraphic communication with the capital is interrupted.

Beat Down Guards.

BRIDGETON, N.J., Jan. 13.—Two prisoners, known in police circles as the "Pink Shirt Twins," sawed and fought their way out of the Cumberland County Jail here early yesterday. They cut away two bars of their cell, and using them as weapons, beat a guard and a "trusty" into unconsciousness. They then bound and gagged them and walked out of the jail.

The escaped prisoners are Harry Jordan and Edward Hailight. They were recently parolled from the penitentiary in Philadelphia and were arrested here several months ago charged with burglary.

Breaking Up the Gangsters.

NEW YORK, Jan. 13. — Thirty members of East Side gangs yesterday began serving five-day workhouse sentences, and "Dopey Benny" Fein, leader of a band that bears his name, and three of his lieutenants, are being held without bail on a direct charge of homicide in connection with the murder on Friday night of Frederick Straus, a prominent German politician. A bullet fired by members of Fein's gang at an enemy struck Straus as he was passing a hall where the gangsters and their friends were holding a dance.

A good quality of beef was offered. Butchers' bulls were slightly easier on large receipts. Other prices held steady. A large shipment of western hogs, consisting of 3 car loads, was received, and tended to keep the live pork prices down. Prices for selects eased off 25c, as the shipment of western selected hogs sold lower by that margin.

Sheep were offered freely and the price was easy. The undertone to the market for lambs was also easy and demand light. Prices ranged between 4⅝c to 7½c per pound. A fair demand for calves held prices very steady. Quotations:

The other morning coming down stairs, about getting-up time, the Whetung girls with much astonishment, found that a fire had already been built in the kitchen stove, something new in their recollection. Young Dan, prompted by some motive, had managed for the first time in a "dog's age" to crawl out of bed, came down stairs and built a roaring fire before anyone else was out of bed. It is evident that Dan has turned a new leaf with the new year.

A Liar or A Lunatic

By F. A. MITCHEL

A party of young men were sitting around a table in the cafe of a New York club. The subject turned on the marvelous feats that are said to be performed by the fakirs of India. A number of these feats were described, each one more wonderful than the last, when Ned Garland told the following:

"You've hit on a subject that comes very near home to me," he said, "for one of my family was operated on by one of these Indians many years ago with a result that has recently made my hair curl.

"During the last war with England—in 1814 or thereabouts—my ancestors lived on the family estate or farm, for that's all it was, not half a mile from where we are now sitting. One day my great grandfather, Timothy Garland, a young bridegroom, had a quarrel with his wife and told her he wished he might not see her again in a hundred years. Then he left the house with a bang of the door and, mounting a horse, rode down to Fraunces' tavern, where he proceeded to get gloriously drunk.

"The next day, when he was sober, he was beside himself with remorse and rode back home to beg his wife's pardon. He found her lying in a comatose condition, from which it was impossible to arouse her. She had left with the servants a paper for him on which was written:

"You have wished you might not see me again in a hundred years. You won't see me as I was till that time has passed.

"The upshot of it was that when he had gone down to the tavern one of these Indian heathens came along, offering to tell my great-grandmother's fortune and do many wonderful things. She was full of anger at the time and told him she would give him all the gold she had in a stocking if he would put her to sleep for a hundred years. The rascal took her at her word and performed the trick.

"Her husband kept watching for her to come to herself. He said nothing about her condition, not caring to have it known that it was through his harshness that she had come into it. But she remained as she was, and after awhile he locked her up in a room, and since he made no mention of her she was at last forgotten.

"When the farm was sold the family vault was retained and the ground underneath which it was excavated descended to me. When I came of age a few weeks ago and took possession of it with other property I concluded to inspect it. I found a grewsome place full of coffins, some of which had partly rotted away. One that had been made of marble interested me. From a crack in the lid protruded a paper. I pulled it out and found that it had been written in a language I knew nothing about.

"I took the thing to a professor of unknown tongues in Columbia college, and he told me it was written in one of the languages of India and I had to get an Indian of that province to interpret it. I hunted all over the east side among the slums for such a person and at last found one. It read in English:

"This lady is to be brought to life at the expiration of a hundred years, or in November, 1913.

"I was told by the translator that only an Indian fakir could do the job, but luckily one had just arrived from Bombay, and I was informed where he was to be found. He read the paper and said he would try to bring my great-grandmother to life if I would pay him $100 in case he succeeded. I agreed to the terms, had the sarcophagus removed to the top floor of a building I owned, paid in advance, and the Indian went to work.

"He wouldn't permit me to be present during his manipulations, but called me in after six hours. On a lounge was a woman about twenty-three years of age. She seemed only half alive, but was sufficiently resuscitated to speak feebly.

"'Jim,' she said, 'how could you?'

"'I'm not Jim,' I said. 'I'm Ned.'

"'Oh, dear! What's the matter with you, or is anything the matter with me? I feel so weak.'

"She had evidently taken me for her husband, my great-grandfather, who was just my age in 1813.

"I looked about for the Indian, and he had gone. It struck me that I'd better have some one about, and I said to my great-grandmother:

"'Please excuse me a moment. You are not well and need attention. I am going to summon assistance.'

"Do you know that while I was looking at her, even during this short time, she seemed to have grown older. Without waiting for her consent I ran downstairs, but as I went it occurred to me that I had better not be in a hurry about the matter; there were many dangers connected with it. I paused, pondered and went back to the room. I suppose I had been gone twenty minutes. And yet while I had been absent the resuscitated bride of twenty-three had grown to be an old woman of 123. And as I looked she gave a gasp and within a minute had become a shriveled mummy."

There was a brief silence, which was broken by one of the party, who said:

"Ned Garland, you are the biggest liar that ever entered this club or ever will enter it."

"That's why I didn't summon assistance. I knew I'd be put down either for a liar or a lunatic. Waiter, take the orders!"

SHETLAND PONIES.

Canadians Largely Importing Products of Little Islands.

The best and most aristocratic families in Canada have suddenly revived the old-fashion of training their children on Shetland ponies. The shipment of these sturdy little animals for Canada is going up by leaps and bounds.

The Shetland islands themselves are composed of some 40 small islands, and three or four large ones lying north of Scotland.

Opposite Lerwich, the capital of the islands, lies Bressay, one of the larger islands, and the centre of the pony-breeding industry. Here they are reared and many eventually exported to Canada and to Scotland, England, and other countries as required. A small, pure-bred specimen is somewhat valuable, fetching at the farm $200 or $250. Larger ones are less costly and only make about $25.

These animals are usually dark brown, shaggy little beasts with long black manes. Their temper is by some called playful, but vindictive would be more applicable. They are owned by nearly everyone on the island, and act as draught horses, being particularly strong. As a rule they are unshod.

They roam about the hillsides quite uncared for and seemingly wild.

The peasant population of the islands is extremely interesting. The male portion is mostly devoted to fishing and pony rearing. The female element stays at home, cures the fish, and, when that is done, carries peat, which is the only fuel used, in "creels," slung on the back. Whilst walking outside the town you see a regular procession of women coming and going, somewhat like ants moving their eggs.

They are all knitting as hard as they can, never looking at their work. The finished portion of the shawl is wound round their waist, leaving just enough free to work with. These are eventually taken to the stores and exchanged for the necessities of life. Barter is the usual mode of business among the poorer class. These people wear an extraordinary kind of shoe which they call "rivelins." It is made from a piece of untanned cowhide, the hairy side being outermost.

There is one distinctive peculiarity of all these islands, and that is, that there are absolutely no trees of any description growing. The inhabitants aver that they would spoil the view.

Besides Lerwick, the capital, there is only one other town of any size, that being Scalloway. It is seven miles from Lerwick across the peninsula and close to the harbor town of Tingwall, the old capital of the islands. It boasts a castle, which was built in 1640 and inhabited by Patrick Stewart, then governor of the islands. He was a particularly brutal and inhuman man, for there still remains a ring on one of the walls, through which a rope was run, to which he hanged a great number of the inhabitants for very trivial offences, or none at all sometimes, so the legend goes, other than refusing to pay him unlawful tribute. These executions were of daily occurrence and matters came to such a pitch that petitions were sent to Parliament, which caused him to be called to Edinburgh, where an inquiry was held. He was ultimately hanged.

His memory was so odious that the people destroyed the castle, and now all that remains are the four walls and the keep.

Bridegrooms Do the Weeping.

An Australian traveler, who has returned from a trip round the Torres Straits archipelago, found it was the correct thing for bridegrooms among the Christianized natives of Badu, Mulgrave Island, to weep at the altar.

"An indispensable condition for a wedding," Mr. Walker states, "is that the bridegroom must cry when the knot is tied. The tears flow copiously—quite a shower of them.

"It is extraordinary how the natives can produce tears just whenever they are wanted. The bride does not weep. She is full of mirth. It is her day out! Everybody grips her by the hand and says nice things, while her tear-stained partner stands apart, a picture of abject misery."

The natives of Badu, who earn their living by fishing for pearls, though nominally Christian are still immersed in superstition. Mr. Walker found them burying with their dead large quantities of food and drink, so that the spirits shall not be hungry in the next world.

Labby's Stratagem.

When the late Henry Labouchere was a diplomatic attache at St. Petersburg he got at the secrets of the Russian Government in an amusing manner.

His laundress was a handsome woman, and having made friends with her on other than professional grounds, she happened to mention that her husband was a compositor in the Government printing office. The minutes of the Cabinet Councils were printed in French, of which the printers, of course, understood nothing. Labouchere persuaded her, for a consideration, to obtain from her husband the loose sheets from which the minutes had been printed. They were brought to him by the faithful woman every week concealed among his starched shirts and collars.

St. Helena Home Neglected.

Napoleon's last home on the island of St. Helena is in a deplorable condition. The doors are open night and day. All the rooms are empty, save the one in which the exiled emperor breathed his last. This contains a small altar and a bust of the conqueror of Europe. The historic house is going to rack and ruin. Longwood and the surrounding grounds, including the first tomb of Napoleon, were purchased from the British Government by Napoleon III. in 1858. The French Government still pays a caretaker, but no funds for upkeep are provided.

None are so blind as those who are looking for trouble.

Caught by His White Hair

By MARTHA EVERSHAM

When I was a girl of seventeen I was far older than my years. Young fellows of my own age seemed to me what they really were—beardless boys. They were full of sports and nonsense, whereas I was philosophically inclined. I loved to talk with men who knew a great deal more than I did—men who could talk learnedly on a variety of subjects. Thus I was thrown in with those who were usually double my age.

But my intimacy with such persons was entirely intellectual. Nothing akin to love was excited by any of them. Indeed, many of them had passed middle age and were incapable of sympathizing with a girl in her teens. While it was true that I had intellectual cravings, it was also true that I was still a young girl. There were times when I wished for companionship with young persons. But I was rather inclined to be young with them than that they—I refer to the men—should be young with me. What I mean is that there is a certain dignity in a young man that a girl looks for in one whom she would consider seriously as a possible life companion.

When I was nineteen my father decided that I should finish my education by a trip abroad. We sailed one February morning for Naples, intending to work our way northward with the opening spring, spending the hot summer months in Switzerland. On reaching Naples, when we were going ashore in the ship's tender, I noticed a young man whose hair had evidently turned prematurely gray. Never have I seen so striking a contrast between a young face and white hair. He appeared to be recovering from an illness. He sat opposite me in the boat, and for the life of me I could not keep my eyes off his contrasting features. He knew that I was looking at him, and this fixed his attention upon me.

We drove from the custom house to the hotel, our party of three in an open cab loaded down with hand baggage. On the way we passed another cab containing the white haired young man. Again we exchanged glances as he drove by us, and when we brought up at the hotel entrance he was getting out of his cab to enter the house. I confess I was secretly pleased that we would be at the same abiding place.

That very evening an acquaintance of my father introduced the young man to us as George Caruthers, telling us that he had been ill and was traveling for his health. The introducer would be grateful for any attention we might show his friend. Mother sympathized with Mr. Caruthers, a stranger in a strange land and not strong. She made quite a pet of him, and before we left Naples, he having no definite plans, she invited him to travel with us.

A party traveling for pleasure becomes intimate at once. In these days of form the only way of making new old friends, if I may be allowed the expression, is travel in company with others. I was during a sojourn in the principal Italian cities from Naples to Milan and on the railways connecting them a constant companion of George Caruthers. It seemed to me that there was as great a contrast in his disposition as there was in his outward features. He had the quiet dignity, the depth of understanding of a man and the freshness of youth. These accorded admirably with his appearance. He had, too, a way of falling in with my moods. When I wished him serious he was serious; when I preferred that he should be youthful he was youthful.

These persons with young faces and white hair are very deceptive as to their age. I angled with Mr. Caruthers to draw from him his age. I elicited certain bits of information from him with the intention of putting them together and thus deducing how old he was. But he soon divined my intention and gave his answer in a way to defeat my purpose. Then he would laugh at me for my failure.

We reached northern Italy in a couple of months, and by this time my newly made friend had quite recovered his strength. His complexion was naturally florid, and the contrast between his face and his hair under his improved condition was the greater. He was always close shaven, but I could see that his beard did not partake of the color of his hair. But even this was difficult to determine, for his beard was evidently meager and of a light hue.

It is well nigh impossible for a young man to travel in company with a young girl without an affair of the heart, and our case was no exception. George Caruthers proposed to me on Lake Leman just before we reached Geneva. In reply I told him that I had but one objection to him—that which was now an attraction would one day be a detriment. When he began to grow old he would look far older than he was on account of his white hair. He took off his hat with one hand and with the other pulled off his scalp and an overlay of white hair, displaying a head of short, thick blond hair beneath.

"A wig!" I exclaimed.

"A wig," he replied. "After leaving America, in consequence of fever, my hair began to come out, and before reaching Naples it was nearly all gone. The only wig I could get on the ship was this one, and since knowing you and being with you constantly I have not liked to change it."

Singular that I should have been caught by a wig, isn't it?

JUVENILE HIGH FINANCE.

Give Him Half a Chance and This Chap Will Own the World.

A pupil in one of the well known boys' schools, being short of pocket money, conceived a means of replenishing his funds by the following plan:

He wrote to a jewelry house in New York, where he had an established credit, asking that a silver cigarette case selling at $25 be sent to him on approval. Upon its receipt he arranged a lottery among his chums at the school and offered for sale 100 chances at 25 cents each. He sold all the chances for a total of $25.

The boy who held the successful number that won the silver case happened to be one who did not use cigarettes, and therefore the manager of the affair offered to buy the case for $5. The winner accepted the offer, as he thereby made a profit of $4.75 cash instead of having an article of no use to him, whereas the promoter of the deal had $20 left.

The promoter now returned the cigarette case to the jeweler and asked that it be credited to his account. This being a frequent occurrence, nothing was thought of the return of the article.

By this scheme the pockets of the young promoter were replenished by $20, the other boys had enjoyed their little game of chance and were perfectly satisfied with the operation, and the business house was likewise satisfied. Yet some people who have heard of the transaction are asking, "Is the young financier open to any criticism for his methods?"—New York Sun.

THE CULINARY ARTIST.

He First Brought Joy and Then Sorrow to His Employers.

Even subalterns sometimes seek in the joys of the palate compensations for deprivations on other fields. Thus on one occasion the chef of a restaurant car, finding himself, for some reason or other, stranded at an unlikely spot in India, offered his services to the officers of an isolated troop of English soldiers, who gladly seized the unlooked for chance. He asked high wages, but by clubbing together they managed to raise them. "Hang it all, if we can't have good theaters and good shops, let us at least have good food!" was the idea on which they acted.

For a time all went well, since the day contained at least one bright spot. But soon inconveniences set in. Reports of the Lucullian meals to be enjoyed at —— began to spread, and simultaneously the number of inspections to increase alarmingly. High officers of all grades became suddenly seized with a burning zeal for the military progress of this particular troop and spent hours trotting it out in the morning and further hours administering judicious criticism over an excellent and prolonged dinner. Soon in their hearts the subalterns were cursing the day on which they had set eyes on the restaurant car chef, uncomforted by the magnificent tips which flowed not into their pockets but into that of the culinary artist. Presently they agreed that even good food can be purchased too dearly and quietly got rid of their paragon.—Cornhill Magazine.

TIPPING THE WAITER.

Come to Think of It, It Does Win One a Lot of Special Favors.

A New York hotel manager is reported as saying that "a tip is nothing else than a reward for special consideration. The question will never be solved as long as any man who asks for special service is in the habit of giving a reward for it."

An eminently sane proposition, says the New York Evening Post. See, for instance, what special service and special consideration the citizen of New York obtains by tipping the waiter. When the customer sits down the waiter refrains from whisking the chair out from under the customer and letting him fall to the floor, as the waiter might very easily do. When he brings in the soup he brings it in a plate instead of a bottle. Who would grudge a small tip for being spared the humiliation of pouring soup out of a bottle? And in so many other ways, which the reader can enumerate for himself, the waiter puts himself out to make the diner comfortable. He refrains from sprinkling sugar over the roast beef and putting olive oil into the ice cream. Between courses he does not sit down to his own meal. If the diner happens to be in the company of a lady the waiter will abstain from disparaging remarks about her complexion. As for the coatroom boy, who is to prevent him from playing foot ball with your hat, except the special consideration due a distributer of tips?

Queer Prisoners.

In the seventies of the last century life in Montenegro was not complex. A traveler relates: "At that time the adult male population was away fighting, and at times there was no one to spare to guard the inmates of the prison when out for exercise. One of them would then be given the rifle and take over the duty. Prisoners also were sent with messages. One went down to Cattaro, in Austrian territory, with 3,000 florins for the banker there, and faithfully delivered the money and was back in prison at night. Another Montenegrin begged a Russian in Cattaro to intercede for his release from prison. "But you are not in prison," said the Russian. "Oh, yes, I am. I have only come here for a load of skins and must go back."

Writing Music.

There is reason to regard the Hindus and the Chinese as in possession of some form of musical notation. The Greeks had a system of writing music, but its comprehension evades us. The Latin notation was, like that of the Greeks in this one particular, alphabetic. A generally accepted tradition credits St. Gregory with the reduction of the scale to the octave and the naming of the seven notes, a service which has commonly won for him the credit of the invention of the art of writing music.—New York Sun.

Improving the Backbone.

Although the following sounds like an Irish pun, it is credited to an American clergyman:

"Patriotism is the backbone of the United States," quoth the minister.

His congregation nodded a silent approval.

"And what we have to do is to train that backbone and bring it to the front."—Boston Herald.

Smart Dog.

"Which is the smarter, the dog or the horse?"

"No comparison. The dog is the wise one."

"How do you make that out?"

"You know how the horse works. Did you ever see a dog working for a living?"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Peer's Son Wants Work.

It may be that the activities of Lloyd George are responsible for conditions which led to the insertion of the following advertisement in one of the London morning papers recently: Peer's son desires employment; private secretarial experience, including two ex-Cabinet Ministers; fair knowledge of French, can drive motor.

The spectacle of a peer's son advertising for real work like an ordinary man does not seem to worry the chancellor.

ADVERTISING

A STORE'S importance is rightly judged by its advertising. Not altogether by the size of the advertisement, but by size and tone, and quality of announcement.

What the store has to say is one thing. Quite as important is how it says it.

Given that the clerical force is competent and up-to-date, it will say, over the counter, the very best to be said in reference to the goods enquired for. It may, and should, suggest other goods, not in the customers view.

This implies that the customer is in the store. But what brings him or her there? The wish to buy and the belief it is a good place to buy at.

How is this learned of?

By advertising. The advertisement is a message, an intelligent middleman, doing service between seller and buyer. The space talks to thousands, even while the store is closed for the night.

Use The REVIEW and tell the story of your store and its opportunities for good service.

BANKER PONIES.

Wild Horses That Trap Fish and Then Eat Them.

ong Albemarle sound, on the North olina coast, there is mile after mile ow, sandy shore, where nothing ws except a coarse grass, a few water weeds and wild parsley. these banks lives a strange breed alf wild horses, known as "banker ies." THE WARBLER FAMILY.

There Are Thirty-Three Kinds Found In Ontario.

The Sylvicolidae, or Warblers, are a very wide family connection—embracing in all thirty-three varieties of birds which honor Ontario with their prized presence, some, it is true, in such very limited numbers as to be comparative rarities, says C. M. C. in Toronto Star Weekly. There is a prevailing strain of brilliant coloring running through them: their beauty, indeed, is more a prominent feature, as usual, than any proficiency in a melodic sense. In fact, a college professor, hard pu. for a joke, well might state the breed to be so-called, because they do not "warble." The blue yellow-backed warblers utter but a soft, drawn-out twitter; the mourning warbler nothing further than a low, pensive, simple "twit"—their only songs. The Blackburnian variety — the most beautiful of the whole family — breeds in Northern Ontario, so that, except on its passage north and south, we see too little of it; unless in too great a haste it is its habit to stop off for a week or so each October's end.

Speaking generally, the warblers may be said to nest on low bushes, although a few, like the Pine-creeping and Golden-crowned thrush species, resort to ground-nesting to rear their brood. Their little cousins—sometimes known as the Canadian Fly-catchers (Myiodioctes Canadensis) — utillilize both situations indifferently. The Yellow warblers — so commonly observed about civilized haunts and prized for their assiduity in ridding the fruit trees of small insects—have a peculiarity of not being able to forego building in a willow or a maple, if they can find one situated adjacent to an orchard. The entire Warbler family has the distinction — also value — of feeding alone upon insects.

After the Yellow Warbler — whose name sufficiently describes him—the commonest of the warblers are, perhaps, the Red-start, the Golden-Crowned Thrush, and the Water Thrush or Wagtail. The first is five and a quarter inches long; black, if one is asked to describe him; but the white breast and the ruddy orange tint of the sides of the breast and base of the quills and tail make him one of the prettiest birds of our woods. The last-named is olive-brown above, of a prevailing sulphur-yellow below, and is generally to be found near a stream or pond, wading in the shallows, diligently "wagging" his tail with the relish his feed of aquatic insects imparts.

From his appearance the Water-thrush has been sometimes confused with the Golden-crowned Thrush, but the latter never nests or feeds near the swamps and moist ground. Above he is olive-green with a tinge of yellow; his crown has two streaks of black enclosing a broad orange stripe, beneath, his plumage is white, while his breast and sides are sooty black—also a truly beautiful summer resident, one can see. If she can, this pretty creature prefers a pine-wood for the scene of her nuptials. Suppose the five young to have saf y chipped themselves out from the creamy-white eggs that you knew were hatching, although not wishful to disturb. The ground-nesters have so many enemies that it seems a wonder their kind does not become extinct—till you remember how mother nature, with an eye to that very chance, gives for each of such birds the right hues of plumage to protect it, as well as by directing its instincts so that these dang s may be minimized.

What the golden-crowned thrush mostly hunts for is a nesting site on a knoll, irrespective of direction, where she can cunningly thatch her nest with the needles, so like the ground around. Which explains why she is far better known to most people as the "oven-bird"—Seiurus aurocapillus.

"What Neck'st?"

W. F. Stevens, the robust Live Stock Commissioner for Alberta, is widely known for his geniality, a quality which seems to accompany stoutness of person. He was in Winnipeg one hot July day and had occasion to buy a new collar. Entering a gent's furnishing store on Portage Avenue he startled the obligi g young clerk by asking for a collar, size 22.

"Sorry, sir," the boy replied politely, "but we are just out of that size. There is a store, however, just around the corner that could probably supply you."

Imagine the feelings of the live stock authority when he rounded the corner and read the following sign:

"Northwest Harness Co., Ltd. Use 'Fit-Well' Collars on your Horses."

The Heckler Silenced.

Ready wit is an indispensable requisite to a good political speaker. In a recent election in British Columbia a well-known coast orator, now a member of Premier McBride's Cabinet, found this to be true, especially in addressing rural folk. The incident occurred during a joint meeting, held in a constituency where fishing is the principal industry, and at a time when the Oriental labor question was a burning issue on the coast.

"We must curtail this invasion of undesirables!" he declared in the course of a splendid speech. What—"

"Pardon me, sir," interrupted his opponent, a young Vancouver lawyer with political ambitions; "but are not these 'undesirables' human beings, strong, and willing to work?"

"Very true, my dear friend," was the quick reply. "They are as strong as oxen and have no more sense."

Fort Pelly To Be Preserved.

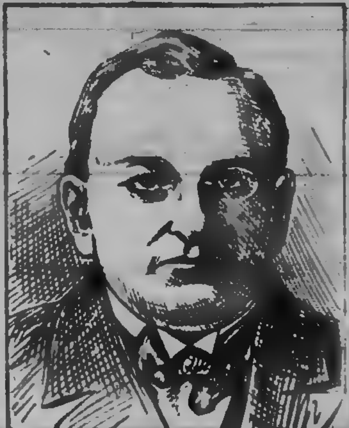
AN EXPONENT OF LOANS

ALD. J. S. WOODWARD'S IDEA FINDS FAVOR IN WEST.

Prince Albert City Father, Who Is Known Far and Wide as "Woody," Has Been Carrying on a Campaign for a Local Government Board and Scheme is Being Taken Up in Alberta.

Much is heard just now about the movement in Canada, especially in the West, for the organization of a central provincial authority for the supervision of municipal loans. There seems to be in Saskatchewan a fairly unanimous feeling in favor of the scheme. The father of the campaign, so far as Saskatchewan is concerned, is Ald. J. S. Woodward, familiarly known throughout the West and to a good many people in the East as "Woody." Mr. Woodward is an Englishman, who didn't find England big enough. He is a big built, broad shouldered man of about thirty-five. Much of Prince Albert's development is due to him, and of course in developing the city Ald. Woodward has developed his own business For he has discovered the magic in the words real estate, and having discovered it, is making good use of it.



ALD. J. S. WOODWARD.

His campaign for a local government board for Saskatchewan has spread to the neighboring province and is meeting with great favor because the discussion regarding a provincial supervision of securities arises from the desire of Canadian municipalities to borrow cheaply in the London market.

New Zealand's Industry.

A curious and at one time extremely profitable and important industry in New Zealand is that of Kauri gum digging. Kauri gum, which is the fossilized resin of the kauri pine, is found only in the extreme north of the North Island, and for the manufacture of high-class varnish has no equal, with the exception perhaps of Zanzibar gum, which is, however, much dearer.

It forms one of the greatest assets of the Aukland Province. The equipment of the digger consists of a thin, long spear, one or two heavy spades, and a scraping knife. The gum is usually found on poor land, and the theory is that the giant trees that yielded it have so exhausted the land that now nothing but tea-tree, or "manuka," as it is called in the Dominion, will grow on it.

Until about twenty-five years ago the gum was entirely produced by British labor, and to some small extent by Maoris. Then a number of Austrians made their appearance, and are now there in such numbers that it is safe to say 75 per cent. of all the gum produced is the result of their labors. A new batch of Austrians has recently arrived from the Continent.

Weathermen Shocked.

The weather sharps of the world are all upset over a storm that swept over the Island of Reunion in March, which violated the Indian Ocean storm regulations.

The cyclones have been watched for fifteen years and have always been perfectly reliable. They form south of the equator, travel southwest until off the coast of Madagascar, and then turn southeast. They are in the form of gigantic whirlwinds, with a spot of dead calm in the centre.

But this particular insurgent storm upset all theories by appearing to the southeast of Reunion, going northwest over that island and then passing off toward the northeast—going directly opposite to regulations.

Meteorologists wouldn't have been any more shocked and pained if the sun had taken a notion to rise in the west.

Hasty Wedding Service.

A young couple who arrived at Berwick on a recent Sunday were married after the Scottish fashion in a delightfully simple way. They drove over the border into Scotland, and, stopping at a spot where two men were seated, the young man said that he and the lady wished to be married, and that they could not adopt the conventional method, as it would be stopped directly the banns were put up. The couple then formally took each other for man and wife before the two witnesses, and a document to that effect was produced and signed by the parties and the witnesses.

Too Many Holidays.

There are now 26 days in the year recognized as legitimate occasions for holidays in most cities of England. These are in addition to the weekly half-holidays observed on Wednesdays and Saturdays. An effort is being made to lessen the number of holidays and to bring those retained into more systematic order.

MURDERED BY A MOTH.

A Curious Case and the Evidence Upon Which It Was Decided.

In olden times it was not rare for animals to be accused and convicted of various offenses and given judicial trials, but there is a more recent case recorded, in which a moth was proved to have been a murderer. It was the case of the Princess Caravella, at Naples. After giving a dinner party she proceeded to her room to snatch a few minutes of rest, in order to refresh herself for a dance.

She was discovered lying dead on her bed, with a pistol wound in her heart. Her husband, Prince Caravella, had been noted for his jealous disposition, and as it was certain that no stranger could possibly have been in the princess' room suspicion pointed to him, and he was arrested.

The pistol was found lying near the murdered woman, which in itself was favorable to the prince, for no murderer, unless he courted detection, would thus leave the weapon to be discovered. In spite of this, it was probable that things would have gone hard with the accused but for the shrewdness of a Naples police officer. This man carefully examined the bedchamber, and, lying on the floor by the bedside, he found one of those large moths that abound in Italy. A lighted candle had stood on a table by the bed, and the moth's wings bore evident marks of having been badly singed against the flame.

What was more important still, some of the powdery dust from the moth's wings was found on the trigger of the pistol, and pistol had lain in such a position that it covered the princess' heart. It was clear, argued this astute Sherlock Holmes, that the moth had burned its wings and had fallen on the table where, writhing in agonies, its wings had struck the trigger of the pistol, and the pistol had been thus fired. It was noted that the hair trigger worked with exceptional ease.

It should be remarked that these Italian moths are larger than any with which we are familiar in this country. On this ev 'ence the prince was rightly acquit ed. — Pearson's Weekly.

MAETERLINCK ON SPIRITS.

His Opinion About These Materialized by Mediums.

Maurice Maeterlinck, writing about life after death in the Fortnightly Review, makes these remarks about the so called "spirits" that are materialized by mediums:

"It is a remarkable thing that they appear to be much more interested in events here below than in those of the world wherein they move.

"They seem, above all, jealous in establishing their identity, to prove that they still exist, that they recognize us, that they know everything, and to convince us of this they enter into the most minute and forgotten details with extraordinary precision, perspicacity and prolixity.

"They are also extremely clever at unraveling the intricate family connections of the person actually questioning them, of any of the sitters, or even of a stranger entering the room. They recall this one's little infirmities, that one's maladies, the eccentricities or tendencies of a third.

"They have cognizance of events taking place at a distance, * * * but there comes from it all no breath, no glimmer of the hereafter, not even the something vaguely promised and vaguely waited for.

"We shall be told that the mediums are visited only by inferior spirits, incapable of tearing themselves from earthly cares and soaring toward greater and loftier ideas. It is possible, and no doubt we are wrong to believe that a spirit stripped of its body can suddenly be transformed and reach in a moment the level of our imaginings, but could they not at least inform us where they are and what they feel and what they do?"

Vindicated.

"Gentlemen of the jury," announced the attorney for the defense, "my client is accused of operating a speak-easy. I will have the defendant take the stand."

"Mr. Whistler, are you the defendant in this case?"

"Y-y-y-yes, s-s-sir."

"Will you pronounce your name for the jury?"

"T-t-t-tom-tom-tomas Wh-wh-wh-isslesler."

And without leaving the box the jury returned a verdict of not guilty.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Hard to Decide.

Smithers—I am going to have my picture taken. A good deal depends upon the pose, don't you know. Now, what kind of a position do you think would be the best for me? Browning—Well, I don't know. I was going to say with your back to the camera, but then your hair is rather thin behind.—Boston Transcript.

Made It Clear.

"My second husband is no more like my first one was than day is like night."

"But remember that you should never speak ill of the dead."

"Oh, I had no intention of doing that. On the contrary." — Houston Post.

Futile Cleverness.

"The cleverest men," says an eminent Englishman, "are more clever than the cleverest women."

This may be true. But what does their cleverness avail them when clever women wish to make fools of them? —Chicago Record-Herald.

EARLY CIVIC SYSTEMS

HOW CANADIAN TOWNS WERE GOVERNED UNDER FRENCH.

At First Champlain Was Governor and Mayor and Everything, But Later on the Intendant Took the Reins of Power and Administered Municipal Affairs — Many of the Ancient Ordinances Remain.

The opening chapter of the story of municipal government in Canada, while particularly important now because of the entire change that has taken place both in the theory and the practice of government, is exceedingly interesting, for it presents a side of life seldom touched upon by the writers of popular history, and gives one an unusual view of the times of long ago.

Samuel de Champlain, the founder of Quebec, and first real Governor of Canada, undertook the discharge of duties that would now be performed by the municipal authorities. He laid out streets and published ordinances for the good government of the city. His successor, Montmagny, continued the work by laying out streets according to a plan, and he erected a pillory which served as a means of punishment and a place for the publication of proclamations and public notices.

As time passed and the colony grew, something like municipal institutions grew up, and their nature can best be indicated in brief form by an account of the duties of the principal officers, who carried on what may be called municipal government.

At the head of the system was a high official appointed by the King of France, and known as the Intendant. He ranked next to the Governor, and with respect to some matters his commission was so general that he claimed powers equal to those of the Governor, an arrangement that often caused friction between the two officials. In his highest capacity the Intendant was an officer of the whole colony. He controlled all expenditure of money and he presided over the Sovereign Council. He also possessed the power of independent legislation as well as certain judicial power.

"A great number of ordinances of Intendants," writes the historian Parkman, "are preserved. They were usually read to the people at the door of churches after mass, or sometimes by the cure from his pulpit. They related to a great variety of subjects —regulation of inns and markets, poaching, preservation of game, sale of brandy, rent of pews, stray hogs, mad dogs, tithes, matrimonial quarrels, fast driving, weights, value of coinage, trespass on land, building churches, observance of Sunday, preservation of timber. The Intendant issued regulations to safeguard against fire, and others specifying in what manner houses were to be built. These are matters that to-day are regulated by municipal councils.

Another official was the Syndic d'Habitation. This official was well-known in France, where he represented popular rights before the administrative tribunals. Records show that such Syndics were elected in Quebec, Three Rivers, and Montreal, where they were entrusted with certain local authority and represented the community in its dealings with the Government. This did not please the King's Colonial Minister, Colbert, who instructed Frontenac to gradually suppress the office.

At Montreal, the office seems to have been one of importance. There the Syndic administered the affairs of the town, subject, however, to the approval of the local judge and the Procureur Fiscal. The Montreal Syndic also levied taxes for the support of the garrison.

Another high municipal official of the old Regime was the Grand Voyer, "an officer," says Parkman, "charged with the superintendence of highways." If the Grand Voyer reported that a new road was wanted or that an old one needed mending, an ordinance of the Intendant set the whole neighborhood at work upon it directed by the captain of the militia of the neighborhood. The Grand Voyer was the road surveyor, and all roadwork was done under his supervision.

The Captain of Militia, a constable and local head of the men available for fighting, was also deputy of the Grand Voyer. The captain personally directed the roadwork of his locality, and saw that each parishioner performed his due share, which was determined by the extent of his farm. The Grand Voyer decided upon the extent of the work, and he also laid out streets in towns and villages, and inspected buildings in order to see that they were safe. The office of Grand Voyer existed long after the colony had passed to the British crown; and in the years 1777, 1778 and 1796 the law respecting work upon the roads referred certain duties to an officer styled the Grand Voyer, and the name was in use many years later.

In those olden times the seigniors, under a system of customs called "corvee," had the right to call upon the tenants to perform a certain amount of labor for the maintenance of the roads and bridges. The system took deep root, and it received the sanction of the first Parliament of Lower Canada, the purpose being to secure sufficient labor to make possible the improvement of the highways. This act was not repealed until 1854. In a modified form the principle was continued in Lower Canada, now Quebec, and in fact, throughout other provinces, for road-tax continued to be "worked out"; that is, instead of paying it in money the farmers contributed labor—a system that is now being abandoned by progressive communities desirous of improving their highways.

In civil and social matters the head of one of those old-time rural parishes was the seignior, who often administered justice among the people, received their rents, and looked after public affairs, much as did the Syndic in a city or town.

In the social scale the basso may be just as high-toned as the tenor.

SINGULAR DREAMS.

"Poetic" Effusion That Drew Tears of Pathos From the Sleeper.

Lord Roberts records a remarkable dream. In October, 1853, his father, to whom he was acting as aid-de-camp at Peshawar, India, had issued invitations for a dance. Two days before it was to take place he was silent and despondent during breakfast and eventually told his son that he had had an unpleasant dream, which had visited him several times before and had always been followed by the death of a near relation. As the day wore on his depression grew, and he wanted to put off the dance. His son dissuaded him, but that night the dream returned, and the dance was then postponed. "The next morning the post brought news of the sudden death of the half sister at Lahore with whom I had stayed on my way to Peshawar."

Many people have dreamed poetry in their sleep. The London Chronicle tells of one man who awoke from a dream with the tears streaming down his face at the pathos of the following lines:

Walker with three eyes,
Walker with two,
Something to think of,
Something to do

But the limit of absurdity in this curious art was achieved by the woman who composed a whole epic in her sleep. On awaking she found that she could remember only the concluding couplet:

Admiral Kiakums and his seven daughters
Flung in a bark suspended o'er the waters.

Pepys on May Dew.

In Pepys' time May dew—that is, dew gathered from the grass on a May morning, and especially on the morning of May day—was highly prized for bleaching linen and improving the complexion. Pepys wrote in 1667: "My wife away down with Jane and W Hewer to Woolwich in order to lie there tonight and so to gather May dew tomorrow morning, which Mrs. Turner hath taught her is the only thing in the world to wash her face with, and I am contented with it." Two years later he made this entry in his diary: "Troubled, about 3 in the morning, with my wife's calling her maid up and, rising herself, to go with her coach abroad to gather May dew, which she did, and I troubled for it for fear of any hurt going abroad so betimes happening to her, but I to sleep again. She came home about 6."

What Ailed Him.

"They tell me you've lost your hired man."

"Yep, best farm hand I ever had."

"Sho! What was the matter?"

"Nothin'. John's a German, you know, and these here Germans hev what they call the wanderlust. It's somethin' thet keeps 'em movin' from one place to t'other and don't let 'em stay long anywheres."

"That's queer, ain't it? How long had John been with you?"

"Only eleven years." — Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Nothing but Fun.

"How's your wife these days?"

"Well, she has found a soap that makes washing a pleasure, a machine that makes sewing delightful and a contraption that makes sweeping a dream of bliss. She ought to find life one continuous round of joy."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Pa Knew.

"Pa, what's an agnostic?"

"It's one of those poems where the first letters of the lines spell out a word. Now run along and let me read."—Boston Transcript.

PARTICIPATING vs. NON-PARTICIPATING Life Assurance

Fifteen years ago a prominent merchant on George Street took out a 10 pay 15 year endowment policy of $2000 on his life at age 45 in the Sun Life of Canada, premium $189.50.

Had this man taken a non-par policy his premium would have been $172.50 or $17.00 per year less.

PARTICIPATING RESULTS.		NON-PAR RESULTS.
$2637.75	Total cash 1st Dec. last	$2000.00
1895.00	Total prems. paid	1725.00
742.75	Amount received over that pd. in	275.00
Almost 10 p.c.	Percentage returned over prem paid	almost 16 p.c.
1299.70	or, Cash returned and a paid-up Policy of $2000	661.25

Now, this man paid $17.00 per year for 10 years only, or $170.00 all told and it yielded him $637.75 in profits. Just figure out what rate of interest that is on the $17.00 per year, paid extra for profits, and see if you would not like to invest a few dollars at the same rate. If so, call at or 'phone the Sun Life Office, 402 Water Street.

The above policyholder thinks he had a splendid result. Don't you?

The Agent Of Owl Creek Junction

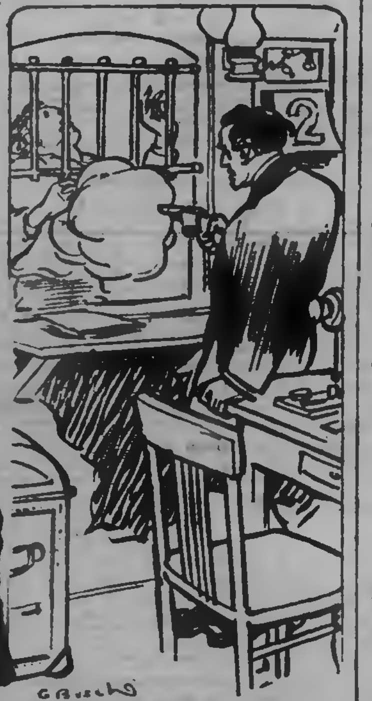
He Made a Success of a Difficult Job

By F. A. MITCHEL

"There's no use, Jim," said Laura Bingham; "we can't get married and live decently on $40 a month, and that's all you get from the railroad and all you're likely to get even if you are promoted. You know yourself that conductors on your road get only $60. We'll have to give it up."

Jim Perkins saw the force of his fiancee's argument. He resolved to apply for a position that would take him away from her.

The terminal of the road was on the Missouri river, and at that time a number of railroads were pushing out into the great American desert. Jim wrote an application for the position of station agent on the frontier. He had no expectation of any notice being taken of his application and intended to leave the service of the road anyway and go west. What was his surprise to receive by return mail an appointment as station agent at Owl Creek junction, a point out on the plains not far from the Rocky mountains. Jim had another surprise. The salary as station agent at Owl Creek junction was laid down as $50 a month, which was a good deal more than he had been getting.



JIM HAD SNATCHED HIS OWN WEAPON.

With a sad heart he started for his new field of labor. On the way he asked about Owl Creek junction and learned that it was looked upon as one of the most promising points on the road. True, at the time the population in the vicinity were a lawless set, such as usually precedes the better class who begin the real development of new countries. But the branching of a great thoroughfare was sure in time to make Owl Creek junction a city.

This welcome encouragement caused hope to arise in the breast of James Perkins. He had $50 that he had saved when he expected to marry Laura Bingham, and he resolved to invest it as soon as he arrived in a town lot. He did not expect to get a lot for so small an amount in the center of the place, but would be satisfied with one on the outskirts.

Hopeful youth—that leads one on through dreams to realities, ending either in success or failure! After all, are not such visions better than pessimism, which undertakes nothing, accomplishes nothing?

The nearer Jim got to Owl Creek junction the more he learned about it. One bucket of cold water after another was dashed over him till he received the bucket itself, which struck him with such force as to stun him. The conductor in charge of the last section of the road gave him a true picture of Owl Creek junction and made it plain to him why he had been appointed agent there.

The nearest house to the junction was a mile. The country round about was infested with jayhawkers and horse thieves. No agent at the railway station had thus far been able to collect money for tickets from 60 per cent of the persons who traveled on the road. They either demanded tickets without pay at the point of the revolver or used the same implement to pass the conductor without paying a fare. But the usual method was to call for a ticket at the station, get their hands on it and walk away, forgetting to leave the cash for it. There had been five agents within six months. Now the last one appointed was eagerly waiting for his successor.

Jim received this terrible backset shortly before the train drew up at Owl Creek junction, and his heart sank down into his boots. When the train stopped at his new home he looked upon as desolate a sight as he had ever seen in his life. There were a station, a water tank, a fuel house and nothing else except an open stretch of country inhabited principally by the prairie dog, the sole vegetable product being the cactus.

As Jim stepped off the train a man came out of the station expectantly. A bandage covered his forehead and his left eye. His arm was in a sling.

"The new agent?" he asked of Jim.

"Yes," replied Jim faintly.

"Well, come in here and I'll turn over the property. This train goes back in half an hour, and I propose to go on her."

"Been hurt?" inquired the new agent.

"Slightly. I was fool enough to try to collect the price of a ticket from a rustler. I advise you not to try it, but if you're bent on doing so you'll find a couple of 42 caliber revolvers in the drawer under the ticket window. The company sent them out for the use of agents who were bent on making collections."

Jim received the contents of the ticket office and receipted for them in time to see his predecessor step on the train happily and pulled away to civilization. The puffing of the locomotive gradually died away in the distance, to be replaced by an absolute silence. Jim would have liked to hear the hoot of even an owl, but there were no trees for an owl to roost in, and he wondered how the creek got its name. He looked for a place in it deep enough to drown himself in, but it did not afford even that.

It was 5 o'clock in the afternoon of the day after Jim Perkins arrived at Owl Creek junction. Jim was sitting at a desk with his hat pulled down over his eyes. He was at the lowest, or, rather, the highest point of desperation. A train was due in ten minutes from one of the branches of the railroad, going eastward. A man with a red face, a stubble beard and one eye stepped up to the ticket window and said:

"Young feller, gimme a ticket to Antelope, and be quick about it."

Jim arose from his chair and stepped to the window. He had laid a cocked revolver beside it where it could not be seen. He took down a ticket from a rack, stamped it and, holding it in his hand, said:

"Three dollars and forty cents, please."

A glare came in the ticket purchaser's eye, and he put his hand to his hip. There was a report, but not from his revolver. Jim had snatched his own weapon, brought it to bear on the purchaser and fired.

When the train reached the station the conductor stepped down on to the platform and went into the station. A man's body was lying on its face below the ticket window.

"What's up?" he asked.

"I've been sent out here," replied Jim, "to sell tickets for money. That man wanted to go to Antelope without paying his fare. He can go free as baggage, I reckon. You'd better help him on to the train."

The conductor looked wonderingly at Jim for a few moments, then said:

"By cracky! You're a cool one. Do you think you can keep this up?"

"I'll keep it up till I get killed, and I'd rather get killed than remain a railroad employee, especially at Owl Creek junction."

The conductor succeeded in getting a brief account of the affair from the only living participant, then, not wishing to get behind time, called the man in charge of the baggage car and with his assistance carried the body on board the train. Then there was a whistle and the big snake crawled away over the plain.

Jim Perkins did not have to kill any more men at Owl Creek junction station. The news that the railroad company had sent out an agent who meant business circulated, and after that would be passengers paid their fare. Jim since he had begun the work would not give it up till he had proved that he was master of the situation, then wrote to the president of the road that the population under the influence of the railroad was beginning to change and he thought that any agent could collect for tickets there. He would like a station in a more settled locality.

A reply came notifying Jim that another man would relieve him and he was to report at the general offices of the company. When he reached the terminal and showed his order to a man at a desk he was sent up to the office of the president.

"H'm!" said that officer. "I believe you are the man who collected fares at Owl Creek junction."

"I am, sir," replied Jim.

"I'm sorry I haven't another place especially fitted for your peculiar abilities. What kind of a position would you like?"

"Any you happen to have vacant. I've been railroading all my life. I don't know anything else."

The president tapped a bell. An office boy entered and was directed to call the superintendent. When that gentleman entered the president said to him:

"Mr. Bowers, this is James Perkins, recently station agent at Owl Creek junction. Make him a train dispatcher and as soon as he learns the duties of that position give him the next job in the scale. A man who could make Owl Creek junction a paying station must be good for almost anything. At any rate, try him."

Before entering upon the duties of his new office Jim went to see his sweetheart and told her of the change that had come over his fortunes. Jim's salary was quite sufficient to warrant their marriage, and their engagement was renewed. Jim passed through a number of grades and finally became president of the road, besides making a fortune. Throughout all of his administration he was known as one devoted to the welfare of the thousands of employees of the road under his management.

Puzzled.

Half an hour after Mrs. Richly had given her new maid an order she became uneasy and went to investigate. "Well, Mary, what has detained you? Have you found my Keats, as requested?" "Lor', mum," Mary apologized, "I was just comin' back to ask what is a Keats."

TWO EARLY BIRDS.

One of Them, Though, Was a Safe Lap Ahead of the Other.

King George and the Duchess of Fife are both keen anglers, and they have long been rivals at the sport.

One autumn when the court was at Balmoral both had fished patiently for some days in a pool of the river Dee, trying to catch a particularly big salmon that was reported to be lurking there. Each was anxious to beat the other, so very early one morning King George hurried off toward the pool in the hope of catching the salmon before his niece was up.

To his surprise he found the princess strolling beside the river, and she immediately began to cross examine him as to what he was doing there so early with his fishing tackle. In the end the king had to admit rather shamefacedly that he had intended to steal a march on her and try to catch the elusive salmon before she was up.

The princess read him a very severe lecture on what she called his unsportsmanlike behavior and extracted from him an admission that he was sorry. Then, with a smile of triumph, she showed him her own fishing tackle and the big salmon lying behind a rock on the bank. She had been up just a little before her uncle, had caught the salmon and had hidden it when she saw him coming.—London Tit-Bits.

A Romance of Finance.

The present high value of shares in the New River company—opened just 300 years ago—formed one of the most romantic stories in the history of finance. James I. advanced Hugh Myddelton part of the capital for his project in consideration of an allotment of one-half the shares—which numbered seventy-two. For twenty-five years no dividends were paid, and the shares—"king's" and "adventurer's" alike—were worth £5 apiece, and Charles I. thought he had done well when he induced the company to take over his holding in consideration of a fixed settlement of £500 a year. Twenty years ago an undivided "adventurer's" share was sold in the open market for £94,900.—London Chronicle.

"Father," said a boy, "I've got a pencil which will write green, purple, crimson or any color you like." "Not the same pencil, my son." "You daren't bet me a dime it won't, daddy!" "I'll give you a dime if it will," said his father. The youngster dived into his pockets, produced the stump of a common lead pencil and wrote on a piece of paper the words, "green, purple, crimson." "There, daddy, say it won't write any color you like now! Hand over that dime."

VELVET tonalities, in their fash-[illegible] do not escape the [illegible] in vogue to-day in [illegible] and material. Few [illegible] wraps or hats [illegible] of a uniform tone. As for textures, the height of ultra-modernism in fashion is [illegible] diametrically opposite [illegible] contrasts, as for instance, velvet and tulle, fur, tulle and velvet [illegible] used in material combinations for afternoon gowns. As for color [illegible] it is not directly in the material [illegible] make the gown it is found in the [illegible]. A velvet flower may be thrown [illegible] the belt, [illegible] other color contrast [illegible].

For [illegible] some of the new dress combinations that have all the attraction [illegible]. The new supple taffetas, very different from the old ones that were [illegible] and stiff, will help [illegible] them as a [illegible]. Another recurring style detail [illegible] embroidery, which is creeping [illegible] velvet gowns. [illegible] are [illegible] designs of flowers [illegible] the trend of the new [illegible] forms, influenced [illegible] by the study of [illegible] Japanese and cubist schools, has [illegible] the art of embroidery and is [illegible] advantage in feminine dress.

The wired [illegible], like all fashions that are [illegible] and come so suddenly upon the public, has already had its day. It [illegible] rapidly to modifications. It is now combined with ruffles and [illegible] that simulate that [illegible] outer petticoat-like tunic.

Delightfully varied [illegible] by yokes, wide or narrow, that a [illegible] a part of tailored skirts or [illegible] ruffles of the more filmy models, the lower edge is no longer [illegible] circular or pleated flounces [illegible] the hem or underneath it [illegible] contour of the figure by its [illegible], but this is quite a different [illegible] from the [illegible] shaped [illegible] so fashionable at the [illegible] swaying and balancing [illegible] skirts.

The average [illegible] tunic skirt fits the figure [illegible] lower edge only giving a [illegible] contour by the flounces or ruffles. [illegible] one of many details that [illegible] we are again approaching [illegible] curves of the figure.

Turning [illegible] lower edge of a tunic to make [illegible] puff of it is another [illegible] lampshade skirt tops. A pleated [illegible] ruffle or a bias band [illegible] short yoke, is a prominent [illegible]. Circular bands applied [illegible], omitting the tunic altogether, [illegible] extreme simplification of this new note in skirt adornment.

One of the newest French color combinations is aubergine and bluet; the deep wine shade of the egg plant harmonizes beautifully with the lavenderish blue of the "bachelor's button." In a Paris gown of this combination the gown is of aubergine velvet; the embroideries, which cover the body of the waist and design a pointed yoke on the skirt, are bluet in tone. This color is further introduced onto the robe by a full standing frill of bluet tulle outlining an exceedingly deep U shaped décolleté even for the present fashion of daytime undress. This décolleté, however, is filled in with soft bluet tulle; Pierrot double frills of it band the right sleeve and fall over the hand.

A square ornament of blue beads with long, hanging chain strands apparently fastens the dress, cut on simple up to date lines and closing in front. In spite of its evident simplicity the skirt portion is skilfully shaped to give a slight bustle effect at the back. A heavy silk rope cord outlines the décolleté and encircles, bracelet-like, the centre of the sleeve frills.

Another Paris gown, one of the new three piece suits now worn to the exclusion of tailored suits in the afternoon, is representative of the extremes in dress fabrics used in one costume—broadtail fur, tulle and velvet. The broadtail composes the lower part of the skirt below the tunic, also the coat. The black tulle tunic has a waist mounted over flesh pink mousseline de soie; the skirt part is mounted over the top of the fur skirt, which is of black taffeta. Gathered both on the upper and the lower edge, the skirt tunic is not puffed, it is finished with two black tulle ruffles overbound and headed with black velvet, making them ripple prettily. The waist has application velvet embroideries and little corselet points of fur. Elbow sleeves and the separated fronts are frill bordered, and between the fronts is disclosed a soft white lace vest.

The fur coat collar is one that will stand up loosely about the neck or turn down flatly; the coat has the loose belt at the back which is an imperative feature of the new short cutaway shapes; chinchilla fur bands the long sleeves about the wrist. The touch of color is the large rose and leaves thrust into the belt, artificial or natural.

In another black velvet costume old blue taffeta is combined very cleverly with it; the skirt of velvet, the tunic apparently alternate wide stripings of velvet and taffeta. This is done by crossing the taffeta tunic with velvet bands. Puffed below the belt, the tunic is higher at one hip than the other, giving one of the new one sided effects; the blouse of the tunic is cut away to make the new jumper effect, the spaces filled in with black tulle. Elbow sleeves of the tulle have deep transparent cuffs fascinatingly edged with a full tulle pleating. The tunic is slashed with taffeta. This is a good example of the popularity of the modern daytime décolleté.

A blue velvet turban, one of the popular cap shapes with turned back brim and exceedingly supple crown, has one of the modernized feather ornaments that replace paradise and aigrette plumes.

Another black velvet suit, fitch trimmed, and also combined with blue moire, has the two tunics and coat edge cut out in the concave curve along the edges, [illegible] spaced and placed one below the other. Collar, cuffs and skirt hem are [illegible] with fur bands. With this is [illegible] of the latest hat shapes of velvet, very round and adorned with a feather ornament.

Little Tips from the Home Dressmaker.

THE evening corsage that does not come up over the shoulder has varied sorts of straps that hold it on. In one costume what there is of the corsage is simply two points of material in the front. These points are covered with bead cabochon ornaments, and the same beads outline the point edges. Between the points in front, from cabochon to cabochon, hangs a bead necklace, and falling down over the bare arms are three festooned strings of the beads. The décolleté is straight across the back, held on by the chains that go over the shoulder. There are festoons of these beads on the skirt, instead of the fringe.

Another evening dress without any armholes has a band of lace simply above the belt. Strands of little pink roses of the small budlike kind hold the waist on. One strand goes over each shoulder and two fall in festoons over each arm, finishing under it.

Mechanical pleatings on the afternoon gowns are a real style feature. In a dress in one of the latest plays from the French stage, a green charmeuse day time frock, there are two flounces on the skirt. The first of these pleated flounces is hung from a short hip yoke and is about eighteen inches deep. The second makes the lower part of the skirt, from just above the knees to the hem. The pleats all turn in one direction. The waist is one of the usual models, with a vest and collar of malines lace.

Besides the pleated tunics, which have been in style since the first of the season, there are the pleated flounces that encircle the skirt. In another recent French play was a light coral silk robe in which the blouse opened to show a front of white mousseline de soie. The flounces were about twelve inches deep, the first hanging from just below the hips, the lower one at the hem and the third between the other two. The blouse collar was also pleated. Pleated flounces from ten to fifteen inches in depth hang below the tunic of many of the dancing dresses when there is no other sign of a pleat on the dress. Pleated flounces are disclosed under the ultra modern polonaise draperies in one wide or several small flounces where the drapery is pulled up enough. This is especially amusing when the overskirt is caught up to form a bustle puff. All these pleated flounces are done by the pleating machine and are of various depths, from a quarter to an inch and a quarter in spacing apart.

The tailored suit seams are really peculiar. The high closing of the coats has made a certain fitting necessary. An odd way to fit the coat to the curve of the bust is to slash the material just above it across into a sort of yoke and then gather the fulness that would ordinarily be taken out by darts under this yoke line, which never extends entirely across the front or back. Slot seams are taken in the backs of coats so as to get godet folds in the cutaway hem when the slot stitching is released below the waist line. The new sleeves that are so wide simply taper down from the [illegible] of the upper part of the coats and fall, jabot like, when the arm is dropped at the side.

The absolute disregard of an under arm seam in some of the loose, baggy tailored coats, combined with this new loose sleeve, makes a very curious set of folds under the arm on both sleeve and coat. The lower part of the sleeve, near the hand, when it is not plain at the wrist, is pulled in by a strap that does not extend entirely around the waist, but is on the outside. This same arrangement is often seen on the long sleeves of the day time gowns: the lower part of the sleeve, which is still rather large, is fitted in by little pleats that are caught down by a fancy ornament, strap or cord and hanging ornaments.

In the full, loose coats a sash of the same, not more than four or five inches wide, starts from the sides or front and ties once at the back low down, with hanging and sometimes ornamented ends.

New Pocket Fashion in Outing Skirts.

POCKETS on the front of a white serge outdoor skirt for athletic women are shaped like the patch pockets on a woman's apron in shape, but the pocket is set underneath the skirt. The shape is shown only by the stitching, which follows its outside edge. The hand enters through the slightly slanting top slash and is placed just right, so that the chilled hands may be slipped in. The skirt itself is plain, slashed each side up to the knee, and buttoned through overbound buttonholes with very large white serge covered buttons.

Two kinds of short coats can be worn with such a skirt. One is a short, loose coat of a large blue and white block plaid buttoned up to the neck, with a turned-over collar that may be brought up around the ears. It has a drop shoulder seam and the slight shaping is done by taking some dart pleats in the front of the coat and catching them under a waistband that follows the slanting lower edge of the coat. This coat can be closed with the same serge buttons as on the coat. The coat collar is faced with dark velvet. A peaked cap of white angora and white buckskin boots are worn. The skirt should be very short, almost boot height.

Another coat—this one very long, half way between boots and ankles—is of a fuzzy wool of the new gold color. The top of the coat is a yoke that takes in also the long sleeves of the coat. Two buttons fasten the yoke and four large ones hold the double breasted fronts of the coat together about hip depth in front. From these buttons a wide belt of the material encircles the coat, excepting the space between the buttons in front. Large envelope pockets are buttoned over the belt on each side. The collar is one of the rolled over shapes, and is cut away to show a backing collar of a dark brown duvetyn. This coat has a small cap of the same material that is round and supple and knocked into a fanciful shape.

The dull plaids, where the brightness of color is softened by the rough homespun like weave of the material, are smart for outdoor winter resort dresses. A [illegible] waist and skirt of a dull plaid, combined with a duvetyn skirt of a plain color found in the plaid or even of a brighter color, are especially good for the Northern resorts.

THREE PIECE SUIT REPLACES TAILOR MADE FOR AFTERNOON WEAR

VELVET toilettes in their fashionable [illegible] do not escape the [illegible] in vogue to-day in [illegible] and material. Few [illegible], wraps or hats [illegible] tone. As for textures, [illegible] diametrically opposite [illegible] for instance, [illegible] tulle, fur, tulle and velvet [illegible] used in material combinations [illegible] afternoon gowns. As for color [illegible] it is not directly in the materials [illegible] make the gown it is found [illegible]. A velvet flower may be [illegible] other color contrast [illegible].

[illegible] one of the new dress combinations that have all the attractiveness [illegible]. The new supple taffetas, very different from the old ones that were so crackly and stiff, will help [illegible] them as a [illegible]. Another returning [illegible] detail [illegible] embroidery, which is creeping [illegible] velvet gowns. [illegible] different [illegible] designs of flowers [illegible] the trend of the new [illegible] form, influenced [illegible] by the study of Chinese, Japanese and cubist schools, has reached the art of embroidery and is used to its advantage in feminine dress.

The wired minaret tunic, like all fashions that are a bit extreme and come on suddenly upon the public, has already had its day. It submitted rapidly to modifications. It is now combined with ruffles and pleated flounces that simulate that exotic little distended outer petticoat-like tunic.

Delightfully varied in shape by yokes, wide or narrow, that are now a part of tailored skirts or by outlining ruffles of the more filmy models, the lower edge is no longer distended. The circular or pleated flounces placed at the hem or underneath it may break the contour of the figure by its rippling edges, but this is quite a different silhouette from the cylindrically shaped wired minaret so fashionable at the first of the season, swaying and balancing over dress skirts.

The average up to date tunic skirt fits the figure quite snugly, the lower edge only giving a flare to the contour by the flounces or ruffles. This is one of many details that indicate that we are again approaching the natural curves of the figure.

Turning under the lower edge of a tunic to make an encircling puff of it is another deviation from lampshade skirt tops. A pleated or circular ruffle or a bias band, falling from a short yoke, is a promised spring variation. Circular bands applied to the skirt, omitting the tunic altogether, is the extreme simplification of this new note in skirt adornment.

One of the newest French color combinations is aubergine and bluet; the deep wine shade of the egg plant harmonizes beautifully with the lavenderish blue of the "bachelor's button." In a Paris gown of this combination the gown is of aubergine velvet; the embroideries, which cover the body of the waist and design a pointed yoke on the skirt, are bluet in tone. This color is further introduced onto the robe by a full standing frill of bluet tulle outlining an exceedingly deep U shaped décolleté even for the present fashion of daytime undress. This décolleté, however, is filled in with soft bluet tulle; Pierrot double frills of it band the tight sleeve and fall over the hand.

A square ornament of blue beads with long, hanging chain strands apparently fastens the dress, cut on simple up to date lines and closing in front. In spite of its evident simplicity the skirt portion is skilfully shaped to give a slight bustle effect at the back. A heavy silk rope cord outlines the décolleté and encircles, bracelet-like, the centre of the sleeve frills.

Another Paris gown, one of the new three piece suits now worn to the exclusion of tailored suits in the afternoon, is representative of the extremes in dress fabrics used in one costume—broadtail fur, tulle and velvet. The broadtail composes the lower part of the skirt below the tunic, also the coat. The black tulle tunic has a waist mounted over flesh pink mousseline de soie; the skirt part is mounted over the top of the fur skirt, which is of black taffeta. Gathered both on the upper and the lower edge, the skirt tunic is not puffed, it is finished with two black tulle ruffles overbound and headed with black velvet, making them ripple prettily. The waist has application velvet embroideries and little cornelet points of fur. Elbow sleeves and the separated fronts are frill bordered, and between the fronts is disclosed a soft white lace vest.

The fur coat collar is one that will stand up loosely about the neck or turn down flatly; the coat has the loose belt at the back which is an imperative feature of the new short cutaway shapes; chinchilla fur bands the long sleeves about the wrist. The touch of color is the large rose and leaves thrust into the belt, artificial or natural.

In another black velvet costume old blue taffeta is combined very cleverly with it, the skirt of velvet, the tunic apparently alternate wide stripings of velvet and taffeta. This is done by crossing the taffeta tunic with velvet bands. Puffed below the belt, the tunic is higher at one hip than the other, giving one of the new one sided effects; the blouse of the tunic is cut away to make the new jumper effect, the spaces filled in with black tulle. Elbow sleeves of the tulle have deep transparent cuffs fascinatingly edged with a full tulle pleating. The tunic is slashed with taffeta. This is a good example of the popularity of the modern daytime décolleté.

A blue velvet turban, one of the popular cap shapes with turned back brim and exceedingly supple crown, has one of the modernized feather ornaments that replace paradise and aigrette plumes.

Another black velvet suit, fitch trimmed, and also combined with blue moire, has the two tunics and coat edge cut out in the concave curve along the edges, parallelly spaced and placed one below the other. Collar, cuffs and skirt hem are [illegible] with fur bands. With this is [illegible] of the latest hat shapes of velvet, very round and adorned with a feather ornament.

Little Tips from the Home Dressmaker.

THE evening corsage that does not come up over the shoulder has varied sorts of straps that hold it on. In one costume what there is of the corsage is simply two points of material in the front. These points are covered with bead cabochon ornaments, and the same beads outline the point edges. Between the points in front, from cabochon to cabochon, hangs a bead necklace, and falling down over the bare arms are three festooned strings of the beads. The décolleté is straight across the back, held on by the chains that go over the shoulder. There are festoons of these beads on the skirt, instead of the fringe.

Another evening dress without any armholes has a band of lace simply above the belt. Strands of little pink roses of the small budlike kind hold the waist on. One strand goes over each shoulder and two fall in festoons over each arm, finishing under it.

Mechanical pleatings on the afternoon gowns are a real style feature. In a dress in one of the latest plays from the French stage, a green charmeuse day time frock, there are two flounces on the skirt. The first of these pleated flounces is hung from a short hip yoke and is about eighteen inches deep. The second makes the lower part of the skirt, from just above the knees to the hem. The pleats all turn in one direction. The waist is one of the usual models, with a vest and collar of malines lace.

Besides the pleated tunics, which have been in style since the first of the season, there are the pleated flounces that encircle the skirt. In another recent French play was a light coral silk robe in which the blouse opened to show a front of white mousseline de soie. The flounces were about twelve inches deep, the first hanging from just below the hips, the lower one at the hem and the third between the other two. The blouse collar was also pleated. Pleated flounces from ten to fifteen inches in depth hang below the tunic of many of the dancing dresses when there is no other sign of a pleat on the dress. Pleated flounces are disclosed under the ultra modern polonaise draperies in one wide or several small flounces where the drapery is pulled up enough. This is especially amusing when the overskirt is caught up to form a bustle puff. All these pleated flounces are done by the pleating machine and are of various depths, from a quarter to an inch and a quarter in spacing apart.

The tailored suit seams are really peculiar. The high closing of the coats has made a certain fitting necessary. An odd way to fit the coat to the curve of the bust is to slash the material just above it across into a sort of yoke and then gather the fulness that would ordinarily be taken out by darts under this yoke line, which never extends entirely across the front or back. Slot seams are taken in the backs of coats so as to get godet folds in the cutaway hem when the slot stitching is released below the waist line. The new sleeves that are so wide simply taper down from the [illegible] of the upper part of the coats and fall, jabot like, when the arm is dropped at the side.

The absolute disregard of an under arm seam in some of the loose, baggy tailored coats, combined with this new loose sleeve, makes a very curious set of folds under the arm on both sleeve and coat. The lower part of the sleeve, near the hand, when it is not plain at the wrist, is pulled in by a strap that does not extend entirely around the waist, but is on the outside. This same arrangement is often seen on the long sleeves of the day time gowns; the lower part of the sleeve, which is not rather large, is fitted in by little pleats that are caught down by a fancy ornament, strap or cord and hanging ornaments.

In the full, loose coats a sash of the same, not more than four or five inches wide, starts from the sides or front and ties once at the back low down, with hanging and sometimes ornamented ends.

New Pocket Fashion in Outing Skirts.

POCKETS on the front of a white serge outdoor skirt for athletic women are shaped like the patch pockets on a woman's apron in shape, but the pocket is set underneath the skirt. The shape is shown only by the stitching, which follows its outside edge. The hand enters through the slightly slanting top slash and is placed just right, so that the chilled hands may be slipped in. The skirt itself is plain, slashed each side up to the knees and buttoned through overbound buttonholes with very large white serge covered buttons.

Two kinds of short coats can be worn with such a skirt. One is a short, loose coat of a large blue and white block plaid buttoned up to the neck, with a turned-over collar that may be brought up around the ears. It has a drop shoulder seam and the slight shaping is done by taking some dart pleats in the front of the coat and catching them under a waistband that follows the slanting lower edge of the coat. This coat can be closed with the same serge buttons as on the coat. The coat collar is faced with dark velvet. A peaked cap of white angora and white buckskin boots are worn. The skirt should be very short, almost boot height.

Another coat—this one very long, half way between boots and ankles—is of a fuzzy wool of the new gold color. The top of the coat is a yoke that takes in also the long sleeves of the coat. Two buttons fasten the yoke and four large ones hold the double breasted fronts of the coat together about hip depth in front. From these buttons a wide belt of the material encircles the coat, excepting the space between the buttons in front. Large envelope pockets are buttoned over the belt on each side. The collar is one of the rolled over shapes, and is cut away to show a backing collar of a dark brown duvetyn. This coat has a small cap of the same material that is round and supple and knocked into a fanciful shape.

The dull plaids, where the brightness of color is softened by the rough homespun like weave of the material, are smart for outdoor winter resort dresses. A loose waist and skirt of a dull plaid, combined with a duvetyn skirt of a plain color found in the plaid or even of a bright color, are especially good for the Northern resorts.

BOWSER TRIES IT

Tires of Home Comforts and Goes to Board.

ONE DINNER SETTLES HIM.

He Finds His Vision of a Dainty Table and Congenial Companionship but Figments of the Imagination—He Has to Crawfish.

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1913, by Associated Literary Press.]

ON this particular evening Mr. Bowser's dinner was not a banquet.

There were various good reasons for it. Mrs. Bowser had spent the afternoon at the stores, the cook had burned her hand, the butcher had sent a tough steak, and the grocer had entirely forgotten the potatoes.

"I am sorry," she said as they sat down to the meal.

"Humph!" was the sulky reply.

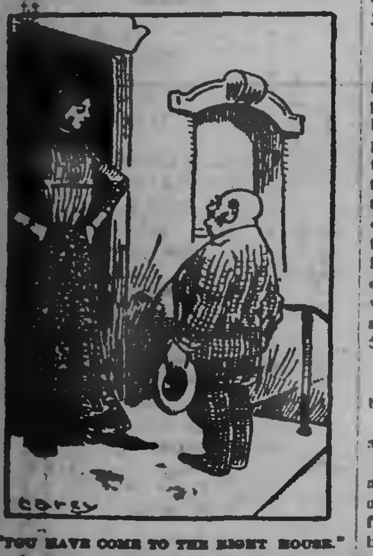
"These things will happen now and then, and nobody's to blame for it."

"Humph!"

"You shall have an extra good dinner tomorrow to pay for it."

"Humph!"

That was the extent of the conversation at the table. It was when they



"YOU HAVE COME TO THE RIGHT HOUSE."

had finished the meal and reached the sitting room that Mr. Bowser asked:

"Have I got a wife, or haven't I?"

"You have," was replied.

"Have I got a home, or haven't I?"

"You have."

"Am I expected to sit down to a picked up, mixed up, woosed up meal or to have something fit to eat?"

"I explained how it came about. It may never happen again."

"But I can't eat explanations. Mrs. Bowser, this house is run like a logging camp."

"I deny it. It is run as good as any house in the state."

Some Boarding Houses Better.

"There are boarding houses where they have better cooking."

"You know nothing about it."

"And where they have more palatable meals."

"Then why don't you try one?"

"I'm thinking of it mighty seriously."

"I wouldn't think any more. I'd go right off and find the place!"

"You know who you are talking to, do you?" he demanded, rather taken aback by her readiness to see him go.

"I do, sir. There is no occasion to quarrel. You are sighing for the matchless meals of a boarding house. Try them for a couple of days. Stay a week if you want to."

"You mean that, do you?"

"I surely do. If you are dissatisfied here the thing to do is to get out."

"By thunder, I will!"

"That's the way to talk," said Mrs. Bowser. "I can get along fine without you."

"Oh, you can! Then I'll start out in the morning and look for a place."

"I shall wish you every luck. If you have any rows with the landladies you won't—won't let them get into the papers?"

"What will I have rows about?" he innocently queried. "The room, the bed and the cooking will be all right, and there'll be no occasion for any hard words."

Bowser Weakens a Little.

Half an hour later, however, he weakened enough to say that he was sorry for the cook.

In half an hour he said that he didn't expect things to always go smooth around the house.

Just before going to bed he remarked that he knew a man who hanged himself because he had to live in a boarding house.

Mrs. Bowser made no answer. He had the nightmare during the night, but she did not arouse him. At breakfast he tried to joke with her, but as the meal ended she said:

"Are you going to have your trunk called for during the day?"

"My—my trunk?"

"Yes. You are going to try a boarding house, you know."

His jaw fell, and his face went blank, but after a minute he braced up and answered:

"I may leave the trunk here for a day or two. I'll take myself off now so as not to be in your way."

Mr. Bowser lost no time in looking out for quarters. He knew of a score of boarding houses not too far away, and within an hour he was pulling the bell at the top of a flight of steps. It was the landlady herself who answered the ring, and when she understood that he was in search of a temporary home the frozen look she had put on for the benefit of a canvasser was replaced by a smile that she tried her best to make appear motherly.

"I think I understand you," she said, with a friendly nod. "You are looking for a place which will extend the comforts of home, and you have come to the right house. You are used to a good bed and a dainty table, and you desire to meet congenial people around the festive board."

"Exactly, ma'am, and Providence seems to have guided my footsteps. I am sure we shall get along famously. I may send my trunk over during the day and be here for dinner. What are your figures?"

No Kickers Wanted.

"For an elegant front room, newly papered and with running water and plenty of heat—for this room and my luxurious table I must ask you $12 per week. I could have got $15 yesterday, but I didn't like the looks of the man. He looked to me like what they call a kicker. I have never had one of my boarders find a word of fault yet. We are the same as a family, you know, and many of us call each other by our given names. It will be the same as adopting you into a tender hearted Christian family. You don't look like a faultfinder."

"I hope not, ma'am."

"And instead of great hunks of corn beef you prefer dainties at table?"

"Exactly. Your terms are all right, and I think I'll join the family."

He was just in time for dinner. For an hour past he had been thinking of oyster soup, porterhouse steak, French fried potatoes and Mocha coffee, and he sat down with an appetite. Soup was brought him. It was thin soup, it was watery soup; it was soup that tasted like nothing in particular. He sipped a spoonful and glared around him at the "family" and realized that he was in for a row. There was steak, but it was not porterhouse; there were mashed potatoes, but they were full of lumps.

Mr. Bowser chewed at his meat a moment, tasted of the potatoes and then leaned back in his chair. Had Mrs. Bowser been there she would have felt the earth trembling and hastened to prevent a calamity, but the landlady saw no signs. When she saw that Mr. Bowser did not eat she tenderly said:

"I suppose, poor man, you are thinking of the wife who is far away, and so you have no appetite?"

Criticises Festive Board.

"Madam, is this what you were pleased to term your festive board?" he queried in reply as he waved his hand over the table.

"Is anything wrong?"

He was about to reply that there was end to give particulars when the "family" froze him into silence with their looks. There were eleven of them, and they were "ag'in" him to the last one.

Realizing the situation, he rose up as calmly as possible, left the room and went up to the newly papered room with southern exposure. The landlady followed him. It was her duty as the head of the "family" and a motherly woman to comfort the disconsolate.

"You and your wife haven't been parted very often, I take it?" she said as Mr. Bowser opened the door to her.

"Look here, woman, what kind of a hash house do you call this?" he demanded as he turned to her and instinctively looked around for the cat.

"Sir, sir! Is it possible that you are speaking to me?" she demanded.

"Of course I am. Do you expect that a man who has ever had a home of his own can put up with such fodder as was placed before me? That soup was slop; that beef came from a neck piece. Your slovenly cook did not half mash her potatoes. Why, if my cook had dared to set such a meal before me I'd have—have"—

"You are intoxicated, sir!" she interrupted.

"Bosh!"

"Then, sir, there is no excuse for your language, and as the head of this Christian family and as the owner of this festive board downstairs I shall have to ask you to vacate this room."

Bowser's Theories Exploded.

"I was going on my own accord!" replied Bowser, who wanted to kick over chairs and jump at the cat. "I have always had a theory that a boarding house which would feed its patrons on lamb chops instead of bull beef, on potatoes mashed with a club instead of a crowbar, on Java or Mocha cof"—

"Never mind your theories, sir!" interrupted the "mother of the family" as she waved him out of the room and along the hall and downstairs. The other boarders had gathered to see the kicker depart. They were tall, thin, cadaverous boarders and most of them two weeks behind with their cash, and they lined up in the hall and looked coldly and cruelly at Bowser as he passed.

When the door had closed behind him with a bang and he had descended the steps he looked around at the darkness and thought of Mrs. Bowser and the cat, and a tear gathered in his eye and ran down his nose.

He must go back to them. He must crawfish. He must back water. He had tried boarding house life, and his bluff had been called. The cat would grin and Mrs. Bowser would say something sarcastic, but he must go—must go!

And he went. [illegible]

ORIGIN OF THE HARP.

Evolved From the Lyre of the High Priest of Osiris.

The history of the piano counts as a day compared to the harp. We have authentic records that as early as 1800 B. C. the first lyre was evolved from the mind of the high priest of Osiris, who in one of his daily walks along the banks of the river Nile found an empty tortoise shell spanned with dried ligaments. Happening to strike it, he noticed that it gave forth pleasing sounds, and he at once made an instrument on the plan of the tortoise shell.

From the lyre it was but an easy step to the harp, now the most famous instrument in the world. Milesius, one of the Phoenician priests, carried it with him in his conquest to Ireland, and there he planted it among the music loving Celts in 1260 B. C. The royal instrument became a controlling feature in druidical worship, and the harpist or bard ranked with royalty, the prophet and the priest. The druids advanced the harp from eleven to thirty-two strings and crowned their efforts in its improvement by the evolution of the pillar, which has ever since found universal adoption.

Our modern harp consists of forty-five or forty-seven strings, seven pedals—one for each note in the octave—and the wonderful instrument shares with the piano and organ the faculty of being autonomous—that is to say, it needs no accompaniment and furnishes both melody and harmony.—Miss Loretta De Lone in New York Tribune.

Two Ideas.

Uri, a candidate for congress, said to Jonathan, another, during a heated debate: "I think, sir, you have but one idea in your head. It is a very small one, and if it should swell your head would burst."

Jonathan, looking at the bare and venerable head of his opponent, replied: "Well, I think you haven't one in your head and never had. There has been one scratching around the outside, trying to get in, till it has scratched all the hair off your head. But it didn't get in, and it never will." Uri was silent.—Chicago News.

Hindu Confectionery.

Like the American girls, Hindu girls are passionately fond of sweet things. One of their candies, sadu, is very much like our plain sugar candy. It is made of sugar and milk and flavored with attar of roses. Buddhikabal, or hair of Buddha, is one of their most popular sweetmeats. It is so called because it is in fine, long strings like vermicelli. This is made of sugar and cream from buffalo's milk, which is exceedingly rich.

Earth and Moon.

The diameter of the earth is 8,000 miles. The diameter of the moon is 2,162 miles. The nearest approach of the surfaces of the two bodies is 216,477 miles. The mean distance from the earth is 238,850 miles, the maximum distance which may be reached being 252,830 miles. The moon's surface contains about 14,685,000 square miles, or nearly four times the area of Europe.

Still Sadder.

"What could be more sad than a man without a country?" feelingly asked the high school literature teacher of her class.

"A country without a man," responded a pretty girl just as feelingly.—Woman's Home Companion.

A Surgical Operation.

The customer raised his hand, and the barber, pausing in the operation of shaving him, inclined his head. "Sir?" "Give me gas," said the customer.—London Globe.

LIFE IN THE OUTPOSTS

HOW ENGINEERS IN WILDS MAKE LIFE ENDURABLE.

An Object Lesson In Rapid Civilization Is to Be Found In the Work of the Divisional Engineering Staff of the G.T.P. in the Yellowhead Pass—Tennis Court and Fancy Dress Parties.

The engineer who foreruns the bands of steel that carry civilization on their backs accepts the loneliness of the wilderness as part of his day's work. He accepts it, but alters it immediately. He controls conditions, bends them to his whims, considers them but tools for his enjoyment, and emerges to the glare of "the front" with every vein pulsing, every cell alive, just as ready to plunge into the gaiety offered him as he was to manufacture his own pleasures away back there, where only mountain goats and grizzlies were neighbors, says W. Lacy Amy in The Saturday Globe.

When the divisional engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific selected as his camping ground the comparatively level valley at the confluence of the Athabaska and Miette Rivers, in the Yellowhead Pass, steel was still two years back towards Edmonton. Two years of uncertain mountain weather faced him—two winters of dreary imprisonment. And with him a score of assistants, clerks, axemen and cooks stared into banishment from friends, irregular mails, uncertain supplies, certain dangers—stared and stayed. They were willing to trust to themselves.

The camp, a dozen shacks of varying size and design, housing respectively the divisional engineer and his family, the chief clerks, the junior clerks, the cooking and eating conveniences, and the axemen, besides the instruments and supplies, was built with a long stay in view. Water, the first necessity, was piped from an improved lake up an adjacent mountain, a convenience that was ready at hand when the new town of Fitzhugh was later established as a divisional point on the new railway.

In the shack of the chief clerks the fittings were good enough for town quarters. Eastern rugs covered the floors of hewed logs; builders' paper concealed the walls and supplied foundation for a quiet shade of ingrain. From a moulding of natural boughs hung home-framed pictures. In one corner of the living room the most expensive phonograph reflected the glare of the huge centre lamp and livened the spare moments.

Last winter gaiety revelled in the Fitzhugh valley. Steel had passed the camp seventy miles, but still every inch of grade was controlled from the little group of shacks that had become so comfortable. Winter in the Pass had usually been a period of silence and moodiness, a straining of the eyes towards the coming spring. But last winter saw a change. The tennis court was banked about the edge and flooded, and there they had a rink that froze so solid that only summer sun could dislodge it. Everyone in camp sent to Edmonton for skates, including the three or four women and all the children. Even hockey teams were organized and a schedule played.

The birthday of the divisional engineer was made an excuse for a masquerade and banquet. The banquet came off all right on time, but a blizzard disturbed the masquerade scheme. However, as there were no handbills to print, no one to disappoint, it was duly run off on the following night.

It was such a success that ambitions soared. A masquerade carnival of the whole country was arranged.

By this time there were a few score of people in the mountain divisional centre, Fitzhugh, although only a family or two were eligible for an engineer's entertainment; and seventy miles—only seventy miles—further through the Pass at Mile 53, B.C., the head construction camp, some of the contractors lived with their families. A draughtsman drew the invitations, and blue prints were sent out, adorned with pictures of skaters and local scenery. And on the momentous night three maskers came all the way from Edmonton, eight from Fitzhugh, and a dozen from Mile 53, making forty on the ice.

That carnival was unique. There were clowns, nurses, suffragettes, a toreador, and several fancy female impersonations; and every costume had to be made in camp. The toreador sent to Edmonton for three colors of velvet, white silk hose, and a wooden sword; and the rest stole, begged, or borrowed, with a feverish desire to excel. The boys of the Fitzhugh camp will look back to that night as the big one of their lives.

And Mile 53 returned the compliment by building a hall on purpose for a big dance of thirty couples, every eligible man and woman in the mountains.

Five miles from the head camp—most of it towards the clouds—lies a beautiful lake tight against the beetling side of Pyramid Mountain. In the middle of it lies a small island that will some day be overrun with tourists thinking only of the living moment. But I can see on that island a little tent stocked with canned provisions, a fishing rod or two and lots of tackle, and a couple of pots and pans. Tied to the centre pole is a bundle of blankets beyond the reach of inquisitive mountain animals, and in the corners are beds of spruce boughs. Outside, drawn up from the water, are a canoe and a boat which had been carried up that awful mountain trail by five engineers; and before the tent is a small clearing with a heap of blackened ashes in its centre, and a shelter of boughs at its back. I'll always remember that picture.

The Congo region exports about 2,000,000 walking sticks a year.

CHEAPER FENCEPOSTS.

Preservatives Prolong Life of Poorest Woods.

As a result of the many enquiries in regard to the preservative treatment of fenceposts, the forestry branch, Ottawa, has now issued a circular on this subject. The various methods described of treating the posts with the preservatives are all illustrated by diagrams, and the apparatus required is simple and costs little.

The great advantage of these treatments is that they keep even cheap woods free from decay for from 10 to 15 years. Many kinds of wood found in farmers' wood lots will last, when used as posts, only four years or thereabouts; after treatment, such as described, they last twice or three times, even four times, as long.

Creosote, which costs in Canada, from 10 to 25 cents a gallon, is the best preservative. When boiling hot creosote is applied liberally with a brush, for instance—to the butts of well-seasoned posts from which the bark has been removed, it sinks into the wood for a distance of about a quarter of an inch. This should add at least ten years to the life of a post made from a non-durable wood, such as poplar, balsam, fir or spruce. This is not the best method, but it is the simplest and, on a small scale, probably the cheapest. Other methods require that the posts be kept covered in tanks of hot creosote for a longer or shorter period.

Besides lengthening the life of the post, the preservative treatment also tends to reduce the cost of the posts in another way, for as cheap local woods can be used, the first cost and the cost of transportation are usually much lower than for cedar, oak or tamarack. Moreover, as posts will need to be set less often, the proportionate cost of setting the post will be less. Taking into account all the items that go to make up the cost of the post, and comparing this with the number of years it will be found, ' the majority of cases, to be much less for treated posts.

How Alberta Has Grown.

A recent census bulletin issued from Ottawa deals with agricultural statistics for the Province of Alberta. It shows that on June 1, 1901, the number of farm holdings were 9,486, of which 9,429 were holdings of five acres and over, as compared with 60,353 holdings of five acres and over, and 1,143 holdings of less than five acres, making a total of 61,496 holdings of between 100 to 200 acres increased from 6,577 to 34,555 in the decade, while those of over 300 acres increased from 2,587 to 24,023. The average size of the holdings has not varied from 1901 to 1911, being 288 acres at each census period.

In 1911, of the total land area, 10.96 per cent., or 17,747,739 acres, were occupied as farm lands, as compared with 1.69 per cent. or 2,735,630 acres in 1901. There were therefore in 1911 over 144,000,000 acres in Alberta not occupied for agricultural purposes.

In common with the other provinces of the west, Alberta is seriously beginning to make adequate provision for the feeding of animals in the winter season. In 1901 no land producing cultivated grasses was reported. The records of the last census show for 1910 149,972 acres of hay and clover and 2,592 acres of alfalfa, and these figures were increased to 162,411 acres of hay and 7,780 acres of alfalfa in 1911. In addition to 135,662 tons of cultivated hay and 5,133 tons of alfalfa, the records show that 100,849 tons of prairie hay were gathered in the census year.

Horses increased by 314,492, milch cows by 101,586, other horned cattle by 315,204, sheep by 46,488, swine by 191,441, turkeys by 60,782, geese by 18,063, ducks by 21,945, hens and chickens by 2,102,181.

They Want It Easy.

Before the Balkan war Bulgarians were to be seen in numbers in every centre in Ontario where manual labor was in progress. The majority of Bulgarians in Ontario were called home to fight Turkey, and died on the job.

Three Bulgarians have written the Dominion Minister of Agriculture asking about Canada. This letter has been forwarded to the Ontario Minister of Agriculture. The three applicats are all of good parentage, but their families have been ruined by the war. They make the "modes." promise that they would gladly come to Canada if they could be assured of positions becoming their rank and dignity. They balk at the farm servant's work idea, and want free board and lodging, and a sufficient training to enable them to go homesteading.

The letter will be answered informing them that the country is full of dignified people, who decline work on the farm, who are looking for free board, free education and free land grants.

Toronto Takes Most Domestics.

So strong is the need of domestics in Toronto that the remainder of the province has little show against that city in securing the services of the new arrivals. About fifty per cent. of the domestics coming over pay their own fare and the remaining fifty per cent. are assisted. For those brought to Toronto the fare averages $40. In the case of an assisted passage, the Government advances $20 and the balance is provided by the young women.

Relics Unearthed.

Frank Tyo, who owns the Stearns' farm, a mile east of Massena, Ont., found a bunch of 86 old British and Canadian coins while engaged in plowing the other day, the discs being turned up in the furrow. The coins bear dates all the way from the "North American Token," dated 1781, to the big copper penny of 1831. There are about 20 different kinds of coin in the collection.

Mink Farming Now.

The mink, whose skin has a certain value, is now successfully raised in the province of Quebec. On one ranch, situated on Lake Chaud, there are sixty minks.

A company is being formed, it is said, to raise muskrats, whose skin is highly considered and is known commercially as Hudson otter, after suitable dyeing and treatment.

At present only the breeding of the fox is really well developed. If by overproduction, the value of the skins finally becomes depreciated—a fatal error—prices will probably not fall below a certain level, which will leave a profit for the breeders. Thus their efforts are of much interest, and besides their speculative value they assure the conservation of certain varieties whose increasing rarity has inspired fears of their complete disappearance."

Vermin Exterminator.

It is a well known fact that vermin are attracted by light. A Canadian inventor has patented an insecticide in which that principle is practically applied. He has invented a luminous sticky compound or paint, which does the work of the ordinary sticky fly paper in daytime, absorbs the rays of light at the same time and becomes luminous at night to finish its work of extermination.

Don't Be a Jack-of-All-Trades

The day of the "Jack-of-all-trades" is passed. This is the time of the specialist, of the man qualified to do some one thing to the queen's taste—which means to the satisfaction of a critical boss. No concern can afford to place a high-grade equipment in the hands of low-grade men. Competition forces employers to meet skill with skill.

To make it short, have you any special equipment? Is there anything in you to command big pay?

Every month upwards of 400 I. C. S. students write to Scranton to tell of positions secured or bettered—of earnings increased and prospects brightened—through study of I. C. S. Courses. Last month the number was 416. The letters come from every section and from all sorts and conditions of men. Some of the writers live in Ontario—some live in British Columbia; some began with no more education than ability to read and write—some were college graduates; some had a good deal of spare time—some had to figure on every spare minute; some were well-to-do—some were obliged to save the pennies.

If you are a "live wire"—if you wish to make sure of the job you want—there is an I. C. S. way for you. To find out all about it without cost, mark and mail the coupon. Doing so will commit you to nothing, place you under no obligation, and may prove to be the turning point in your career.

DAMAGE OF HALF MILLION DOLLARS IN MONTREAL FIRE

Seven Storey Building is Gutted---Toronto Factory is Destroyed and One Man is Dead---Block Burned in Belleville.

MONTREAL, Jan. 14.—Fire invaded the dreaded down town danger zone yesterday afternoon and gutted the seven-storey building near the corner of St. Paul street and Place Royale, owned by Molson estate and occupied by the hardware firm of Frothingham and Workman. Intensely cold weather conditions added to the fact that the blaze was right in the heart of the congested warehouse district, made the task of the firemen doubly difficult.

The fire, which is said to have been caused by the upsetting of a plumber's lamp in the shipping room on the ground floor, quickly spread upwards through the other flats. The wholesale hardware firm employes about 85 persons, 20 or so of them being girls. All got out safely.

Another danger to the firefighters was the presence in the building of a considerable quantity of ammunition, but a larger part of this was contained in a fireproof vault that escaped injury. Upon the top flat, however, were a number of cases of cartridges, and an hour after the fire started these began to explode.

The stock and property of the Frothingham and Workman firm were covered by insurance to the extent of $285,000 and it is calculated that their loss by fire and water will amount to around $200,000. The loss to the Molson estate, which also is insured, will be roughly a quarter of a million, making the total damage about $450,000.

Battling in a temperature twenty-five below zero, firemen were not only hampered by the bitter cold, but by the fact that half a dozen other fires broke out while they were still fighting. One time only seven pieces of apparatus were left with which to combat the central fire. Nearly every fireman sustained frostbites, and so serious were the injuries and the effects of the frost that the inland revenue offices nearby were turned into a temporary hospital.

Bad Blaze in Toronto.

TORONTO, Jan. 14.—A spectacular fire did $80,000 damage and threw five firms out of business for the time at Dundas, Sheridan and Fisher streets last night. The conflagration grew to such proportions that it necessitated the calling of a general alarm before the flames could be controlled. A large force of policemen was collected from different parts of the city to keep an immense crowd of excited spectators out of harm's way. One death resulted. Mr. G. G. Miles, owner of a woodworking factory, dropped dead from heart failure in his office.

Six firms in all are affected by the disaster. Mr. W. K. Rankin, the owner of the property, who conducts the Excelsior Packing Works, was the heaviest loser. Besides the loss of a big power plant, which he rented out to his tenants, his factory was partially destroyed. Mr. W. J. Smith lost everything. His novelty works were razed to the ground. Parker Brothers' wood-turning shops were also a total loss, and J. W. Woolnough's show-case factory was also eaten up by the flames. The other losers were Messrs. R. Lembke and G. G. Miles.

Big Block Burned.

BELLEVILLE, Jan. 14.—Fire last evening destroyed the three-story brick Schuster Block, corner of Bridge and Pinnacle streets, causing a loss of about $30,000. It was just noticed as a small blaze in the rear of the fruit store of Sam Domenico, but with great rapidity it spread upwards and got into the third storey, and from the rear and top gradually ate its way to the lower floors and front offices. The weather was bitterly cold, and the firemen experienced much discomfort in their work.

Public School Damaged.

WHITBY, Jan. 14.—Fire damaged the Dundas Street Public School here yesterday morning to the extent of probably $1,000. The school was in session at the time fire was discovered, but the children all marched safely out of the building. The bitter cold made fire-fighting difficult, and frozen hydrants delayed the work.

FINE OF $20 FOR SHOOTING DEER OUT OF SEASON

BOBCAYGEON, Jan. 14.—County Police Magistrate F. D. Moore was here to try cases of infringement of the Game Act, and one of the Liquor License Act. Game Warden H. B. Parker, had a Mr. Schell of Somerville, summoned for killing a deer out of season, and Mr. N. McIlimoyle for hunting deer without a license. Both parties pleaded guilty and were fined $20 and costs. Mr. Parker confiscated the deer and on Saturday he distributed the venison around the village to those whom he thought were in need of some venison steak.

Mr. M. Hutcheson was summoned on the charge of being drunk on Christmas night in town, and was found guilty and fined $20 and costs.

NEW SCHOOL LOST BY FIRE

Fine Building Near Norwood Entirely Destroyed

A HEAVY LOSS

NORWOOD, Jan. 14.—The new school house situated at Daisy D. cheese factory west of the village, about two miles, was destroyed by fire Saturday night.

The building is a total wreck. In the basement were about eight or ten cords of dry hard wood and the intense heat caused by the burning of this wood destroyed the stone work of the foundation to such an extent that it will all have to be rebuilt before a new building can be erected.

The fire will be quite a heavy loss on the section as the school was a new building of solid brick and equipped with all conveniences usually found in a first class school house. The origin of the first is as yet unknown. The loss is partially covered by insurance.

ROYAL MAIL STEAMER MAY BE LOST WITH PASSENGERS

Wreckage From Ill-Fated Boat Comes Ashore and the Worst is Feared---Was Bound For St. John With 120 Passengers.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Halifax, Jan. 14.—All doubt as to the fate of the steamer Cobequid, with one hundred and twenty people aboard seems dissolved by the news that wreckage from that boat was washed up near Yarmouth this morning. She apparently went ashore on Trinity Ledges, ten miles from Yarmouth and her captain therefore was considerably out of his reckoning when he reported he was ashore on Brier Island. No bodies have as yet been washed ashore.

St. John, Jan. 14.—The steamer Cobequid is still above water, according to news received at ten o'clock this morning by Wm. Thomson & Co., agents for the steamer. The steamer Royal George in port here, and also it is stated, the Canadian Government steamer Lady Laurier, which is on her way to Brier Island looking for the Cobequid, both received wireless calls for help from the former this morning, but the Royal George could get no response to the querries she sent out and the position of the stranded steamer is still unknown.

HALIFAX, N.S., Jan. 14.—A wireless cry for help from the Royal Mail steamer Cobequid, fast on the dreaded ledges of the Grand Manan just before dawn yesterday, followed five hours later by a final flicker of her radio, saying that the ship was fast filling, has caused grave concern for the 120 persons on board. The Cobequid was bound for St. John, N.B., from the British West Indies, in command of Captain Hawson, completing her first round trip over this route. She had a crew of 102 men, a number of second-class passengers and the following first-class cabin: L. S. Navarre, L. Both, W. C. Zoller, Mrs. Zoller and child. She had called at Bermuda, but most of her passengers were from points south of there.

Whether the Cobequid had survived an all-day battle with hurricane seas and would hold together until one of the fleet of nearly a dozen rescue boats could reach her was a matter of increasing hourly anxiety today.

Up to dark no trace of the distressed vessel had been found on the east shore of the Bay of Fundy, where she was first reported aground. Nor could a glimpse be seen through the vapor which shrouded the west side of Grand Manan, on one of those numerous ledges, it was later believed she rested.

The Cobequid was formerly the steamer Goth, and had been pressed into the winter service from the Maritime Provinces to the tropics. She sailed from Halifax on Dec. 5 for West Indian ports, and started north again on Dec. 30 from Grenada. She called at Bermuda on the ninth and then cleared for St. John.

Approaching the Bay of Fundy, famous for its swift tides and mountainous seas, a blizzard descended upon the steamer. Captain Hawson was heading for Gannet Rock light, the guide to the western side of the bay, and a warning of the ledges which stretch ten miles to the southward of Grand Manan. It was about sunrise when the operator at the wireless station of Cape Sable across the bay, picked up the Cobequid's cry for help. The message said that the vessel had struck a ledge off Brier Island, which is on the east side of the bay, and needed immediate assistance. For the next few hours frequent messages were received from the stranded steamer, one of which said that the forward hold was filling. At 9.40 a.m. came the last gasp of the fading wireless to the effect that the engine-room was flooded, the batteries were exhausted and the operator was unable to get any sparks.

In the meantime both the Canadian and American Governments had begun active measures for rescue. The German steamer Kronprincessin Cecilie, off Sable Island, on her way to New York, was urged to change her course and head for the Cobequid, two hundred miles to the northward.

The Government steamer Lady Laurier was started out from this port for the run of 150 miles to Grand Manan. The steamers Belvidere, Helena and Lansdowne were asked to help, and the U. S. revenue cutter Woodbury, en route to Rockland from Portland, was ordered to steam full speed for the scene.

Toward night it was discovered that the cable steamer Tyrian was at anchor behind Campobello, only 40 miles from Gannet Rock Light, and a message was sent to her skipper urging him to proceed immediately to the aid of the Cobequid.

When the keeper of the Brier Island Light was notified of the accident, in the hope that he might give some information regarding her, he replied that he saw no trace of the Cobequid. This was subsequently confirmed by the steamer John L. Cann, which made a circuit of the island during the day. On a re-reading of the first message from the Cobequid the opinion was reached that the navigator was at a loss as to the real position of the steamer, and that she was in reality on the west side of the bay.

Unfortunately communication with Grand Manan had been cut off sometime before through the breaking of the cable, so that no information could be obtained from there.

LOWEST MARK DURING THE NIGHT WAS 28 DEGREES

Lowest Temperature Officially Recorded for City Was 38 in February 1896

The temperature took another dip downwards last night but not to the extent of the previous night. The lowest figure reached last night was 28 degrees below zero, but it had moderated to some extent towards morning as at 7 o'clock the thermometer registered 22 degrees below. The cold wave is now passing eastward, as is shown by the change in the direction of the wind, and more moderate conditions will now prevail, probably accompanied by a fall of snow. Several inquiries have been made as to whether lower temperature readings have been recorded in Peterborough than during the present cold spell. While 32 degrees below is certainly cold, yet lower figures have been reached in Peterborough. A search of old weather records has revealed the fact that the lowest temperature officially recorded here was on Monday, Feb. 17th, 1896, when it was 38 degrees below zero. These figures are those of the late Thos. Telford, who was the government observer at that time and for many years previously. He says:—"These are the lowest figures in my register." On Feb. 18, 1882, the official figures were 34 below, the second lowest in Mr. Telford's books. Since then there have been a number of very cold days, viz.: Feb. 27, 1900, 29 degrees below; Jan. 19, 1904, 30 below. (This was the morning of the disastrous fire that almost completely destroyed the photographic studio of the late R. M. Roy.) Another very cold day was Feb. 10, 1908, with 29 below in the morning, and 16 below at noon. (This was not as bad as Tuesday, however.) Jan. 13, 1912, furnished another day of 29 below.—W.P.

Pupils are Nipped.

Numerous cases are reported where children coming to school have been severely frost-bitten. Most of the cases are those of pupils who have a long tramp to their studies.

Trouble With Pipes.

The Dominion Express Company staff have been put to considerable inconvenience because of the bursting of pipes. Some damage has also been done by the water.

Shower of Iron.

Mrs. Dunn, of Water street north, had an unpleasant experience yesterday morning when the water pipes leading to the stove, "blew up," hurling the lids off the stove in all directions. Mrs. Dunn had a visitor at the time and as a result, escaped injury, which she might have received had she been in the kitchen at the time.

MAN WHO USED RAZOR ON HIS WIFE GETS SIX MONTHS

What Benefit is Such a Man to His Wife, Asks the Magistrate

Louis Bourbanasis was sentenced to six months in Central Prison by Magistrate Dumble for aggravated assault on his wife a few weeks ago. After being remanded Bourbanasis defended by G. N. Gordon, appeared before the Magistrate a week ago, and pleaded guilty and sentence was reserved until today.

"What benefit is a man of this kind to a woman?" remarked the Magistrate, in meting out the sentence.

"Well, he has supported her," was Mr. Gordon's rejoiner.

"Yes, but how can a wife live with her husband when he tried to cut her throat?"

"Well, it's the forgiving spirit of some women,' answered counsel. It will be remembered that while in a state of intoxication and rage the prisoner a few weeks ago, assaulted his wife. The outcome of the quarrel was that the wife was seriously injured, her hands being badly cut with the razor, before she managed to get away from the husband. The terrific struggle in which the woman tried to defend herself was such as to cause the blade of the razor to be broken as it was twisted about her hands.

The crown was represented by Mr. Joseph Wearing, M.A.

FREE COURSE OF FOUR WEEKS IN AGRICULTURE

For the Young Men in Peterboro County — To be Held at Norwood

A four weeks' course in general agriculture, is to be given for the advantage of young men in Peterboro County.

As in previous years, and as is the general custom throughout the province, the Ontario Department of Agriculture, Norwood, is preparing to give a four weeks' short course in general agriculture. The office rooms of the Department are now being prepared to receive the third annual class. The rooms are spacious and cheerful and every effort is being made to provide for the comfort of the students. This course begins Feb. 2nd, and continues to March 1st, and it is anticipated by the Department that the class this year will be large.

Free To All

The requirements for entering upon this course of study are such that no young man may be debarred. Any farmer's son may enter, the only conditions being regular attendance at classes and strict attention to work. There will be no entrance examinations; no tuition fee, and no text books to buy. Board and railway fare will be the only expense for those who come from a distance. Good board and room can be obtained in Norwood for four dollars per week, hence, the expense of the course to the student need not exceed sixteen or twenty dollars.

The Program

The work will be given mostly in lecture form, supplemented by practical work in the various departments. The subjects to be taught are: Live Stock and Principles of Breeding; Feeds and Feeding, Field Husbandry, Dairying; Poultry, Veterinary Science, Soil Physics, Surveying, Horticulture, Agricultural Botany and Farm Arithmetic. Special lectures will be given from time to time by outside men. Many of the regular lectures will be illustrated by the use of lantern slides. In all the departments the work will be made as practical as is possible to make it.

Advantages of Course

It is not assumed by the Department that in a course extending only over a period of four weeks that they can teach you how to farm. But it is hoped that by a few weeks' study of some of the many problems relating to practical farming, to enliven an interest which will result in a more active observation and a greater inquisitiveness into "Why" as well as the "How" and "When" of successful agriculture.

In order that a person may make a success of any profession, it is necessary that he be properly trained for the work. This is as true in Agriculture as in any other line of work, and those who intend following agriculture as a profession should be possessed of a thorough understanding of the principles underlying the various practices of farming.

Need of Efficiency

It is true now, that we have entered an age where efficiency is perhaps the greatest of those determining factors, which lead to success. The probabilities of success are all in favor of the man who knows how. This applies with as great force to farming as to any other industry or calling. The department aims to conduct the course in such a way that attention will be directed to the many opportunities for better things in the business of farming; to stimulate an interest in the problems of the farmer and to add to the amount of knowledge which may be brought into service in solving those problems.

This is an age when education is needed as it never was before. The keen composition and the increasing difficult problems of the farm almost demands the energies of a thoroughly efficient man. This is an age when education pays as it never did before. Listen to what G. Horace Lorimer says: "Does education pay? Does it pay to feed in pork trimmings at five cents a pound at the hopper and draw out nice cunning little "country" sausages at twenty cents a pound at the other end? Does it pay to take a steer that has been running loose on the range and living on cactus and petrified wood till he is just a bunch of barb-wire and sole leather, and feed him corn until he is just a solid hunk of porterhouse steak and oleo-oil?"

You bet it pays. Anything that teaches a boy to think and to think quick, pays; anything that teaches a boy to get the answer before the other fellow gets through biting his pencil, pays. Take advantage of the short course for education, and set your mind upon a decision that you will acquire some knowledge that will aid you along the rough paths in farming.

The department is offering special inducements to young men who may attend. The student who stands first in the identification of weeds and weed seeds will receive the book "Farm Weeds," price $1.00. The student who stands first in the judging of live stock will receive the book "Judging of Livestock," by Cragg, price $1.25; and to the student who stands highest in general proficiency will be awarded a gold medal.

Free Stock and Seed Judging at Guelph

Aside from these inducements above mentioned, The Ontario Department of Agriculture has decided to conduct a competition among those pupils who take advantage of the four weeks' course in Agriculture at Norwood.

The object of this competition is to demonstrate the possibilities of an acre of land, and to encourage the young men of the country to take an active part in some special line of practical farming which will stimulate their interest in Agriculture. To the young men of Peterboro county showing the largest net return from an acre of land, the Department will provide transportation and living expenses to attend the two weeks' course in Live Stock and Seed Judging at Guelph in January 1915.

Full particulars of this competition and of the short course may be obtained by writing the Department of Agriculture, Norwood, Ont.

FOREIGNERS AND MISSIONARIES ARE REPORTED SAFE IN ZONE OF EARTHQUAKE AND ERUPTION

Heavy Mortality Caused in Southern Japan Exact Figures Cannot be Given

Canadian Press Despatch

TOKIO, Jan. 14.—The enormous loss of life in Southern Japan from earthquake and the eruption of Mount Sakura Jima cannot yet be estimated with exactness. The casualties at Kakoshima where great damage was done, are stated at ten killed and thirty injured. All foreigners, including several missionaries, are reported safe. Santure, where the heaviest loss of life undoubtedly occurred, is isolated by the continued eruption and cannot be visited. At Kagoshima great confusion prevails.

TOKIO, Jan. 14.—A tidal wave added it terrors to the earthquakes and eruption which struck Kagoshima, in Southern Japan, Monday, according to official advices.

Hundreds of houses were destroyed or damaged, and many people kil ed or injured.

The earthquakes in the island of Kiushiu have resulted in a large lo of life and damage to property whic cannot be estimated at present. A Moji one hundred persons have bee killed. Many houses in the town c Kagoshima, capital of the province c Satsuma, have been destroyed. M day night the city was in darkness, the only illumination being the glare from the volcano Sakura-Jima.

The evacuation of Kagochima was impeded by a huge rock that had been thrown out by the volcano, which wrecked the rails outside the town. A telegraph operator at Kagoshima sent this message: "The city is almost buried in ashes and stones. The people are in a panic and a wild exodus has taken place."

Warships have been despatched with doctors and supplies. The earth shocks and volcanic eruptions continue with violence. The volcanic eruption began with thunderous explosions, and the volcano became a roaring furnace. The burning rock and ashes set fire to several villages.

At Kagoshima, the heat was intense, and a hail of glowing cinders made it impossible to remain. The horror was increased by the shaking caused by incessant shocks of earthquake, which rocked the houses all day. The people fled in disordered droves along the highways leading out of the city. They had abandoned everything and soon were suffering from lack of food and drink.

AN OLD BOY IS HERE ON VISIT

Mr. G. E. Burt Gerrans, Editor and Proprietor of the Carnduff, Sask., Gazette, paid the Review a call today. Sixteen years is quite a span, but it is that length of time since Burt left the Review to seek his fortune in the west. He appears happy and prosperous.

RESULTS SEEN IN SPECIAL SERVICES

At the revival services conducted by the Rev. Wilson Pugsley of Toronto, at the Gilmour Memorial Church last evening, the large number present were afforded an interesting address on the "Healing of the Leper." Last night four responded to the call to Christ, making a total of over twenty during the services, which have been in progress for the past two weeks. On Monday next Rev. Mr. Pugsley goes to Selwyn where he will conduct union services for a week.

RUMOR OF SIR JAMES' DEATH

But There is no Change in His Condition To-day.

A report on the street this afternoon, said that Sir James Whitney had passed away, but up to a late hour The Review had received no intimation to this effect.

The report most likely had its foundation through the tolling of the bell at St. John's church, for the funeral of the late Dr. Beck.

The despatch to-day from New York was that the noon hour bulletin stated the Premier's condition remained the same as yesterday.

A rheumatic sufferer knows a sure cure for everybody else's aches and pains.

PETERBOROUGH, WEDNESDAY, JAN. 14, 1914.

FIFTEEN YEARS OF PROSPERITY—UNDER PROTECTION.

THE EXAMINER is sighing for the good old days of Laurier Government. It is bemoaning the present Borden administration with its policy of protection. It is wanting to know how it is that other countries are so prosperous and Canada has so many unemployed at present.

As to this latter, The Examiner could not have been following the exchanges lately. Other countries are no better off than Canada in the matter of unemployment. There have been riots in Germany, things are better in England at present than they were some little while back; but even free-trade England has had her hard times—if we are not mistaken! Possibly The Examiner has more authentic information on this point.

But the funny part about The Examiner's cry of blue ruin is that it blames the whole of this depression upon the present protectionist Government. The inference is that if Mr. Borden would only adopt free-trade we would get back to the palmy days of the Laurier regime. "For fifteen years we had rampant and unbroken prosperity"—not unbroken, a little rampant, swaggering and inebriated, it may be, and we are perhaps suffering from the carouse. This is "the morning after the night before!"

Let The Examiner clear its head a little and think again. Let it answer this question: Was the Laurier Government a free-trade or Protectionist Government, and how is it that Canada was so prosperous under Protection for fifteen years, while during a good part of that time free-trade England suffered from depression? We put this question to our contemporary but we do not expect an answer, because there is only one answer, and that knocks the bottom out of the foolish accusations against the present Government.

GETTING UNDER WAY AT OTTAWA.

THINGS ARE GETTING UNDER WAY at Ottawa and the new session promises to be one of special interest and great importance. Redistribution, free wheat, and the naval question are said to be the three paramount subjects that will be considered. Upon all of these the Liberal party will do their utmost to prove that the Borden Government is leading the country to ruin. Sir Wilfrid and his party are at present wondering just what the Government intend to do on the questions of free wheat and the navy. When one does not know what an enemy is going to do it is difficult to make plans in advance. Whatever the Borden Government makes up its mind to do on any of these questions the Liberal party can be depended upon to hinder it.

The naval question has now been before the people long enough to enable the Government to make a strong stand. There is no doubt that the people of Canada are more determined than ever to play their part in the defence of the Empire. Canadians are not effusive in the expression of their sentiments or of their convictions but when they speak they say what they mean. Canadians all over the Dominion are ashamed of the action of the Senate and there are signs that the Senate is a little ashamed of itself. There can be no doubt but that if Mr. Borden makes a determined stand upon this naval question he will earn the admiration and confidence of the vast majority of Canadians, and at the same time re-establish the failing confidence of British capital. Loyalty to the Empire is the noblest as well as the most profitable policy for Canada. If we are to be true to ourselves we must be true to the Empire. Britain does not need mere passive loyalty. True and real patriotism is practical and not sentimental, the Empire was built by action and can only be sustained by action, not by the action of our kinsmen across the seas only, but by the united and concerted action of every individual and self-respecting part of the great whole.

THE QUESTION OF FREE WHEAT.

MR. J. H. BURNHAM, M.P., in a letter in yesterday's Review complained of the silence and apathy of Ontario farmers on the question of free wheat which is at present agitating the grain-growers of the West. Most people seem to have an open mind upon the question and it is not known definitely what the Government intend to do in the matter. Whatever is done will be done after a careful consideration of all [illegible]e interests involved. In legislating for a Do[illegible]nion so extensive as Canada, situated as it is [illegible]y side with an older country which has had [illegible]red year's start in the race for nationality, [illegible]ests of the whole of the nine Provinces [illegible] taken into consideration. Something [illegible] be good and profitable for the West [illegible] injure and cripple the East. The [illegible] tariff in the Prairie Provinces, [illegible]ive an immediate benefit to the [illegible]uld practically cut the West off [illegible] bestow all the fruits of our [illegible]ted States. dant energy is a little impatient of the more easy-going East, just as we in Ontario regard the Englishman as slow. The Englishman may be slow, but he cannot be said to lack enterprise; he moves slowly because he is thinking, and that is something the Westerner very seldom indulges in. There is a little more thinking done in the Eastern Canada than in the West, and we have been thinking deeply upon this question of free wheat. Our fears may be unfounded, but it would seem that free wheat is going to hit us pretty hard. It will probably be a good thing for the West, but it will be a still better thing for the United States, while we who have put our money into the Prairies must be left to scratch for ourselves. The next thing will be that Ontario will be making a plea for reciprocity with her sister Provinces.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE MONTREAL MAIL calls the Mexican revolutionary, Villa, a "Judas" for making a contract with a moving picture proprietor to stage a battle with the Federals so that the real fighting may be shown. The Mail goes on to say: "Than his bargain, no man in history since Judas Iscariot has contracted to perform an action more outrageous and shameful, more traitorous to his country and more cruel to his fellow men." This is all right, but what of the moving-picture man?

A REPORT was circulated that Mrs. Pankhurst had been married in Paris. A deputation hastened to France to see if the awful news was true. Considerable relief was felt among the spinster army in London when Mrs. Pankhurst emphatically denied the accusation. Nothing is said about the man she is supposed to have married—but we congratulate him upon his narrow escape.

THE DEEP SEA MISSION is making an appeal to citizens through Peterborough newspapers. No one who can afford a mite should withhold it from this good cause. Send in your donations at once, small or great. It is a mighty fine privilege to have a hand in the noble work of Dr. Grenfell among the deep-sea fishermen. The Review is waiting to put your subscription on the list.

A CONTEMPORARY says that the "official mercury sank 32 degrees below zero." The word "official" is used to indicate that the Borden Government is responsible for the drop in the temperature, as in trade. The mercury never dropped under Laurier.

DR. MARSH told us a short time ago that our mild weather was due to the absence of spots on the face of the sun. Old Sol must be getting into his dirty habits again.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

Things That Count.

Helen Keller.

"The calamity of the blind is immense, irreparable. But it does not take away our share of the things that count—service, friendship, humor, imagination, wisdom."

In Free Trade England.

Hamilton Spectator.

A leading writer in the London Daily Mail has the following to say concerning the cost of living there:—"Food experts and those who deal largely in provisions, tell us that we are only at the beginning of the upward movement. They talk, not indefinitely, but with painful precision, of coming days when butter will be half a crown a pound and beef not far short of three shillings a pound. Already new-laid eggs are fetching in some parts three shillings a dozen—a price that once would have seemed ludicrous." While such conditions prevail in free trade England, we in Canada, with a higher wage scale, can afford to view the present situation in a more hopeful light.

Will Canada Commit Suicide?

Admiral Mahan—the greatest living naval authority outside of the British Islands—writes as follows in the London "Mail:"

"The British Navy cannot abandon the Mediterranean without disaster to the Empire, but cannot hold the Mediterranean without disaster to Great Britain."

What is the answer?

The overseas Dominions must help; and must help now. If they continue to shirk their plain duty, this disaster will very probably fall upon the British Empire either at one point or the other. The result will be that the Dominion will have no Empire to shelter them, and must scuttle for protection under the lee of the strongest neighbor in sight.

In the case of Canada, that strongest neighbor is obviously the United States.

There, then, is the situation on the word of a great American naval expert.

We must do our duty; or prepare to be annexed.

"And He Said 'Fight On.'"

Tennyson.

Time, and its ally, Dark Disarmament,
Have compassed me about,
Have massed their armies, and on battle bent
My forces put to rout,
But though I fight alone, and fall, and die,
Talk terms of Peace? Not I.

They war upon my fortress, and their guns
Are shattering its walls,
My army plays the cowards' part and runs
Pierced by a thousand balls,
They call for my surrender, I reply
"Give quarter now? Not I."

They've shot my flag to ribbons, but in rents
It floats above the height,
Their ensign shall not crown my battlements
While I can stand and fight.
I fling defiance at them as I cry
"Capitulate? Not I."

E. PAULINE JOHNSON,
(Tekahionwake)

The above poem, which has just been published, and is being sold this Christmas in souvenir form, was written by the Canadian poet, the late E. Pauline Johnson, after her physicians in Vancouver had informed her that she could not recover from her illness. She wished the poem to be published after her death.

WINTER NIGHT

By Walt Mason

Hail, Winter and wild weather, when we are all together, about the glowing fire! Let frost be e'er so stinging, it can't disturb our singing, nor can the Storm King's ire. The winds may madly mosey, they only make more cozy the home where we abide; the snow may drift in billows, but we have downy pillows, and good warm beds inside. The night indeed has terrors for lonely, lost wayfarers who for assistance call; who pray for lights to guide them—the lights that are denied them—may God protect them all. And to the poor who grovel in wretched hut and hovel, and feel its icy breath, who mark the long hours dragging their footsteps slow and lagging, the night seems kin to Death. For cheery homes be grateful, when Winter, fierce and fateful, comes shrieking in the night; for books and easy rockers, for larders filled and lockers, and all the warmth and light.

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY FOURTEENTH

The Rev. Dr. W. T. Herridge of Ottawa, who observes his fifty-seventh birthday to-day, has for many years been the favorite preacher of successive governors-general. Lord Aberdeen, during his term of office, attended his church officially. Lord Minto and Earl Grey were frequently to be seen at the evening service and the Duke of Connaught has also favored St. Andrew's Church occasionally with his presence. The secret of their fondness for Dr. Herridge lies in his scholarship, his culture and his musical and literary attainments. He loves art, is exceedingly fond of music and can play both organ and piano with considerable ability. He has been pastor of St. Andrew's Church, Ottawa, for over thirty years.

HAULTAIN'S BLOCKADE.

Present Chief Justice Prayed For Morning or Wellington.

The name of Judge Haultain, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Saskatchewan, is familiar throughout Canada, he having so long been Premier of the old Northwest Territories, before the creation of the new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. The Chief Justice is an Englishman, having been born at Woolwich. His father was a lieutenant-colonel in the Royal Artillery. The Chief Justice has lived most of his life in Canada and was educated at the Montreal High School and Toronto University. Throughout the far west Judge Haultain is famed for his flashing wit, no less than for his ability as a lawyer and politician. In the Saskatchewan Legislature, some years ago, when Mr. Haultain was leader of the Conservative party in Opposition, the Opposition asked the Government for a promise that the following election would be held on new voters' lists. The Government declaration was that it could not see its way clear to make that promise. So the Opposition held up supply, starting in on a Thursday morning, and keeping the House in continuous session sixty hours, until midnight Saturday, when they quit perforce. Mr. Haultain practically did not leave the building. On Saturday morning, at six o'clock, after having slept not at all from Thursday morning, he took the floor and held it until the "day shift" of the fourteen Opposition members arrived at nine. During the next week—an armistice having been arranged meanwhile—the Government gave the promise desired. The leaders on both sides of the House made little speeches referring to the obstruction tactics. Mr. Haultain was describing his desperate effort to find something to talk about during the three hours on that cold Saturday dawn, while he was waiting—"For night or Blucher" came a voice from the Government side "No. For morning or Wellington," came the flash in retort. The House roared. Wellington was the name of the then member for Moose Jaw City, who was to relieve his leader.

Wild Creatures Knew.

On that still Saturday when the storm king was gathering fury for a mad, murderous Sabbath on the Great Lakes, a mysterious influence stirred the wild things of the northern woods. The spirit of the wilderness whispering through the forest was warning them of the wrath to come. Burly bruin, ready to den from winter blasts, forsook his lair, big bull moose set their mighty antlers back and crashed through the underbrush; graceful deer, heedless of hounds and hunters, deliberately betook themselves in certain directions; while their relentless enemy, the timber wolf, howled dismally, and, heedless of the easy prey, slunk off in the same direction as his fellows of the forest.

With one accord all these wild creatures were leaving the tall timber to seek the refuge in the swamps. Twenty-four hours later, when the demon of the wind shrieked through the woods, uprooting huge trees and filling the air with death in the shape of falling limbs, all the animals were safe in the thickets of the muskeg hollows, where small cedar, tamarac and spruce, close packed, suffered little from the fury of the gale.

Such is the story told by a Toronto lumberman just returned from one of his camps in the Sudbury region. This strange migration of the animals, whose mysterious instinct foretold the danger, had been note by his swampers and loggers back in the bush.

Many a poor tune is played on a good horn.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

The Cold Bath.

If you do not feel warm after a cold bath you had better not take it, for it is doing you no good. It is a mistake to get into a bath by standing in the cold water and hesitating before taking the plunge, for this drives the blood up toward the head and is likely to cause congestion of the blood vessels of the throat. The best way is to stand in an empty bathtub and turn on the shower, so that the cold water will strike the head and shoulders first.

If there is not a shower apparatus, souse the head and neck first with a sponge or duck the head under water; then get in and plunge the whole body under as quickly as possible. Another mistake is to stay in too long. Generally speaking, one plunge is enough. After the bath rub the skin briskly with rough towels, to help in the return of the surface circulation. Vigorous exercise is also good after a bath.

DAN CUPID—MAGICIAN

A Ring That Told a Story

By HARRY HOUDINI.

In agony of apprehension Williams started to arrange his modest conjuring apparatus. A few hours earlier his debut as a parlor entertainer had been a matter of joyous and ambitious anticipation. Now the brocaded walls of Senator Morgan's music room fairly threatened to close in and choke him, while the fragrance of hothouse flowers oppressed him strangely. He wondered how he had ever dared to ask the vaudeville agent who supplied Mrs. Morgan and other fashionable hostesses with talent to let him substitute for Thorley, the eminent magician who had fallen a victim to la grippe.

"Can I help you in any way? I am Miss Morgan. The servants are all busy with supper, and I thought—perhaps"—

Young Williams had never thought of needing help, but as he faced the clear eyed, flower-like girl and the echo of her well modulated voice rang in his ears he felt that his one hope of succeeding lay in her presence. Men and women wiser in the social world than Frank Williams had fallen under the spell of Helen Morgan's rare sympathy and charm and wondered how this girl of high ideals and gentle manners could be the daughter of Senator Morgan, ponderous with the arrogance of newly acquired wealth, and Mrs. Morgan, who radiated commonplace attributes as her recently purchased diamonds scintillated light.

At Frank's faltering thanks Helen Morgan began quietly, but deftly, to carry out his instructions, placing a light gilt table here, a taboret there, and where it would be within reach of the conjurer's hand a candle or a gleaming revolver. And, though afterward Frank Williams could not tell how it had happened, before the settings for his act were prepared the girl had drawn out his tale of half tragic struggle, the prosaic, hard headed father storming over the visionary, inexplicable nature of his youngest son, the loyal mother secretly brooding over and abetting this odd chick of her little flock, his constant endeavor to learn the secrets of magic and then to secure a hearing, even the rented dress suit and the gold watch which had been pawned that very afternoon to buy bonbons and gilded trinkets to distribute among his youthful auditors. And as he finished it seemed to Helen Morgan that she stood in the presence of a struggling genius. She had read such stories of poets, musicians and inventors.

The performance was a great success. The children were duly mystified and more than delighted with the showers of trinkets and bonbons which apparently came from an inexhaustible source. Mrs. Morgan had condescended to express her appreciation, a footman had served a supper of such rare delicacies that Frank had longed to pack them all up with his paraphernalia and take them to his mother, and now as he walked down the broad avenue leading from the house he felt as if the house behind him was fairyland indeed and Helen Morgan its princess.

But he was roused from his dream by a grim faced butler, who came hurrying after him.

"You're to come back to the house," was the brusque order, and, re-entering his fairyland, Williams faced Senator Morgan, a glowering figure, in the foreground and Mrs. Morgan, a hysterical one, in the background. But in the eyes of the third he read pity, the same tender pity which he had seen in her eyes when Helen Morgan had stooped to pick up his trick rabbit as the frightened animal, escaping from his pocket and trembling at the shouts of the children, had run to the girl for protection.

"It's jail for you, young man, unless you produce my wife's rings. She left them behind the rock crystal vase in the music room, and we don't propose to have them 'disappeared' as you do handkerchiefs and rabbits."

The scene which followed was a horrible nightmare to the young magician—his own protestations of innocence drowned in Mrs. Morgan's hysterics, Senator Morgan's orders for an officer, Helen's pleading for time to search and finally the discovery of the rings by a maid in Mrs. Morgan's dressing room. And when it was all over Williams was thrust out in the night through a side entrance, feeling more like a thief than an acquitted man. Then suddenly a gentle hand fell upon his arm, and a gentler voice murmured in his ear:

"Just a minute, please. I want to tell you how sorry I am. I hoped this would be the greatest night of your life"—

For one long minute the young man who had his own way to make and the girl whose future had been assured so far as wealth could accomplish this feat looked into each other's eyes. And the soul of the man, suddenly born, went out to the divine tenderness of innate womanliness which is a greater power than mere physical beauty. He spoke quietly, but with new found confidence.

"It has been a wonderful, wonderful night to me, and some day I am coming back to tell you why."

* * *

Under the chaperonage of a dowager duchess who knew how to turn her title to financial account Helen Morgan was "doing" the London season. In a Mayfair drawing room she sat, and beside her was a man with a monocle, an English accent above reproach and a patronizing air. Of course the Morgan millions would mean the remantling of his ancestral but crumbling castles. But then the utter indifference of this girl irritated him even while it commanded his admiration.

"I suppose you saw Erskine in Paris. He's been the go over there—made by the American set, I understand. They say it's his manners as much as his art that got the women all going. He never speaks during his performance and has the most inscrutable eyes. Never could understand why women went in so heavily for eyes. Conjurers bore me, as a rule, but I'm curious to see this man."

Helen Morgan hardly heard what the man with the monocle was saying.

"Erskine!"

In a secret drawer of her jewel case there lay a card, "Frank Erskine Williams," the card of the man who had never come back, never sent her a message in five years, the man who had forgotten! But, no; this could not be he, for the man who had promised had a ready tongue—yes, a ready tongue, as all men had—who promised.

A flutter of fans and a murmur of subdued interest announced that the lion of the evening had arrived. A quick inclination of the head, a snapping of long, slender fingers, and the performance was under way. With lightning rapidity and wonderful deftness the conjurer worked, and the breathless audience watched, not so much the tricks as the unsmiling lips, the inscrutable eyes.

Only one person in the fashionable audience saw something more, and that a quivering, blue eyed girl who for one brief second had met and held the magician's glance and seen burning in those inscrutable eyes a fire which had burned there on a night five years before, a fire lit centuries agone in the eyes of the world's first man—Adam.

The assistant called for a ring with which his master would work a new trick. Mechanically Helen Morgan handed him a magnificent hoop of pearls. Erskine took the ring gravely, raised a silver hammer and apparently smashed the trinket into a thousand pieces on an anvil of curiously wrought silver. Then he produced a sealed casket of water, in which swam a goldfish, and in the mouth of the fish he found the hoop of pearls. But the ring was not returned to its owner by the assistant. Instead, as the room rang with applause, the magician himself walked quietly down the aisle, formed by the parting of many silken skirts, and placed the ring on the girl's trembling white hand. Not even the man with the monocle noticed that the conjurer for an instant held the slim fingers in his with a pressure that threatened to crush them, nor did he dream that within the girl's palm lay another ring at which she dared not look.

Somewhat awkwardly she slipped on her long white glove. She was so deeply engaged in this operation that she did not even see the conjurer as he left the improvised stage. In the privacy of the boudoir hours later she held the conjurer's ring under the light of a blazing electrolier.

"Such an odd—I was almost going to say ugly—ring," she murmured as she slipped it on her finger and turned it this way and that. A diamond, an emerald, an amethyst, a ruby, another emerald, a sapphire and a topaz formed the brilliant half hoop. Then suddenly her cheeks burned crimson. She had read the story of the many colored gems. Their first letters spelled "dearest," the message of the man who had not forgotten his promises.

With her chocolate the next morning came an oddly shaped French gray envelope, bare of crest or monogram.

"Forgive my temerity of last night," ran the message within, "but for years I have been carrying that ring in my pocket, waiting for our meeting. They were the first gems I bought when success came my way, and I gathered them one by one, each perfect in its way and worthy the one woman in all the world. Yet last night I heard you were to marry the Earl of Warburton. If this is true, do what you will with the ring. If it is but an idle rumor, drop me a single word to the Hotel Cecil, 'Come.'"

Erskine laid aside the morning papers, heralding him as the fashionable world's new found idol, to answer a summons to the phone. The voice at the other end of the wire faltered, then grew firm and strong: "Come. I could not wait to write."

The Godless Church Basement.

A Methodist minister of the new school, who has come under the modern broadening influences which have failed as yet to touch the leading members of his flock in a small Ontario town, was telling his troubles to an understanding friend.

"Some of them are inconceivably narrow and restricted in their viewpoint," he said, "and especially the members of the executive board. We have in the church some twelve or fifteen young girls of whom any pastor and congregation might be proud—healthy, clean-minded, vigorous and talented girls in their teens. They wished to give a Christmas concert, and they asked me if they could have the use of the church instead of the Sunday school, which is in the basement. I promised to do what I could, and when I laid the matter before the board, I strongly recommended that their request be granted. But the members were dubious, and the chairman—a fine fellow, but one hundred years behind the times—would have none of it.

"'No,' he said; 'it must not be. We cannot let the church be used for these affairs. The church is a sacred edifice. Why, God himself is there! They must use the basement'."—Saturday Night.

WILD TURKEY PASSES.

King of Ontario's Game Birds Nearly Exterminated.

Sixty or seventy years ago, in the Niagara Peninsula and all up along Lake Erie's shore, wild turkeys were very plentiful, says [illegible] in Toronto Star Weekly. What happened to them? Shot out—trapped out—decimated; taking his size and rare flavor into consideration—once the King of Canadian game birds! A Government report of 1892 remarks: "It is now becoming very rare, and is found probably only in the counties of Essex and Kent, and even there it is only a matter of a short time when it must become extinct." From all we ever hear of its this is precisely what has happened. As far as this province is concerned the wild turkey has apparently flown to join the Great Auk and our storied Passenger Pigeon "sun-screens."

I remember meeting several people who had been familiar with the wild turkey around St. Catharines—those magnificent creatures of three and a half feet long and five feet in wing spread, often weighing over 20 pounds—and almost the exact counter-part in appearance of our highest valued barnyard fowls.

When the young wild turkeys were hatched, beside some close hidden log or in the seclusion of the deepest thickets, ten — sometimes fifteen — went to the brood. The mother bird made them the objects of her most constant solicitude and care, the little ones following close as she crept stealthily about among the densest available growth, where the grasses, plants, and fruits that they fed on most abounded. Seeds and buds, too, they loved, and could never resist such delicacies as beetles, tadpoles, and small lizards. The only audible sign of the advance would be the mother's low, tender piping. Any danger ahead, and — at her instant change of tone — every toddler of them disappeared, only to emerge at the cautious parent's soft cluck.

They were very rarely caught sight of on the ground, but a dog could always flush them into the lower branches of the nearest trees, which was where the guns could flame their deadly work. Oftener, however, "trapping" was resorted to, for the wild turkey was swift in addition to its wariness, and like as not ended its flight in the tallest tree instead.

The ways and means of trapping wild turkeys were as varied as the strategy of the farmer's boy was superficial or profound. Generally a measure of corn, bagged from dad's crib, and a hatchet were the only accessories asked for—or purloined without the asking. An hour or two in the bush was sufficient for the gathering together of enough poles and brush to erect a small "stockade fort," built square, and contracting towards the top, where a rough thatching completed the death chamber. Again the hand-axe was called into requisition; this time to facilitate the construction of a "sally port" or ditch-like entrance, of size ample to admit of the entrance of a single turkey. The trap was complete. To bait it was simplicity itself, for the turkey-trapper only laid a few tempting trains from his corn bag, starting at some distance away, and leading through the bush from opposite directions to the entrance of the pen, which also was strewn with the yellow grains that were so literally "a delusion and a snare." Once in the dark interior whither his love for maize had led him, all reason seemed to leave the big, wary bird at once, and he flew round like one possessed, wounding himself against the sides and narrowed top till incapable of remembering, or finding, the shadowed aperture through which he had entered. In such manner often an entire flock of turkeys used frequently to be deluded and captured.

STAGING GRAND OPERA.

Some of the Wonders of a Covent Garden Production.

An almost superhuman task is that of producing a new opera at Covent Garden, in London. Indeed, after a chat with Mr. Raymond Roze, whose English opera season at Covent Garden has just opened, it is evident that whatever popularity and fame may be achieved by the producer of successful opera at the world-famous theatre, it is earned twenty times over.

Only those associated with such a stage production have any idea of the work involved. Talking of his new opera, "Joan of Arc," Mr. Roze mentioned that its composition had occupied him for several years.

"Then," he continued, "when I decided to produce it at Covent Garden, along with other operas, the really arduous work began. There was the choosing of the chorus, for instance. From the beginning of May I have tried something like 1,600 odd voices in order to select the present chorus, which is 120 strong. In addition, of course, there is the trial of voices for the more important parts, and the keen competition to sing at Covent Garden may be gathered from the fact that ladies came from all parts of Great Britain to endeavor to secure an engagement when they heard that I was about to produce a new opera in London.

"For a couple of months the chorus rehearsed day after day, under the direction of the chorus master, Mr. Cecil Stock. His task has been a tremendous one, for he had to work for twelve and fourteen hours a day training the various groups of singers for their parts in 'Joan of Arc' and the other operas.

"Then, again, there was the task of providing the orchestra, which is nearly one hundred strong, with their band parts, and some idea of the work which this involved may be gathered from the fact that for four months I had four copyists working fourteen to fifteen hours a day in order to get through the work."

Even, however, when the chorus has been chosen and drilled, music completed for the band, and the principals have studied their parts at home, there is a vast amount of rehearsing to be done. The chorus has to be brought from the chorus-room, where they have only been accustomed to a piano accompaniment, and rehearsed on the stage with the orchestra. Then the principals rehearse with the orchestra, and afterwards the chorus and principals rehearse together. There are scenery rehearsals, lighting rehearsals, rehearsals for supers, and costume rehearsals, one after another until each particular part of the singing, acting, and setting is perfect and fits in with the other.

"It is obvious that in the case of a new opera like 'Joan of Arc,' the work of production is far greater than in the case of an old opera; for, in a new production, the producer must originate everything. For instance, armour, heraldry, and historical setting play a great part in this particular opera. Indeed, it provides the greatest show of heraldry ever seen on the stage. The armour alone," went on Mr. Roze, as we discussed this feature of the new opera, "has cost me close on £500, and in order to be absolutely correct in every detail in regard to the heraldry I have secured the services of Mr. G. Ambrose Lee, York Herald of Arms, who has revised all the details and ceremonials."

Strathcona's Helpmeet.

A Canadian, Lady Strathcona, who was Miss Isabella Hardisty, daughter of a Hudson Bay trader, met her husband-to-be when the latter—then plain Donald Smith, of Aberdeen—was a factor or overseer to the great Hudson Bay Co. Lord Strathcona was then 29, and his sphere of action was on the coast of Labrador. There the young couple were married according to the rites of Labrador. There was no priest nor church within 1,000 miles, and the marriage was a simple contract without ceremony. It was for this reason that when the High Commissioner became a peer in 1897 a remarriage was held to be necessary, and it was solemnized with the full ritual of the Church of England. The Labrador marriage was, however, ratified by special Act of Parliament. Side by side the young pair watched the growth and expansion of that great trading company—"the Honorable Company of Adventurers," founded by King Henry VIII.

And amid all the trials and struggles of the earlier days—days of loneliness and danger in the Great Lone Land, among the Indians and the traders—the young Scotsman always turned for encouragement and advice to the Canadian wife who was afterwards to share the honors that fell thick upon him.

GOVERNMENT REPLIES TO UNIONS BY MARTIAL LAW

Fierce Industrial War in South Africa Begins Between Railway Workers and the Officials—Necessity For Taking the Natives Back to Their Kraals at Enormous Expense is Chief Problem.

CAPE TOWN, South Africa, Jan. 14.—A general strike throughout South Africa was proclaimed last night by the Trades Federation and the Rand miners by a two-thirds majority voted to join in the movement. Government retaliation was swift. It took the form of the proclamation of martial law. This was the only step the authorities believed adequate to meet the situation, for the strike of the miners means not only the turning loose of the most turbulent spirits in the Rand, but raises the whole question of the position of the native workers. If the miners actually obey the strike order the Government will immediately take steps to send the natives under escort back to their kraals.

This means that about 200,000 natives must be marched back by road to their homes at enormous cost. It will be most difficult, after the end of the strike, to recruit them again. In brief, such a step would mean disaster for the Rand for many years.

Although official reports from Johannesburg show improvement in the train service, reports from other districts are less encouraging. In Natal the situation is one of great tension, and it is feared that the loyalty of the trainmen will not stand the strain much longer. An instance of the men's temper is shown by the action of an engine driver, who quitted his train on the Veldt and left the passengers stranded. Practically no information is at hand as to conditions in the Orange Free State, but improvement there is not considered probable.

From the Government's standpoint about the only ray of light yesterday was the assurance from the Indian leader, Gandni, that the passive resistance movement by the Indians against their grievances would be dropped during the present trouble.

The Union Government remains firm in its attitude. The Premier, Gen. Louis Botha, is said to have declared that he would "guarantee that with the end of the present crisis there would not be another workers' strike in South Africa for a generation."

Feeling runs high between the Government's supporters and the strikers, and the chance of mediation is practically hopeless. The Supreme Court has granted an application compelling the Government to show cause why the strike leaders should remain in prison.

Premier Botha has addressed a circular to the natives, advising them to obey explicitly the compound managers, assuring them of the fullest protection, and the circular seems to have had an excellent effect.

The strikers are now making strenuous attempts to bring about the running staffs of the Cape Colony railways, but the pickets are not allowed to approach within a hundred yards of the quarters where the railway employes are housed.

All strike meetings yesterday were remarkable for the moderate tone of the speakers, who advised the men to proceed with the organization of their own police force and keep the peace so well that the tremendous display of force by the Government would be made ridiculous. The Government is already threatening to institute a press censorship as strict as prevailed in war time.

COLD WAS SEVERE.

Eastern Canada Passed Through Record Touch of Zero Weather.

TORONTO, Jan. 14.—A cold spell which broke low thermometer records over a wide area in Eastern Canada and the United States, inflicting great suffering in Ontario yesterday. Inquiries at the Meteorological Bureau to-day elicited the information that the cold weather had spent its force and that for a few days at least milder temperature would prevail.

The mercury in Toronto touched its lowest point in 28 years with an official record of 22 below zero. Suffering throughout the city and suburbs was acute, and over fifty cases of more or less severe frostbite were treated in the hospitals. No deaths were reported, but two drivers fell from their wagons unconscious.

Kingston, Ottawa and Montreal were more severely visited by the cold with readings of 28 below. Quebec was 20 below, Port Arthur 22 below, Hamilton 18 below, London 8 below. In the Maritime Provinces heavy gales raged, while in the west the weather was exceptionally fair and mild.

LATEST DEATH TEST.

Based Upon the Action of Fluorescine Upon the Blood.

A remarkable new method of testing absolutely whether a dead person is really dead and thus avoiding the possibility of premature burial, just announced by Dr. Icard of Marseilles, has been received with great interest by his colleagues in Paris.

Dr. Icard's system depends on the question whether the blood is still in circulation or not and consists of a small subcutaneous injection of a small quantity of fluorescine, which is quite harmless but one of the most violent coloring matters known.

If there be the slightest motion of the blood the fluorescine, carried around the body, stains it a vivid golden yellow, while the eyes become a deep emerald green. If, on the other hand, there is no movement of the blood the coloring matter is not dispersed and produces no effect. Half an hour is stated to be enough to make this test.

The laity, while duly impressed by this neat method, are asking whether persons who are alive and undergo the dyeing process and who later recover will lose the golden yellow tint, and the green eyes, which, as Dr. Icard describes them, "are transformed into superb emeralds, set like jewels in their sockets."

It may be added, however, that fluorescine is one of the most transitory dyes known.—Paris Cor. Philadelphia Ledger.

IMPROVE THE DAIRY DURING THE WINTER

During these short winter days when many cows are dry, and the cows that are milking are not giving very much, would it not be wise to lay plans for improvement of the dairy herd? Seeing that the average household consumes a fair quantity of milk daily all through winter, and seeing that the ice cream trade is not by any means dead during the cold months, is it not a pity that there is not more good milk and sweet cream available? Current prices and good demand should prove an inducement to a larger number of producers to go in more strongly for winter dairying.

Some of the variations in yields are very marked; it is a common thing month after month to find groups of cows in four adjacent sections, averaging one hundred pounds of milk difference, for instance, from 450 by even stages of 100 up to 750 pounds. Many of these poor cows could easily be giving, under better conditions of feed and care, another three or four pounds of fat each, per month; after a year or two at cow testing the herds will probably average, as many already have done, considerably more of an increase than that, even as much as forty or forty-five pounds in the year EXTRA per cow. Those farmers who desire increases are invited to write to the dairy commissioner, Ottawa, to ascertain what assistance is given by the department of agriculture in organizing cow testing associations.

SIR JAMES LOST GROUND

Yesterday's Battle for Life was Against the Premier.

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—Sir James Whitney's condition did not show any considerable change yesterday. What little alteration there was, however, was unfavorable and those in attendance about his apartments kept a close watch. They did not anticipate any immediate result, but they admitted that he was losing slowly in the fight for life.

Both bulletins issued yesterday were of the same general effect. That of the forenoon was not hopeful, but the bulletin issued at nine o'clock at night was even more discouraging. It read:

"Sir James Whitney's condition tonight is more unfavorable. He has taken little nourishment to-day and is weaker."

For almost the first time since the party reached here four weeks ago, Dr. Pyne did not leave the apartments at the Manhattan Hotel, where his friend and patient lay ill.

Horace Wallis, the Premier's secretary, declared that the bulletins told the story all too clearly. He added, however, that there was nothing to indicate dissolution within a few hours.

"It is quite apparent that he is growing weaker," said Mr. Wallis, "but he is by no means exhausted."

"Is Biggins a shrewd business man?"

"He was until he got such a reputation for being a shrewd business man that everybody was afraid to do business with him."—Washington Star.

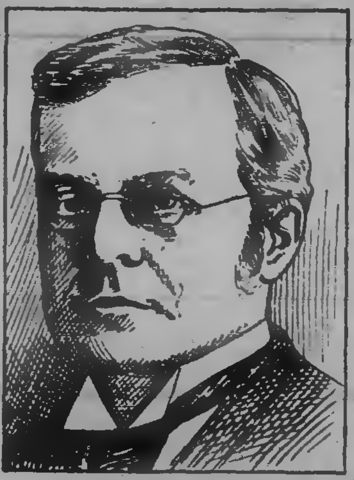
LAST IRISH SECRETARY

HISTORIC OFFICE MAY END WITH AUGUSTINE BIRRELL.

Man of Whom Least Is Heard In Connection With Home Rule Is Perhaps the Most Busily Engaged of All In the Present Struggle—He Is Chiefly Famous For His Literary Activities.

In these days, when there is so much talk for and against Home Rule for Ireland, there is one man behind the scenes who says little and does much. He is the man destined, so it would seem, to be the last Chief Secretary for Ireland in the British Cabinet, for when Home Rule is in force there will be no need of the office, in its present form at any rate. There is no more sincere Home Ruler than he, and few are the British politicians who have a better knowledge of the Irish people and their problems.

Mr. Birrell is a most benevolent looking man. He looks like one of the Cherryble brothers. But you mustn't think he is as grandmotherly as he looks. He resents with vehemence any attempt to misconstrue something he has said. When one of the eloquent Cecils misquoted him in the House, he at once interrupted the oration (in that lion's roar of a voice that is at once the terror and delight of his opponents) with, "I may be a fool, but I'm not such a silly fool as to have said anything of the sort." And he corrects his friends with the same bluffness. He never lends his name to a misconception, nor cares to be the peg for all the virtues with which Party seeks to drape its leaders. His education bill failed, probably, because it was a bad bill; but it would have stood a greater chance of success had its maker known more of the art of humbugging. Many other politicians would make capital out of an exterior so benevolent, says a writer in The London Sketch.



RT. HON. AUGUSTINE BIRRELL.

He has half succeeded in establishing his ferocity. "Have you ever known a female Birrell?" asks Lady Sybil Grant, as if the big voice rendered it futile for any woman to aspire to fill in politics the place that he fills. His wit, too, is of a masculine quality. Based upon fact, rather than fancy, it is the wit of the student; his jokes are cracked in the hard-headed school of logic. "Bob Logic," Sir Frank Lockwood used to call him; and it is in the company of lawyers and doctors and politicians that his humor flourishes.

Mr. Birrell's taste in books, while it is sane and thorough, has the same bias as his humor. His inclination is for the weighty syllables of the eighteenth century. No trend of fashion beguiles him from the things that naturally appeal to him. He loves his Dr. Johnson whatever befalls, and could go on editing him to the end of time. Charles Lamb, and Browning, and Charlotte Bronte are also among his authors, and he has read "the young men." But his preferences are easily tested by his copious quotations. In talk, in speech-making, in essay-writing, he is continually citing the heavy couplets, that lighter memories cannot carry, even if they care to.

The tasting sense is his only guide in literature; for him books, like apples, are either good or bad. He likes to tell of the child who ran to his mother, crying: "Why, here's a better book than the Bible," and so began a long series of adventures among masterpieces. That child, probably, was no other than A. B., for it is characteristic of him to break with Genesis, and start again at the beginning on his own account. One of his weaknesses has been a certain willingness to sneer at the reader who approaches literature in the religious, rather than the literary, mood. Mr. Birrell is irreverent, not necessarily toward religion, but towards certain classes of the religious. Birreligion becomes very much the same thing as irreligion when the Chief Secretary thinks he finds that the devout parent, with no sense of humor, uses his devotions much as he uses castor-oil.

City Solicitor Cuts Faggots.

The 700-year-old ceremony of the cutting of two faggots in connection with the rendering of quit rent services by the London City Corporation to the crown took place recently at the Law Courts.

Two faggots, about 12 inches in girth, were cut on the solicitors' table by the City Solicitor with a billhook and hatchet as quit rent for a piece of land known as the Moor, in Shropshire. Then he counted six horseshoes and sixty-one nails when the tenants of a forge in the parish of St. Clement Danes were called upon to render service.

Busy Windmill.

A windmill is employed in England to light a church and parsonage and pump the organ.

A genius is a crank who gathers in a goodly supply of coin.

ALBERT NIXON DEAD

Chief Operating Officer of Railway Commission Was 38 Years Old.

OTTAWA, Jan. 14.—Albert J. Nixon, chief operating officer of the Railway Commission, died suddenly at his home here a few minutes after arriving from his office, which he left while apparently in the best of health.

Deceased was born in Waterloo, Que., 38 years ago. At the age of 14 he entered the service of the G.T.R. system. He gradually won his way upwards, and at the time of his appointment to the Railway Commission in 1909 was superintendent of the G.T.R. at London, Ont. Previous to that he was for some time chief despatcher at Stratford, Ont. A widow and one child survives.

Demands of Railways Too High.

OTTAWA, Jan. 14.—At the Postoffice Department yesterday it was stated that no definite announcement could be made as yet respecting the establishment of parcels post. The difficulty in the way of establishing the service is said to be the exorbitant rates demanded by the railway companies.

WAR THIRSTY SOLDIERY

Reichstag Members Pour Vials of Wrath on Militarism.

STRASBURG, Germany, Jan. 14.—The Government was interpollated in the Chamber yesterday by the representatives of all parties on the Zabern affair, and in replying the Secretary of State, Baron Zorn von Bulach, studiously avoided criticising the military authorities. He denied that the trouble between the townspeople and the soldiers was due to any general hostility to the army. The excitement began, he said, with the thoughtless words of a young officer.

Deputy Knoepffer said that the recent trial had turned topsy-turvy all notions of law and justice. The Government, he declared, was unable to cope with the powerful military power.

Deputy Imbs, Socialist, said: "The result of the Zabern affair means the triumph of a war-thirsty soldiery."

Borden May Tour.

OTTAWA, Jan. 14.—Premier Borden has assured some of his western friends that if it is at all possible he will make a tour of the west next summer after the prorogation of Parliament. He has not made any definite plans yet, but he has had many invitations and everything depends upon how far into the summer the session will last.

The Premier, if he goes, will be accompanied by Hon. Geo. E. Foster, Hon. L. P. Pelletier and Hon. W. T. White.

Bank Merger Proceeding.

VANCOUVER, B.C., Jan. 14.—It was announced at the annual meeting of the Bank of Vancouver yesterday that a proposal for amalgamation with another bank is proceeding. It was unanimously decided that the matter would be dealt with by a full meeting of the shareholders on March 15. No announcement was made of the identity of the bank with which negotiation was proceeding, but it was thought that it was the Royal.

COAL PRICES DROPPED STILL FURTHER BY FITZGERALD

Better Buy Now at These, the Lowest Made: $1.00 Per Ton Below Regular Prices

I propose to meet any competition that is put up by any dealer and meet it in a decisive way. Consumers are urged to send in orders at once.

It will pay to buy and burn coal at these prices. Don't delay. We deliver the best thoroughly screened coal, first quality Lehigh Valley Coal, every load.

	Regular Price	Fitzgerald's Price
Egg Coal	$8.00	$7.25
Stove Coal	8.25	7.25
Nut Coal	8.50	7.50
Pea Coal	7.00	6.00

I claim that the prices heretofore asked for coal have been reasonable, considering the expenses of the business. Below I give a statement of facts in connection with the cost of handling coal in this city. One ton of coal of 2,000 lbs.

1 ton nut (at Buffalo)	$5.36
Freight from bridge	$1.25
State export tax	.10
Total cost on track	$6.71
Handling cost in this city	$1.35
	$8.06
Selling price to public	$8.50
Leaving profit	44c. per ton

COST OF ECONOMICAL COAL HANDLING
(From the Coal Trade Journal.)

In answer to an inquiry with reference to the net profit per ton on coal we state that the profit can fairly be assumed by deducting the following items of expenses, these being based upon a fairly equipped yard, up-to-date generally:

Advertising	$0.03	per ton
Breakage, lost in transit, culm	.15	" "
Dumping in pocket	.01½	" "
Office and general expenses	.12½	" "
Insurance and taxes	.03	" "
Yard superintendent and employes	.13	" "
Interest on investment or rent	.10	" "
Bad debts and equipment depreciation	.02	" "
Office employes	.15	" "
Owner's salary	.15	" "
Interest on stock carried	.02	" "
Average cost of delivery	.50	" "
Total handling cost to the dealer, per ton	$1.42

The public may ask how I can afford to sell coal at the prices I now make. I am selling the coal at cost on track and only adding the cost of cartage to consumers (70c. per ton.) Overhead expenses will be charged to other lines of business.

Fishing Steamers Lost.

BERLIN, Jan. 14. — Two large fishing steamers, the Lloyd and the Porelly, which left Geestemunde in the middle of December for Iceland, have not been reported since, and their owners, fearing they may have foundered or been frozen in the fjords of northern Iceland, yesterday requested the Admiralty to send a German cruiser in search of them.

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—From Paris comes the news that at last the name of Sarah Bernhardt has been added to the roll of fame of the Legion of Honor. FLOCKING TO THE CAPITAL

Members of Parliament Arriving for Opening of the House.

OTTAWA, Jan. 14.—Members of Parliament are arriving on every train. A number of western members including Messrs. McNutt of Saltcoats and Cruise of Dauphin, came in yesterday, and last night there arrived Messrs. Stanfield, Rhodes, Emmerson, Nicholson, and other members from the Maritime Provinces. The latter were accompanied by Dr. Clark of Red Deer, who has been holding a series of meeting in Nova Scotia. Yesterday morning Messrs. Henderson, Morphy and Guthrie of the Ontario delegation, arrived.

The incoming Liberal members, especially from the west, are anxiously enquiring about Hon. William Pugsley, who was reported as ill. It was stated yesterday by Hon. H. R. Emmerson, that although Mr. Pugsley would not be here for the opening, that he expected to take an active part in the work of this session.

WESTERN ONTARIO DAIRYMEN MEET

Exhibition is Open and Annual Convention Begins To-day.

STRATFORD, Jan. 14.—With the exhibits of butter numbering twice as many as in any previous year, and those of cheese fully up to the mark, the judging in the 47th annual convention of the Dairymen's Association of Western Ontario was begun yesterday in the market shelter. Butter in prints and in boxes, and cheeses in varying sizes, were piled on tables running the length of the spacious hall. All day long dairymen flocked into town.

J. D. Muir, of Ingersoll, will act as judge in place of I. W. Steinhoff, and J. H. Scott instead of Geo. E. Booth. These are the only changes, and excepting them the announcements in the program will hold good, the butter being judged by F. Dean, J. B. Muir and James Biffin; the cheese by W. W. Gray, J. H. Scott and Robert Johnston. Each will score independently and the average of three scores will be taken.

An excellent exhibit of demonstration butter was noticed from New Zealand, Denmark, United States and the Province of Alberta. This feature is new and aims to give butter makers an opportunity to make profitable comparisons.

The official opening comes with the address of President S. E. Facey today.

BELGIUM FLOODED

Northern Districts Now Suffering From Inundations.

BRUSSELS, Jan. 14.—The rivers in northern Belgium are rising rapidly, in spite of the cold weather, and threaten to exceed the devastation done by the floods in the provinces of Liege and Namur. The River Scheldt is six feet over the normal mark, causing the suspension of a large number of factories and brickyards.

The Rivers Lys and Dender have overflowed, and converted the whole country between Alost and Grammont into a lake. Villages, roads and bridges are submerged.

The canal dam near Malines threatens to burst in several places. If this happens, dozens of villages and farms will be overwhelmed.

Unusual Operation Will Succeed.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Jan. 14.—In an effort to cure a case of paresis, serum was applied directly to a diseased brain here, and surgeons declare that the operation, the first of its kind in this country, will be successful. The operation has been performed three times in France, and in two of the cases there satisfactory results have been obtained.

The operation was on a man fifty-one years old. Two small holes were bored in his skull, one on each side of the brain. A serum obtained by inoculating a rabbit with an arsenic compound was then injected.

The richer a man is the richer he wants to be.

Isolation of Kashmir Is Ended by a Kingston Engineer.

The far-famed Vale of Kashmir, in northern India, is to be brought into touch with the outer world by means of the longest aerial cableway in the world — 75 miles across the Himalayas, constructed by Lieut.-Col. A. J. de Lotbiniere, a Canadian military engineer, formerly of Kingston, and son of the late Sir Henry Joly de Lotbiniere. Engineers have long tried to solve the problem of adequate transportation across this mountain barrier. It is crossed at present by a road 200 miles long, a wonderful piece of engineering, completed in 1887. Fifty-four men were killed by falling boulders during its construction, and owing to the presence of these huge loose rocks in the soft soil, the building of a railroad—even a light electric road—has been pronounced impracticable. There is nothing for it but to swing a cable high in air over the treacherous mountain-chain.

At the suggestion of Lt.-Col. de Lotbiniere, whose services had been lent to the Kashmir Government as State Engineer, it was decided to cause investigation of the feasibility of an aerial cableway, and, if possible to enter on this project. This survey has been completed and has demonstrated to the satisfaction of the firm and of the Kashmir Government that the scheme is practicable and will not be unduly expensive. It is anticipated that the cost will amount to about $1,500,000.

The cable way will be constructed in big spans of about 800 yards each, with fixed cables upheld by iron pillars or towers of latticework, some of which will have to be 100 feet high. There will be separate sections every five miles and separate cables, of course, for outgoing and incoming freight, which will be about nine feet apart and with a diameter of 1 1-2 inches each. From these cables steel cars will be suspended and conveyed, about 30 to every mile, and holding 335 to 450 pounds each of freight. These cars will be carried over great gorges and precipitous hills, and in some instances there will be a sheer drop underneath them of 1,200 feet. The transfer of cars from section to section will be automatically accomplished by revolving drums which will effect release of the cars and their renewed gripping to the hauling ropes of the next section. On account of the difficulty of expansion and contraction from heat and cold, the cables will be equipped with a complicated system of springs anchored with tremendous weights to make them of the same length all the year round. The cableway will follow the gorge of the Jhelum river most of the way, which it will frequently cross and recross, accordingly as the spans can be most conveniently constructed, and the towers be located where there can be safety against slipping and dangers from falling boulders. The great advantage of the aerial cableway will be that all dangerous parts of the road can be dodged and the cars moved from hill to hill and over gorges instead of at the side of them, the towers being based at places where there can be no danger of slips.

"It will not be the intention at first to use the aerial caibleway for transport of passengers, but only for freight. However, if the cableway is found to work with perfect safety and no accidents occur, it is likely that within a year or two it will be equipped with cars suitable for passengers."

Kindness Nets Him $38,000.

An act of kindness, performed a year ago, has brought a handsome reward to Edward Goode, a chauffeur, living at 90 St. Catharine street, Montreal, in the shape of a legacy of $38,000.

A year ago, Goode was in the U. S. army, at Douglas, Arizona. Running from a sham fight in the course of which he had become separated from his companions, Goode encountered an elderly man who was lying at the side of the road, bleeding profusely from a cut in the head and injuries to his legs, received when thrown off a runaway horse. The soldier, after staunching the bleeding, carried him on his back to the nearest house, a distance of three miles.

The old man was A. Jameson, a wealthy rancher. Shortly afterwards Goode left the army and came to Canada, after paying a farewell visit to Jameson, who was still in the hospital with his injuries. Some time ago Goode received a visit from an old companion in arms, George Marcean, who brought with him a clipping from the Douglas Conserv..., containing an account of the death of Jameson and telling of the disposition of his property. A few days later Goode received a letter from an attorney confirming the legacy.

Water Will Cover Village.

The little village of Saint Charles, Que., on the Saguenay river, is bound to disappear if Col. B. A. Scott succeeds in his scheme of damming the big river at the head of the famous Rapids named Grande Descharge.

Col. Scott, who has already done much for the industrial and farming development of the region, has succeeded in organizing a syndicate of English, French and Canadian capitalists to start one of the most progressive paper industries of the province. Over $4,000,000 will be spent in damming the river and in the erection of a pulp and paper plant.

Study in Black and White.

Acting on the principle probably that a fair exchange is no theft, some one is taking Mr. Dan Wilton's white hens from his home at the town waterworks and is leaving black biddies in their place. As the trading operations have been going on steadily for some time and Mr. Wilton's flock is gradually changing from white to black, he is wondering what object this freak artist can have in trying to change the color of his fowl.—Walkerton Herald and Times.

TRICKY BURGLARS

Quick of Wit and Full of Resource in Time of Danger.

DARING IN EVADING CAPTURE.

Ingenious Schemes Used by Housebreakers, When Detected In the Act of Robbery, to Baffle Their Pursuers and Escape the Clutches of the Law.

The wise burglar considers not only how he may enter, but also how he may escape. He has the whole thing planned out before embarking on his venture, and nothing is left to chance.

When he is at work in a room he usually locks the door on the inside, or if there is no lock he simply props a chair with its back hard under the door handle, thus making it quite impossible for any one to come in upon him unexpectedly.

Sometimes his ordinary precautions fail, and he is driven to take others on the spur of the moment. These are often of the most extraordinary character and may end in doing serious damage to life and property.

An instance in point occurred not long ago at Hopwood, near Redditch. A tradesman's wife was alone in the house at night when she was aroused by a creaking sound. Opening her eyes, she saw a rough looking man in the room. Evidently he knew his way about, for he tiptoed to a chest of drawers and took out a small cash box which held a sum of about $75. With great presence of mind the lady refrained from screaming. She waited until the man was out of the room, then sprang up and hastily put on a dressing gown.

Then she ran out, but on gaining the top of the stairs was met by a blaze of flame. The thief, who had evidently heard her get out of bed, had snatched up a pile of newspapers in the passage below and, heaping them on the stairs, set fire to them.

It was impossible to pass the barrier of fire, and, though fortunately help came in time to put the flames out, the burglar got clean away.

Even more cunning was the ruse of a thief who raided a house on Woburn street, London. The tenant, hearing a noise outside his bedroom door, jumped up and discovered that his watch and chain were missing. Without waiting to put on slippers, he bolted downstairs and was just in time to see the thief rush out of the front door. He gave chase. The thief glanced around, saw that his pursuer was barefooted and, taking a bottle from his pocket, flung it forcibly down upon the pavement in front of the other.

The householder naturally pulled up short, just in time to save his feet, while the burglar, turning sharply down a side alley, disappeared from view.

The latter case calls to mind one which happened in Devonport or, rather, in Stoke, which is the residential suburb of that town. A naval officer was aroused about 3 a. m. on a winter morning by hearing a slight clatter downstairs. He picked up a sword and went down and located the sound as having come from the dining room.

There was a good deal of silver there, and he at once made up his mind that burglars were after it. He tried the door, but found it fastened from the inside, so went out of the front door and rushed around to the window.

But the thieves had foreseen this maneuver. As he reached it one of them flung a handful of pepper into his face, and as he reeled back, choked and half blinded, they both jumped out and took to their heels.

One of the smartest tricks ever played by a burglar was in a house in the suburbs of Worcester. The man broke in at night and, after packing up some silver below, ventured upstairs to see what he could find. The master of the house spotted him and called his son.

They located Mr. Sykes in a first floor front room. His shadow was plainly visible on the blind, outlined apparently by a candle or lantern. The father kept watch outside in the front, while the son went for a policeman. When he returned with the officer the shadow was still plainly visible. But when they went up and entered the room, behold there was nothing but an effigy made with pillows and a suit of clothes!

The intruder, seeing that he had been discovered, had rapidly constructed this to personate himself and had then cleared off by means of a rope hanging from a back bedroom window.—Pearson's Weekly.

Grattan's Parliament.

Grattan's parliament was so named from the fact that it had been largely brought about through the tireless energy of Henry Grattan. Its independence was declared by act of parliament in England in the year 1782. It came to an end by the passing of the act of union in July, 1800. In 1806 Grattan said of his parliament: "I have a parental recollection of it. I sat by its cradle. I followed its hearse."—New York American.

WATERPROOFING CLOTH.

Wiley Got the Idea From an Accident in a Dyehouse.

The waterproofing of cloth so universal today was unknown twenty-five years ago. In 1890 Thomas Fearnley Wiley of Bedford, England, took out the first patent for the process known as waterproofing cloth.

He got the idea from an accident in a Yorkshire dyehouse. Certain goods had been wrongly dyed, and the workmen were directed to wash out the surplus logwood color with alum. After the goods had been dried the improvement was so marked that the dyer ordered a repetition of the alum washing. The cloth was sent to the wetting machine, but the workmen found that they could not wet it. It passed through the water and came out dry. Thus was the discovery made that cloth could be waterproof and yet remain porous.

The process used today is as follows: Cloths intended for rainproofing are first freed from grease and are then saturated in specially constructed machines with the clear liquor obtained in adding together solutions of pure sulphate of alumina and acetate of lead. The lead is precipitated out, and the acetate of alumina is dried in the fabric. The cloth undergoes further treatment with wax, and in one system wax is applied frictionally from a block under the pressure of a pneumatic roller. Under the method more generally used the wax, or mixture of waxes, is melted by heat and applied in an infinitesimally fine film by the action of a ductor roller.—New York World.

DECCENDED TO ROYALTY.

Lament of Bernadotte, Who Was Once a Marshal of France.

Jean Baptiste Jules Bernadotte, one of Napoleon's marshals and king of Sweden and Norway, was born at Pau, France, on Jan. 26, 1764, and died in Stockholm on March 8, 1844. He was the son of a lawyer and was educated for that profession. In 1780 he enlisted in the Royal marines and subsequently took part and achieved historic distinction in the French revolution. He worked his way up until he became one of Napoleon's marshals, and he ended by being not only the ruler, but the popular sovereign, of Sweden, whose language he really never mastered. With extreme intelligence and in this imitating Napoleon himself he surrounded himself with a kind of royal medieval atmosphere.

He always remained a Frenchman at heart, and, though he soon ceased to be on even friendly terms with the man to whom he owed everything, the news of Napoleon's overthrow at Waterloo filled him with grief. He was then still only Prince of Sweden and did not proclaim himself king until February of 1818, when Louis XVIII. actually found himself compelled to send an envoy to bear his congratulations to a brother sovereign who had begun life as one of the humblest subjects of Louis XVI. He lived long enough to see Napoleon's remains taken to Paris from St. Helena. Commenting on this, he exclaimed:

"To think that I was once a marshal of France and that now I am only king of Sweden!"

Counting by Knots.

It was the custom of the Aztecs to keep their accounts by means of strings. The numbers were indicated by knots. A single knot was ten, two single knots twenty, and so on. The hundreds were indicated by double knots. The color of the string indicated what the numbers referred to. Soldiers were red, gold yellow, silver white and corn green. This method is still in use on the sierras of the Argentina, where the herdsmen keep tale of their charges in a similar way. Several strands depend from one, the first of these strands being reserved for bulls, the next for cows, the milk and dry being differentiated; the next for sheep, and so on. Knots were probably among the first methods of man to record figures—the knot or the mark on a bit of stick. In the English hop gardens the tallyman (generally the local schoolmaster) goes around with the tally and his mark, and the most civilized Chicagoan still ties a knot in his handkerchief when he is asked "to be sure to remember."—Chicago News.

Tennyson and the Horse.

Tennyson once arrived at Haslemere station carrying a parcel of books, and as his own carriage had not arrived to meet him he was glad to accept the offer of a lift home. Going up the steep hill to Blackdown, Tennyson, with his characteristic consideration for animals, suggested that they and the books were too heavy for the pony to drag. The two men therefore got out and walked for some distance in front of the trap, until they discovered that the books had dropped out. The owner of the pony asked Tennyson to stand at the animal's head while he went back for the books. These he found a hundred yards or more down the hill, and on his return he found the pony had been restive, but had quickly become quiet. Knowing that it disliked strangers, he wondered how Mr. Tennyson had kept it quiet. What was his surprise to learn that the poet had managed the affair by holding a watch close to the animal's ear.

"BULLS" ON THE PLATFORM.

How Premier Borden Helped the Chairman Out of a Hole.

Shortly after Premier Borden was elected to office he was visiting one of the rural constituencies of his native Province of Nova Scotia. The president of the township Conservative Association was authorized to extend a welcome on behalf of the association to the First Minister. He decided that things should be done differently than usual, and instead of reading a formal and stereotyped address of congratulation, he proposed that a few appreciative words, spoken orally, would serve the purpose much better and appear as if they came straight from the heart. Mr T—— intended to commit what he had to say to memory, but memory plays queer pranks at times when we desire to place most reliance upon it. President T—— got on very well, but the ringing applause and the size of the crowd somewhat shattered his equilibrium. Thinking the people were anxious to hear Mr. Borden, he hastily concluded his "few remarks," after paying a high tribute to the Conservative statesman and the signal success which he had attained at the polls.

"But why go on," he added. "You, sir! have heard of much of late of your fine qualifications, dignity, sound judgment and splendid ability for the office to which you have just been elected by the people of Canada, that if I continue with such a recital you will actually begin to think there is really something in what I am saying."

The audience caught the point and laughed uproariously, but the chairman could see no joke in this reference, and nervously began to look around, wondering whether his collar had come loose, somebody had stolen away his seat or pinned a comic picture on the back of his coat.

Mr. Borden quickly came to the rescue and warmly thanked the gathering for the hearty greetings extended by the chairman, and then to relieve the tense situation and place that individual somewhat at ease, told of a distinguished resident of a certain Western city who was returning to the scenes of his boyhood. The people had decided to get up a demonstration in his honor. The former citizen was plainly touched by the tribute of respect, and being desirous of showing that he still felt thoroughly at home and not above the common folk, started his reply: "For this splendid and whole-hearted welcome I am grateful to you from the bottom of my heart, ladies and gentlemen—but no! I will not call you that, for I know you all too well here to greet you by such a title."

This little story broke the ice and made the chairman, who committed the previous "bull," feel more at home for the rest of the evening, but he declares that next time he will read an address of welcome to any political magnates.

Don't Be a Jack-of-All-Trades

The day of the "Jack-of-all-trades" is passed. This is the time of the specialist, of the man qualified to do some one thing to the queen's taste—which means to the satisfaction of a critical boss. No concern can afford to place a high-grade equipment in the hands of low-grade men. Competition forces employers to meet skill with skill.

To make it short, have you any special equipment? Is there anything in you to command big pay?

Every month upwards of 400 I. C. S. students write to Scranton to tell of positions secured or bettered—of earnings increased and prospects brightened—through study of I. C. S. Courses. Last month the number was 416. The letters come from every section and from all sorts and conditions of men. Some of the writers live in Ontario—some live in British Columbia; some began with no more education than ability to read and write—some were college graduates; some had a good deal of spare time—some had to figure on every spare minute; some were well-to-do—some were obliged to save the pennies.

If you are a "live wire"—if you wish to make sure of the job you want—there is an I. C. S. way for you. To find out all about it without cost, mark and mail the coupon. Doing so will commit you to nothing, place you under no obligation, and may prove to be the turning point in your career.

PETES BACKED UP BY CLEVER WORK BETWEEN THE FLAGS DEFEAT OSHAWA BY TWO GOALS

Oshawa Fought Hard for Lead in First Half But Janes' Work Stopped Them

SCORE WAS 4-2

The Peterboro Intermediate O. H. A. seven moved up a notch in the battle for district honors, by defeating Oshawa at home last night, with a score of four to two. It was a great game of hockey—a merry battle from the moment Referee Bill Hancock dropped the puck to the ice for the getaway, until the gong sounded for the finish.

The win gives Peterboro the leadership of the district, with three wins and one loss. Another victory with Belleville here on Thursday night, will give the locals a good margin.

Great Was Janes

Oshawa took the only tally of the first half, but the homesteaders deserved more. They were sending shot after shot at Bert Janes and it is due to his splendid work between the nets that Oshawa did not obtain a big lead. The youngster stopped the puck coming from every angle, and yet the net was first bulged quite easily. The rubber was travelling slowly and Janes evidently thought that Bradshaw had it marked. Instead the disc got away from the big defence players and rolled on into the nets.

Lineup Changed

In the second half Denison was sent back to the defence, Bradshaw to right wing and Captain Giroux worked at rover. The change was one for the better. The Petes had become accustomed to the smaller ice space and after ten minutes of hard play, Maurice Park beat the Oshawa citadel with one of those quick long shots which have made him a dangerous man.

With the score tied, the Petes went at it still harder and Park got another shot at the nets, the puck going over behind and coming back, hit the goaltender and dropped into the nets. Oshawa protested against the tally being allowed, but they lost the decision.

For the remainder of the game, the teams fought on an equal footing, each getting a goal, making the score at the finish, 4—2.

The game demonstrated the fact that Fred Denison does better work on the defence. He was far more effective in the second half as he was able to get away and rush the puck to the other end of the rink. Bradshaw was responsible for a lot of good hockey at right wing.

The teams:

Peterboro—Goal, Janes; defence, Bradshaw, Bond; rover, Denison; centre, Park, wings, Kelly Giroux.

Oshawa—Goal, R. Fair; defence, Freeman, Quinn; rover, W. Fair; centre, Smith; wings, Williams, Morphy.

Referee—W. Hancock.

DOUBLE HEADER IN THE JUNIOR CITY LEAGUE

Y.M.C.A. Meet Wanderers and Alerts Battle With Exploits

The games in the Junior City League should prove a big attraction tonight at Brock street rink. The Y. M.C.A. and Wanderers clash at 8, and the Alerts and Boston Exploits at 9. It is rumored that Richardson will be on the line-up for the "Y" and although nothing definite is known, it is stated that the Wanderers are considerably strengthened. If the Wanderers wish to stay in the running they'll have to take a fall out of the "Y" boys to-night, and as the same thing holds good with the Alerts, two fast games are expected.

BASEBALL

(Detroit Journal.)

Who will be next to pass away among the three real veterans of the national pastime—Bobby Wallace, Nap. Lajoie or Hans Wagner. Maybe this year will mark the passing of another of these athletes, Bobby Wallace, the shortstopper for the Browns, having quit pastiming regularly last season. Will it be Lajoie or Wagner who will toss up the sponge in the coming campaign, or will both of them star as they have in years gone by.

Of the two, Wallace, has been in Scotland, started in 1895, and until the season of 1913 was always at his accustomed place at short, although he could play third equally as well. At short, Bobby was considered for many seasons the peer of them all in the American league.

But Wallace has passed. His days of starring on the ball field are over. True, he will not be turned over to a minor league club for some time, but as an active participant he is through. But his memory and the great plays he made while operating between second and third will live long in the memory of baseball followers not only in St. Louis, but also in other cities around the circuit.

The youngster of the trio, figuring the length of service, is Wagner. Year in and year out it is stated that Hans is all in; that he will be unable to put up the same article of baseball he did the year before or in years gone by. But always when the final whistle blows, this same Hans Wagner is on deck starring as brightly as he ever did. From the way Wagner works, one would not imagine that he had seen 17 seasons of active service in the great and glorious pastime of baseball.

PUCKERINGS FROM PUCK

The Midland Club has put in a defence to the protest entered by the Toronto R. and A. A., against Hobe Armstrong, and which will be heard at the O. H. A. Executive meeting at The Telegram office this afternoon.

APPRECIATE ACTION OF THE HOCKEY CLUB

The thanks of the Management Committee for the Florence Hinkle concert on Friday night, have been conveyed to Secretary Bond of the local O.H.A. Club, for the action of the club in changing the date of the Belleville-Peterborough game from Friday to Thursday. Mr. Gliddon left a number of complimentary tickets with Mr. Bond, for officers and players of the club.

Rich New Fishing Grounds.

That a rich new fishing ground is afforded by the waters of Hudson Strait is set forth in a report to the Marine and Fisheries Department by Dominion Fishery Officer Thomas Tanner. Its salmon catch particularly may yet rival that of British Columbia. The area is practically a virgin one and large supplies of valuable fish could be taken. The difficulties are the sparse population and lack of fishermen and the very short season. With Port Burwell as a centre trawling could be done during eight or twelve weeks. There is no limit to the quantity of codfish, a few loads of which are garnered by Newfoundland vessels which come up every year. The weather is perfect for fishing, but not so favorable for drying them on the spot. The catches, however, can be salted and taken home to the curing places, just as is the practice of Lunenburg fleet. As this is deep-sea fishing, no doubt a bounty could be authorized during the first few years when the industry is in the first stages of its development. The sum of $160,000 per annum is available.

ERIE NOT OVERJOYED AT PROSPECTS OF BERTH IN THE CANADIAN LEAGUE

ERIE, Jan. 14.—Erie is not enthusiastic in casting its lot with the Canadian League during the coming season, and may present a claim to Secretary Farrell, of the National Commission, requesting him to reverse the Canucks to invade this territory.

Erie fans feel that the Canadian League is not fast enough, and for this reason directors of the local club are not enthusiastic, feeling the shekels would not come very fast to the box office.

If, however, George H. O'Neill desires to place the Guelph franchise here gratis, and Erie can do not better, this city may take a fling at the Canadian for at least a season to see how it goes.

Erie Will Not Pay

Mr. O'Neill wired Thomas J. O'Connor, of the local club, today, stating that he would be in Erie Thursday, to go over the situation with him.

Mr. O'Connor says that if Mr. O'Neill wants to turn the Guelph franchise over to Erie, well and good, but the Erie owners will refuse to pay anything for the franchise. The directors of the local club also desire to retain control of the club, turning over to Mr. O'Neill his share of the profits at the close of the season. It is the belief here that if Erie should join the Canadian League it would considerably strengthen that circuit, as this city is considered the best minor league baseball city in the United States.

Erie has made application for admittance to the Tri-State League, which plans to take in two more clubs and take a new name.

Fans here much prefer the Tri-State to the Canadian, and should the Tri-State take in Erie, a merry little baseball war is sure to follow over Secretary Farrell's decision.

WADDELL RINK WON IN GILLIES' TROPHY EVENT

Local Rink Was Successful This Morning — All Peterboro Rinks Met Victory in Yesterdays' Games

Canadian Press Despatch... ..

Lindsay, Jan. 14.—In the preliminary round for the Gillies Trophy this morning, the rink skipped by R. M. Waddell, of Peterborough, defeated McCamus of Keene, sixteen to eleven.

In the first games yesterday for the Flavelle trophy, Laing, Peterboro, defeated Nicol, Norwood, and Matthews, Peterboro, defeated Broad Bobcaygeon. The rinks and scores:

Norwood	Peterboro
B. Naibel	F. Hughes
H. P. Kemp	A. Kay
A. J. McKelvie	A. Moore
H. Nichols	W. Laing
Skip.........5	Skip 16
Bobcaygeon	Peterboro
J. Conway	P. Fitzgerald
W. T. C. Boys	H. Evans
B. Walker	R. C. Hicks
E. J. Broad	F. Matthews
Skip.......10	Skip 11

Fitzgerald, Peterborough, won from McCamus, Keene, by 14—4, and Waddell, Peterborough, had a 7 shot margin over Finlay, Norwood.

In the preliminary competition for the Flavelle Trophy, the following rinks defaulted:—

Stevenson, Peterborough, to Beck, of Brampton; Boucher, Peterborough, to Gillies, of Brampton; Little, of Scarboro, to Neale, of Claremont; Douglas, Hamilton Thistles to Moore, of Keene; McWilliams, of Toronto to Sturgeon of Peterborough; Galloway, of Beaverton to Dobson, of Cannington.

Skip Lang's quartette was the only Peterborough rink to play at night and the local curlers defeated a Lindsay rink, skipped by Thomas by 15—11.

Probably the only Italian curler in Canada is Chas. Mattaini of Fergus Curling Club, who are attending the bonspiel. Mons. Mattaini plays lead for one of Fergus' best rinks, skipped by J. G. Wilson and is spoken of in high terms by his fellow curlers as a good sport and amiable companion.—Lindsay Post.

It Was Up to Dobbin.

A cultured daughter, home from boarding school, had just been driving the fat and antiquated family horse, from which all speed and spirit had departed some fifteen years before.

"Mamma," she called daintily—though in sudden alarm—"I can't leave Dobbin standing, can I?"

The matter of fact mother replied briskly: "You can. Unless he prefers to sit."—New York Mail.

Hamar's First Venture.

The first time Hamar Greenwood, M.P. in the British Commons, displayed his propensity for doing the unexpected thing was while he was an undergraduate of the Toronto University. When the long vacation came along he went on a summer tour playing the heavy villain in a barnstorming theatrical company who were presenting "Down the Slope, or the Slippery Road to Ruin." The company went down the slope and Hamar was stranded up at Goderich until a Toronto friend sent him $5.

They're Easy in Guelph.

A Guelph newspaper reporter, in looking for material for a story, started to pass a bogus 25-cent piece on the stores around town, afterwards informing the dealer that he had done so, and getting the coin back. Before he was through he passed the bogus coin in no less than eighteen places, always sliding it across the counter to avoid letting its sound be heard.

Training the Royal Horses.

Every morning at about 11 o'clock a procession headed by two chestnut horses in charge of grooms, followed by a detachment of guards with their bands playing vigorously, a strong force of police and a crowd of civilians, leaves St. James' Palace, London, and proceeds through St James' Park to the Guards' headquarters close to Buckingham Palace.

The two chestnut horses are the chief centre of interest, for this is their daily lesson in equine deportment. Some day they will figure proudly in state pageantry and they are being taught to carry themselves with becoming dignity and quietness.

For them the chosen drummers of the various guards' bands beat fiercely on their drums, while the pipers pipe their shrillest notes. This is the ordeal of noise, and at first the two chestnut horses took exception to it. But after several weeks of it they have become indifferent, and although the pipers exert themselves to their utmost both horses now have an air of well-bred boredom.

Judge Taylor, of the Edmonton District Court, recently put his large touring car to one of the oddest uses which the west has yet experienced. Operating printing presses and driving farm machinery are by this time quite common emergency services for the modern motor car. Judge Taylor now establishes it as a legal and very convenient device for criminal hearings. Recently the Royal Mounted Police arrested a man, who pleaded guilty and asked a summary trial. Anxious to clear their docket of the case the police communicated with Judge Taylor, who in turn found that he would be unable to reach Port Saskatchewan in time for the trial. However, he compromised by offering to meet the police and their prisoner on the highway bordering the district. The prisoner was taken to the scene, and when the judge chugged up in his motor the forms of a criminal proceeding were carried out in proper detail. Judge Taylor decided the case, sitting in the tonneau, registering his sentence in a pocket diary for transference to the court record. Then the police saluted, mounted their horses, and dashed off to the nearest jail, while the judge calmly cranked up and hustled back to Edmonton, where he arrived in time to open the fall session of the court.

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

SUITS TO BE TIGHT FITTING

Gentlemen's Overcoats Will Also be Like Ladies' Garb.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 14.—Men's outer clothing next fall, excepting overcoats, wil be of light weight textures and tight fitting, and cloths will be of modest, and in color and design what art critics call low key.

This was the decision reached by the delegates to the convention here of the National Association of Clothing Designers.

But the overcoat will more nearly approach rivalry with women's garb. Plaids and rough cloth will be used. Sleeves will be on the order of the kimono; also, there will be strap loops in front through which the wearer can thrust his arms when he wishes to use the blanket for a cloak. This will then be allowed to hang with careless draping effect over the shoulders.

DEATH OF AN OLD WARRIOR

Simon Buckner was Last of the Confederate Generals.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Jan. 14.—Simon Bolivar Buckner, the last of the Generals of the Confederate Army, died in his 90th year. He passed away in the log cabin in which he was born.

It was truly the "fortune of war" that brought about a dramatic feature of the war of rebellion when General Ulysses Grant insisted upon "an unconditional and immediate surrender" from Buckner, who in 1862 was one of the Confederate commanders of Fort Donaldson, which Grant had surrounded. Grant and Buckner had been class-mates at West Point military academy and comrades in the Mexican war of 1847-8.

After Buckner surrendered and was sent north as a prisoner, Grant furnished him with funds. When 22 years later, Grant was financially ruined, Buckner returned the courtesy. Buckner, in 1896, was nominated for the Vice-Presidency by the "gold" Democrats.

NORTH MONAGHAN DADS MEET FOR INAUGURAL MEETING OF THE YEAR

Township Council Re-appoints John Harper to Board of Health—Bert Sanderson Again Appointed Assessor

The North Monaghan council held a very length session on Monday afternoon in the Town Hall. It was the first meeting after the election and the following are the gentlemen who compose the council for the year 1914: Reeve, Wm. G. Howden, Councillors, Messrs. Thomas G. Young, Wm. Robson, J. H. Forster, and Robert A. Dobbin. Each member signed the necessary declaration of office and also the declaration of qualification, after which the council then proceeded with the regular business.

The minutes of the last three meetings was then read. Moved by Mr. Forster and seconded by Mr. Dobbin that the minutes of the last three meetings as read, be accepted and confirmed.

Mr. E. A. Dickson on behalf of the owners, came before the council with a plan of the west part of the John Holmes' property, which they recently purchased, and being composed of Park Lot No. 8 and parts of Park Lot No. 9 and 10, Township Lot No. 14, Concession 11, North Monaghan. The plan of this sub-division showed all streets to be the full 66 feet wide, according to law, and there being no objection made to such streets, the following resolution was passed by the council. Moved by Mr. Forster, seconded by Mr. Young, that the above mentioned plan be accepted by this council and the Reeve and Clerk are hereby authorized to attach their names and also the corporate seal of the township thereto.

Mr. Thomas M. Hunter came before the council and asked them with Mr. Dobbin's consent, to have the Road Commissioner for that division take down the rail fence along Lot 6, Concession 11, and that the same be put up again in the spring by the road commissioner at the expense of the township. This was to enable persons driving along the road to overcome the bad drift of snow which predominates at this section every winter. The council granted the request.

Investigate Charity Cases

A communication was received from Mr. J. H. Haw, clerk of the Park Street Baptist Church in regard to aid from the township for a family living in the Brownton district. Reeve Howden also called the council's attention to the necessity of aid from the township for a family living on Braidwood Ave. The particulars of this case had been brought to the notice of the Reeve by the Rev. Mr. Price, of St. George's Church. Moved by Mr. Forster, seconded by Mr. Robson, that the charity cases above referred to, be left in the hands of Reeve Howden to investigate and to provide for the same according to his judgment.

Council Auditor

The question of appointing a Council Auditor was the next question dealt with by the council. After some discussion the following resolution was unanimously carried. Moved by Mr. Dobbin, seconded by Mr. Young, that H. C. Robinson be appointed auditor in Mr. B. Sanderson's place, he being the assessor. Mr. J. F. Clark was re-appointed to that position, he also being one of last year's auditors. The salaries of each auditor shall be increased from $5 to $7 each.

Board of Health

Moved by Mr. Forster and seconded by Mr. Robson that Mr. John Harper be re-appointed member of the local Board of Health for the year 1914.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Forster, seconded by Mr. Young, that the Peterboro Review do the township printing for 1914.—Carried.

Township Assessor

The only application for the position of assessor was that of Mr. Bert Sanderson, who was assessor last year. In his application he asked for a salary of $100 and after considerable discussion on the appointment of an assessor, Mr. Sanderson agreed with the council to accept the position for 1914 for the sum of $90. This amount will also cover postage. On motion of Messrs. Young, and Forster, Mr. Sanderson was appointed assessor for 1914.—Carried.

The next question deal with was the borrowing of money from the Bank of Ottawa to meet the current expenditure of the coming year. By-law No. 678 was then regularly read and moved by Mr. Dobbin, seconded by Mr. Robson, that By-law No. 678 to borrow $3,300 from the Bank of Ottawa to meet current expenditure be hereby read and finally passed and the Reeve and Clerk be authorized to attach their names and the corporate seal of the township thereto.

Cutting Trees

Mr. Young brought the matter of allowing Mr. Patton permission to cut pine trees on the border line in front of his property. A petition was also received, signed by H. M. Dobbin, Jos. Gadoua and T. O. Arnott, asking that the council take action in the matter of John Kelleher, who cut and removed two trees from the public highway in front of his property on Park Street. Moved by Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Dobbin, that this petition be left over until next meeting to be dealt with.—Carried.

A comunication was received from Mr. W. H. Bradburn Township treasurer, asking the council to pass an order directing the payment of the note given by the township to Bradburn's Limited, for $3,000 and interest of $21.70, for advance made to Lawless and Hayes on their contract. This matter was left over till the next meeting.

A communication was received from George Sidey asking the council to remunerate him for cutting brush out of the trees on the road in front of where he lives. His claim was for two and a half days at $2.50 per day or $5.00 in all. No action was taken in this matter.

Doesn't Own Dog

Mrs. Rosana Little signed a declaration stating that she had never been the owner, possessor or keeper of a dog during the past year and that she was wrongly assessed for the same. Moved by Mr. Dobbin, seconded by Mr. Robson, that the error in Mrs. Little's assessment be refunded, the same amounting to $2.00.

A communication was received from the Peterboro Radial Railway Company in November, 1913, asking that the charge for taxes of $4.05 on a lot on Monaghan Road be withdrawn. The reasons given were that on March 14, 1904, a by-law was passed, exempting the company from municipal assessment and taxation for 21 years from that date. Moved by Mr. Dobbin, seconded by Mr. Robson, that the Clerk be given full power to deal with and settle this matter.

Mr. John McIntosh tax collector, reported to the clerk that he had collected $18.70 in school taxes which, according to an error in the assessment, had been made payable to the separate school, but according to advice from the owners' agent, this tax should have been payable to the public school. This property mentioned above, is owned by Martin and Mills Co., of Hamilton.

Moved by Mr. Forster, seconded by Mr. Robson, that the Reeve and Treasurer be authorized to pay the following outstanding sidewalk accounts:

COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO LOOK INTO NEW SUNDAY SCHOOL PROPOSITION

More Accommodation Necessary at St. Paul's—Church Membership of 1,010 Reported at the Annual Meeting of the Congregation

At St. Paul's annual congregational meeting last evening in the lecture hall, after the members present, were addressed by Messrs. Kyes and Madill in regard to the building of a new sabbath school, costing in the neighborhood of $20,000, a committee consisting of Messrs. Keyes, Madill and Crane were appointed to investigate the matter. Owing to the large increase in the membership of the Sabbath school, the present accommodation is inadequate and therefore it is found necessary to construct a new Sabbath school.

The report of the session was most encouraging when Mr. Shook reported a total of 1010 members for the church. Mr. Shook also commended family worship, as desirable to the needs of the young people.

The Sabbath school report presented by Mr. Keyes, was most gratifying. The school is comprised of four departments, the primary, intermediate, Bible class and Chinese class. During the past year 17 members of the school were taken into the church membership.

Missionary Committee

Mr. Patterson of the Missionary Committee, reported that $5,972 had been raised, and that $5,800 had been promised for the coming year for missionary work.

Sunday School Finances

The financial report of the Sunday school presented by Mr. Fisk, showed that $300 had been expended for school purposes, while nearly $500 had been raised for missionary purposes.

The Ladies' Aid report by Mr. Moore, showed $371 had been raised. The average attendance at the meetings was eleven for eight meetings.

Missionary Society

Mrs. Harstone reported on the Women's Foreign Missionary Society which has a total of 135 members. The average attendance was 57. Reference was made to the death during the year of two valuable members, Mrs. Wm. Taylor and Mrs. Geo. Bable.

Young People's Guild

The Guild report presented by Mr. McLean, was very satisfactory and was to the effect that there had been an average attendance of 50. Mission study was the feature of the society in winter, while a tennis club had been organized last summer and had been successful. Mr. Cowan reported on the Fraser Mission Band which had an average attendance of 19.

The choir report by Mr. John Allan was satisfactory. Mr. Allan pointed out that more bass voices were needed in the choir.

Some Re-elections

Messrs. Hill, Madill and McLean were re-elected auditors for the ensuing year. Messrs. W. A. Logan and Cowan were elected as representatives to the Laymen's Missionary Council. Messrs. Keyes, Connal, Ferguson and Hayes, the retiring members of Board of Managers, were re-elected. Messrs. H. Patterson and J. A. Johnston were elected to fill additional vacancies.

Publish Directory

On motion of Mr. Shook, it was decided to publish the reports in book form and also a directory of the members of the church.

GIRLS IN PINK SILK BLOOMERS MYSTIFY SHIP'S PASSENGERS

MISS HELEN PATTERSEN, MISS VIRGINIA RAPPE.

While the Baltic, coming from Europe, was dipping her nose deep into the billows of the Atlantic on her way to New York recently four little mysterious pink puffs bubbled down the promenade deck, causing more consternation than a huge sea sweeping over the bows.

The four pink puffs were on the feet of the Misses Helen Patterson and Virginia Rappe, both of Chicago, who were voyagers on the great ship. Any one without even a trained eye could see that the pink puffs were the ends of things, and upon proper investigation being made it was learned that the young women were wearing pink silk bloomers. The dangling pinkies were just as attractive to the women and men aboard the ship as they were startling. The young women ventured the information that the pink bloomers were tango bloomers.

THE FLORENCE HINKLE CONCERT AN IMPORTANT MUSICAL EVENT

To the Editor of The Review.

Sir:

The visit of Florence Hinkle to Peterboro on Friday night is an event of more than ordinary importance in the musical life of our city. "A soprano of rare distinction and a most satisfying singer," is the opinion of Dr. A. S. Vogt, Conductor of Canada's Premiere Chorus—The Mendelssohn Choir. Miss Hinkle has been engaged by the choir to assist at its cycle of concerts in February, for the fourth consecutive season, and this fact alone should demonstrate her position in the view of competent critics. In bringing her to Peterboro, Mr. Gliddon is deserving of great praise and I sincerely hope his efforts may be appreciated. With the assistance of a really clever cellist, Mr. Leo Smith, who won many friends on his last visit to Peterboro, and our own Conservatory Orchestra, which by the way, is a local student organization and by dint of hard and conscientious work has been brought to wonderful efficiency. Friday night's concert should be an evening of musical enjoyment.

Yours truly,
JOHN CRANE.

CONDEMNED MAN IS INDIFFERENT

Montreal Murderer Boasts that He Will not Hang—Reads The Bible.

MONTREAL, Jan. 15.—William Campbel, lying under sentence of death for the murder of George Muir at Senecal, still maintains an utter indifference to his fate. Campbell will hang on January 24, providing a reprieve is not granted by the Minister of Justice before that date.

He persists in boasting to his keeper that he will not be hanged since the Minister of Justice has seen fit to grant a stay of the execution.

The Time of His Life.

Campbell says he is having the time of his life. He is well fed; his large double cell is heated to 65 degrees, he has two hours exercise every day, and the pick of the magazines and novels in the prison library. He does not work, although he has made application to Deputy Governor Landriault to be supplied with shoe making tools and a quantity of old boots. Campbell says he is a first class hand at shoe repairing, a trade which he learned while an inmate of a penitentiary in the United States, but the application was refused. He has been studying the Bible and reads several chapters of the New Testament before "lights out."

Campbell still denies any knowledge of the murder; he says that at the time of the murder he was in the city.

THE WEATHER

Much milder weather accompanied with a light snowfall followed our late severe weather, and the change is quite agreeable to the majority of people. The lowest the thermometer reached last night was just zero, and at daybreak it was up to 21 above, and has been gradually rising all day. Much milder conditions now prevail everywhere throughout Canada.—W.P.

GUN BROUGHT THEM OUT

Strikers Surrender Before Time Specified Had Expired.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Johannesburg, Jan. 15.—Government authorities trained a seven-pounder gun on the Trades Hall and gave Mr. Bain and his three hundred strikers fifteen minutes to surrender. They surrendered within the specified time.

BANK BUILDING IS DESTROYED AT MIDLAND

Blaze Started at Midnight and Firemen Worked Till Noon.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Midland, Ont., Jan. 15.—At one o'clock this morning, fire broke out in the Ingram block, corner King street and Dominion avenue, and at noon the firemen were still playing on the ruins. The Bank of British North America was destroyed, but the vault is intact. The loss is stated at seventy thousand dollars almost entirely covered by insurance.

MUSKETRY SCHOOL AT THE ARMOURIES

The School of Musketry will open at the Armouries to-night under Quarter Master Instructor Edwards, and will continue from six weeks to two months, giving a free course in musketry, fully qualifying those who pass at the end of the course.

Quite a number of officers and sergeants intend taking the course and it is expected that the majority of the officers will take at least a short course.

LOST HIS WIFE AWARDED ONE DOLLAR

Vancouver, Jan. 15.—John Simpson was awarded one dollar in the Supreme Court for the loss of his wife when the steamer Cheslake went down a year ago off Vanda harbor.

This award is in strong contrast to a verdict given in the same court the previous day, when a woman was given $6,000 for the loss of her husband in the same disaster.

ST. JOHN'S CHOIR

St. John's adult choristers are asked to catch the street car leaving the corner of Charlotte and George going north about 7.45, to accept the kind invitation of Mrs. Cox, River Road, to her home.

The boys will not meet tonight, their practice will be on Saturday morning at 9 a.m.

Miss Mae Clancy, nurse in training at St. Michael's Hospital, Toronto, accompanied by Misses Margaret and Mary Dwyer, has returned after spending the holidays with her parents.

CHICKENS COME HOME TO ROOST

The final evangelist meeting at the Gilmour Memorial Church will be as follows:

Saturday 7 p.m.—For men only. Subject "Chickens come home to roost."

Sunday 11 a.m.—Services.

7 p.m.—Rev. Mr. Pugsley will tell the story of his own life "From the gambling table to the pulpit."

SHOT WRONG HORSE.

The story comes from Belmont that Mr. A. Wilde, reeve of that place, is mourning the loss of a valuable horse. He owned an old horse that had outlived its usefulness. He instructed a man of the locality to take it to the woods and shoot it. Going to the stable shortly afterwards he was horrified to find a good young horse gone, while the old steed stood comfortably in its stall. He rushed to the woods only to find the animal half skinned.

HOCKEY RINK JOURNALISM

A Reader Takes Exception to the Familiarities of the Examiner With Our M.L.A.

To the Editor of The Review.

Sir,—Being a reader of the Examiner for a number of years, and always having regarded that journal at the paragon of Liberalism (in more senses than one), it is with deep regret that I have noted its recent decline in fairness to its political opponents.

As an instance of the intolerance, unfairness and misrepresentation to which the Examiner (my late beloved) has descended, I only need direct your attention to an item which appeared in its columns last evening in reference to Mr. Peck's offer of medals to the Junior City Hockey League, in which our respected member for the Provincial Parliament is mis-named.

The item in question begins: MR. E. A. JACK, M.P.P., has notified the Junior Hockey League, etc." Did ever a more flagrant piece of misrepresentation appear in the public press? It is a serious business to take liberties with a man's name in this manner. The familiarities of the hockey rink should not be extended to the columns of our newspapers. I know it is a common practice in hockey to call a man by any name such as "Jack" or "Bill," but I repeat that the line should be drawn in regard to our public men. To speak of a gentleman holding a dignified office as "Jack" is beneath the dignity of a newspaper. How have the mighty fallen!

Yours,
HYPER-CRITIC.

AUTOMOBILE NEWS.

A meeting of the Peterborough Automobile Association is to be held in the Bank of Montreal chambers on Saturday, Jan. 17th, at 3 p.m. It is hoped that all motor owners who can possibly make it convenient to attend will do so.

OPENING OF PARLIAMENT

Duke of Connaught Thanks Canadian People for Their Sympathy

Canadian Press Despatch.

Ottawa, Jan. 15.—The Governor-General opened the third session of the twelfth Parliament of Canada at three o'clock this afternoon with the usual ceremonies. The speech from the throne was not noteworthy. His Royal Highness expressed gratitude to the people of Canada for their sympathy, during the illness of the Duchess of Connaught.

LECTURER DISAPPEARS

Was Heard From Some Time Ago While in This City

The Brantford Courier of Jan. 13, has the following:

Where is Miss Lottie Tollotson, a lecturer and entertainer, who was billed to appear at the Congregational Church in this city, Dec. 26, who failed to appear before the audience which had gathered and to whom the church had to refund the money at the door.

The society officers of Congregational Church failed to receive any explanation of Miss Tillotson's non-arrival. By a strange coincidence, Mr. M. J. Coady, traveller for Scribner's Sons, while in the city this week, secured a letter from a sister of Miss Tillotson, Mrs. J. J. O'Donoghue, 127 East 8th Street, New York, asking his assistance in his travels throughout Ontario to locate the missing woman. Mrs. O'Donoghue last heard from her sister, September 23, at Peterboro. She was later seen by Mr. W. R. Davies at Thamesville, during Thanksgiving week. Since then all trace of her is lost.

When in Thamesville, Mr. Davies stated that Miss Tillotson seemed to be laboring under some abstraction. That is what her sister, Mrs. O'Donoghue fears, as the woman was prone to overwork and is liable to have had a breakdown.

Another strange feature of the case is that Mrs. O'Donoghue always arranged the itinerary of Miss Tillotson, and not having done so for some months, leads to the belief that something has happened to her sister, of a serious nature.

Police Chief Thompson said to-day that the case had not been brought to his attention.

REGAINED SOME OF HIS STRENGTH

Sir James Whitney Benefits By a Good Sleep.

Canadian Press Despatch

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—Regaining some of his strength by a good sleep, Sir James Whitney was in better shape this morning than he had been for several days, although any improvement made during the past twenty-four hours was regarded as negligible variation on the progress of the disease.

Short periods of delirium still recur, but the patient shows no sign of sinking into a state of coma, which is the beginning of the end in such cases.

The noon bulletin said "No Change."

FAILED TO RECOVER AMOUNT ASKED FOR

Colored Man Doing Vaudeville Turn Did Not Make Good.

The case of Howard Andrew against the manager of a local moving picture house for $17, heard before Magistrate Dumble this morning, was dismissed.

Andrews, who is a colored man claimed the money due him from the defendant for vaudeville services.

"What, were you sawing wood?" questioned the Magistrate.

"No, sah, I was singing and dancing," was the response.

"You don't want to charge for singing and dancing a little, do you?" enquired the Magistrate.

"That's what we professional people do."

"Were you intoxicated?"

"No sir. Booze and business don't go good together."

The defendant claimes that this man had caused him considerable annoyance by hanging around, wanting a try-out, and that he had given him a chance. The colored man failed to make good and therefore he was told he need not return.

The Magistrate informed the plaintiff that he was unable to give him compensation as there was not sufficient evidence, also there was no contract with the defendant.

It is understood Andrew will take the case to Division Court.

STARTLING RESULTS FROM RESEARCH ON POLLUTION OF WATERS

Washington, Jan. 15.—Pollution of the waters of the great lakes and the rivers and streams in the Canadian boundary, along which live more than 6,000,000 people, was revealed yesterday in a report to the International Joint Commission by Dr. Allan McLaughlin, of the Public Health Service. The report showed extensive pollution in the waters adjacent to many of the large cities and declared that owing to the present position of inlets there is not a city that can be said to possess water that is safe without treatment. The remedy, Dr. McLaughlin said, should be sought by the best sanitarians in the world.

The commission under treatment has no power to remedy conditions, but it will suggest the employment of world known sanitarians and authorities on public health, and after investigation by these experts will recommend legislation to embody their views, to the Canadian and United States governments.

Breadth of Research.

Dr. McLaughlin has spent about six months investigating and his field investigation covered every mile of boundary water from Duluth, at the head of Lake Superior, to the point where the St. Lawrence river leaves the New York state boundary. He had several assistants and they made use of every possible means to examine the water suspected of sewage pollution.

His report in part was as follows:

"The field investigated covered the waters of the Rainy river, parts of Rainy Lake, Lake of the Woods; that part of Lake Superior known as Thunder Bay; St. Mary's river, Lake St. Clair; Detroit river; the western end, central portion and eastern end of Lake Erie; the Niagara river; the western and eastern ends of Lake Ontario; the St. Lawrence river to Cornwall, and this portion of the St. John river which forms the international boundary between Maine and New Brunswick. The commission established laboratories for examination of samples of water at Fort Frances, Ont.; Port Arthur, Ont.; Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.; Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.; Detroit, Mich.; Windsor, Ont.; on the United States revenue cutter Morrill; Amherstburg, Ont.; Port Stanley, Ont.; Buffalo, New York; Fort Erie, Ont.; Youngstown, N.Y.; Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ont.; Clayton, N.Y.; Kingston, Ont., and Nav Buren, Maine.

Sewage Pollution.

"Samples were taken from 1,400 sampling points and over 19,000 samples were taken and examined bacteriologically.

"In certain localities in the great lakes and in all their connecting waters dangerous sewage pollution was shown to exist, but the bulk of the great lakes waters remains in its pristine purity. The investigation shows that the colon bacillus is practically never present in unpolluted waters, and that normal bacterial contents of great lakes is less than ten per cubic centimetre."

REV. ISAAC COUCH SPOKE ON LIFE OF HELEN KELLER

"Helen Keller and Philosophy of Knowledge," was the subject dealt with in a very scholarly and eloquent manner by Rev. Isaac Couch, B.D., at McLeod Street Methodist Church on Sunday, says the Ottawa Journal.

Rev. Mr. Couch told of the early life of this wonderful girl, whose parents, he said, were to her shadowed and silent. She was described as a living sepulchre with opaque walls, which shut in all of her superior intellectual powers, this giving her a greater perception of God, who, he said, was so remote and vague that we could not fully conceive of Him.

"The materialist," said Mr. Couch, "claims to be unable to find any evidence in favor of a God. God is a spirit, and therefore not susceptible to material," he said.

The speaker represented man as being master of many realms as compared with a bird, for instance, and although actual darkness may prevail without, the sense of God illuminates the soul.

SISTER OF MRS. VOADEN PASSES AT ST. THOMAS

St. Thomas, Jan. 15.—At an early hour Wednesday morning death claimed one of the city's most highly respected citizens in the person of Mary E. Lucas, wife of W. H. Lucas, at the family residence, 178 Wellington street, in her 49th year, after a prolonged illness.

The deceased lady leaves to mourn her loss her husband and one son, of this city; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Smith, Talbotville; two brothers, Professor Joseph Smith, Toledo, Ohio, and F. Smith, London, and one sister Mrs. F. Voaden, Peterborough, besides a host of friends.

The late Mrs. Lucas was for a number of years a zealous and consistent member of the Plymouth Brethren, and will be greatly missed.

FOR DR. GRENFELL'S WORK

The following letter concerning the work of Dr. Grenfell, which is so deservedly popular, and in behalf of which special appeal is now being made through the daily press, speaks for itself:

"In the Spring, I was a victim of a terrible accident. While in the act of drawing a load from my gun, it went off, and the contents passed through my right hand.

"It is needless to say that its effects on me were very disastrous. Having a large family, I was nearly distracted with thoughts of the future. It was then that Dr. Grenfell showed both his skill and kindness.

"After taking me to his hospital and making provision for my family, he took tiny strips of flesh from the arm of his assistant, and also from his own arm, which he ingrafted into my hand. . . . . Benfits resulting from Dr. Grenfell's work on the Labrador coast are too numerous to mention."

In addition to this, the hungry are fed, the naked clothed, the simple taught, the sick healed, and to the poor and needy, a gospel is preached. Surely such noble and self-sacrificing work ought to appeal to every citizen of Peterboro, and ought to command their prayers, sympathy and financial support for the fisherfolk of Labrador. What we do, whether great or small, let us do quickly.

PETERBOROUGH, THURSDAY JAN. 15, 1914.

WANTED—A SENSE OF HUMOUR.

THE "READERS" OF THE EXAMINER are evidently paying close attention to The Review's editorial columns lately. On several occasions letters have appeared from agrieved, not to say shocked "readers" complaining about something the editor has said. The last indiscretion of the editor of The Review is in quoting a joke told by the late Rev. Starr of Toronto. The following is the letter:

The Examiner, City:

Dear Sir,—I observed last night in The Review a cutting from an exchange, in which the Editor of The Review takes a rather offensive fling at the Methodist people, as follows:

Saturday Night tells a story of the late Rev. Starr, of Toronto, as follows:

"Are you a Christian?" Mr. Starr asked a little negro.

"Yes, sah; I'se a Christian."

"Well, are you a Methodist?" continued the minister.

"Oh, no, sah; I'se a niggah, and that's bad enough," was the child's unexpected answer.

When Mr. Frank Dobbin was Editor-in-Chief, The Review did not pride itself in saying nasty and offensive things about the Methodists, but apparently conditions have changed, and The Review, unwilling to assume the responsibility, takes a cutting from the Saturday Night, which always sneers at the Church and Church workers.

As a Methodist, I resent very much the ridicule heaped on the Methodists and Methodism, and The Review has offended one of its subscribers by a very offensive and uncalled-for reference.

Yours truly,
METHODIST.

It is scarcely necessary for us to reply to this letter, for we doubt if there are any Methodists in Peterborough who are so utterly devoid of a sense of humor as to fail to see and enjoy the joke. The late Rev. Starr was himself a Methodist, but this did not prevent him from appreciating the joke and even telling it against himself. The story in the first place came from the lips of one of the most devoted Methodists.

The only explanation of the above letter ever being written or printed, is that it might appeal to the bigoted in order to injure The Review. The Review gives its readers of all sects and creeds credit for at least an elementary sense of humor. It may surprise the "Methodist," who is supposed to have written the above letter, that The Review man who quoted the joke from Saturday Night is himself a Methodist. As for Mr. Frank Dobbin he regards the above letter as a still better joke than the one complained of.

THE COLD SNAP.

THE MAIL AND EMPIRE tries to make light of the cold snap from which we have been suffering these last few days, and argues that the weather is not so severe as it used to be. It suggests that the climate is getting milder and points to the fact that more men are to be seen on the streets on severe days in stiff felt hats, instead of the fur caps pulled down over the ears as was the common thing in other years. The climate may possibly be changing, but you can scarcely regard 20 and 30 below zero as a condition to be made light of. There are people who venture out unmuffled, but they are not immune from the cold, they have to be continually feeling their ears to keep them from freezing, and when they come in they are scarcely recognizable, their faces being the color of a half-boiled lobster.

It might be argued that the reason why so many people make light of zero weather in these days is because they are getting used to it, and that their ears do not freeze so easily as did the ears of their forefathers. However, we are inclined to agree with the man who came into this office the other evening and said that this weather was neither good for man nor beast to be out in.

A NEW INDUSTRY.

IN MAYOR BULLER'S opening address to the Council, his Worship, among the many other important matters, spoke of the introduction of new industries into Peterborough. This is most important at this period in the history of Eastern Ontario, for it has to do with the future of the city as an industrial centre. There are at present new industrial propositions "in the air" which are bound to "let" somewhere in the Eastern counties, and it behooves us to be on the look out.

The ceramic industry in this country is yet in its infancy. There are openings in abundance for factories producing different kinds of china, pottery and porcelain, especially bath tubs and sanitary ware, and various forms of enamelled goods. Another profitable undertaking would be the manufacture of electrical porcelain goods, insulators and similar articles, which at present are largely imported.

The raw materials required are all obtainable in the district, and comprise the potash feldspar, silica, talc, and fluorspar. Natural kaolin may be obtained from Amherst, P.Q. Orthoclase feldspar will undoubtedly be the next source of supply for potash on the exhaustion of the Stassfurt deposits, or an increase in price by those who hold the monopoly. A recent and most important discovery in connection with this mineral is that by sintering a ground mixture of potash feldspar and phosphate of lime and leaching the product with sulphuric acid a valuable fertilizing material is obtained, containing both soluble potash salts and phosphoric acid.

Briefly, from such common and cheap materials as feldspars and clays, gypsum, limestone, charcoal and pyrites, a whole chain of most profitable industries may be established producing pure alumina for aluminium making, fertilizing salts such as mixtures of the chloride and sulphate of potassium with phosphoric acid, pure potasium salts, glass making material, (dicalcium silicate) hydrochloric acid, oxalic acid, and calcium oxalate. Potash alum which is a double sulphate of potassium and aluminium is made direct in this scheme of operations and as is well known finds a large market in dyeing and many other of the arts.

It is evident that our feldspar deposits are by these discoveries proven to be of immense value, and their geographical position as regards other raw materials and markets is unique.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

JOHN KRAFCHUNKO, who was committed for trial for murder at Winnipeg, has escaped in a very melo-dramatic manner from the jail. The account reads like one of the exploits of the notorious Jack Shepherd.

AN ENGLISH PREACHER, Mr. Enos Bacon, "The Yorkshire Nightingale," held a service in a Montreal church during which he recited the 25th chapter of St. Matthew, entirely from memory. He also sang "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross" as a solo.

WORK IS SCARCE in Montreal and it is still worse in Toronto. Charities are reported to be pressed and that demands upon them are greater than any winter since the panic year of 1907-8. That was the year when some Liberals slept.

CANADIAN CLUBS are experiencing some difficulty at present in getting speakers of high standing to address them. This may be because certain Liberals have banned the naval question as unfit for discussion at Canadian Clubs. For a Canadian Club speaker to discuss The Naval Aid Bill has become as indecent an act as for him to dance the Tango.

A NEWSPAPER published an original poem yesterday beginning, "Thou free happy bird in the tall leafy tree." Poets, of course, dwell in the land of eternal summer. They always have a bird and a leafy tree on hand, even at 30 below zero. But that does not save them from the necessity of having to put an extra shovel of coal on the furnace.

THERE WAS QUITE AN EPIDEMIC of topical sermons in Montreal on Sunday last. Most of them had reference to the government of the city. Some straight things were said by the preachers. Among the more sensible things was the following utterance by Rev. R. W. Dickie:—

"Protest and fault-finding will never give us a better civic life. This vile hoard of kickers and mud-slingers is one of the greatest curses of democracy. Let a man support the administration and labor constructively to improve it, and only then will he have earned the right to find fault. It is this cheap habit that keeps many good men from public life. Men don't like to be a target for mud-slingers whose sense of civic responsibility is never carried beyond finding fault."

Does Sentiment Pay?

Collier's.

"Sentiment," remarked a materialistic acquaintance recently, "may be all right in its way, but it doesn't pay in this commercial age."

Suppose we dissect the situation. We have sex literature, bereft of sentiment, which sometimes nets twenty cents a word. We have political and commercial of financial literature, which nets almost as much. From a distinguished traveler and hunter we enjoyed literature that totaled $1 a word. But in the literature of art, finance, politics, business, and sex, what literature have we drawn in the last thirty years that netted $500 a word? "Cut out the comedy," you suggest. "Five hundred dollars a word? Piffle!" Only it isn't piffle. The answer is James Whitcomb Riley's "An Old Sweetheart of Mine," just one piece of sentiment after another, which has earned per word more money than anything written in a century and sold as something to be read.

Sentiment doesn't pay? Doesn't $500 a word pay?

The Loyalists.

O ye, who with your blood and sweat
  Watered the furrows of this land,—
See where upon a nation's brow,
  In honor's front, ye proudly stand!

Who for her pride abased your own,
  And gladly on her alter laid
All bounty of the older world,
  All memories that your glory made.

And to her service bowed your strength,
  Took labor for your shield and crest;
See where upon a nation's brow,
  Her diadem, ye proudly rest!

BEING GOOD

By Walt Mason

"This time," I said, "I am not joking,"—it was the morn of New Year's Day; "I'll quit forever more my smoking, and throw my rank old pipes away. I know full well tobacco causes disorders of the [illegible] spleen; too long I've stained my teeth [illegible]wses, and soiled my chin with nicotine. [illegible] long I've shocked my wife by filling th[illegible] house with fumes hard to endure; and now I cut it out, God willing, and send my briars to the poor." No sooner was my vow recorded than came a meerschaum pipe to me; with pipes like that are kings rewarded—a noble pipe that's fair to see. Then some kind friend who wished to cheer me, and from my heart erase the scars, brought grim temptation once more before me—he sent a box of fine cigars. Another sent a jar of lacquer—a priceless thing from far Japan—in which to keep my choice tobacker, a princely gift for any man. My vow lies heavy on my shoulders, I write beneath temptation's strokes, for I have silver mounted holders for cigaroots and other smokes, and all the jimcracks and equipment that good tobacco dealers sell, and every mail brings me a shipment of things a smoker loves too well. That vow of mine! It frets and wearies, and gives my soul a frequent fit; and don't you spring too many queries concerning whether I've stayed quit!

On completing his term of office in the latter capacity, he returned to the bench and was for a time chief justice. Personally he is extremely neat, precise and painstaking and has gained the reputation of being a hard and conscientious worker.

WATERPROOFING CLOTH.

Wiley Got the Idea From an Accident in a Dyehouse.

The waterproofing of cloth so universal today was unknown twenty-five years ago. In 1890 Thomas Fearnley Wiley of Bedford, England, took out the first patent for the process known as waterproofing cloth.

He got the idea from an accident in a Yorkshire dyehouse. Certain goods had been wrongly dyed, and the workmen were directed to wash out the surplus logwood color with alum. After the goods had been dried the improvement was so marked that the dyer ordered a repetition of the alum washing. The cloth was sent to the wetting machine, but the workmen found that they could not wet it. It passed through the water and came out dry. Thus was the discovery made that cloth could be waterproof and yet remain porous.

The process used today is as follows: Cloths intended for rainproofing are first freed from grease and are then saturated in specially constructed machines with the clear liquor obtained in adding together solutions of pure sulphate of alumina and acetate of lead. The lead is precipitated out, and the acetate of alumina is dried in the fabric. The cloth undergoes further treatment with wax, and in one system wax is applied frictionally from a block under the pressure of a pneumatic roller. Under the method more generally used the wax, or mixture of waxes, is melted by heat and applied in an infinitesimally fine film by the action of a ductor roller.—New York World.

SUFFER IN SILENCE.

nimals Bear the Most Intense Pain With Little Outcry.

One of the most pathetic things is e manner in which the animal kingom endures suffering. Take horses, r instance, in battle. After the first hock of a wound they make no sound hey bear the pain with a mute, wonering endurance, and if at night you ear a wild groan from the battlefield comes from their loneliness.

The dog will carry a broken leg for ys wistfully, but uncomplainingly.

The cat, stricken with stick or stone, caught in some trap from which it nows its way to freedom, crawls to me secret spot and bears in silence ain which we could not endure.

Sheep and cattle meet the thrust of e butcher's knife without a sound, d even common poultry endure inse agony without complaint.

The dove, shot unto death, flies to me faroff bough, and as it dies the lence is unbroken save for the patter the leaves of its own life blood.

The wounded deer speeds to some ick brake, and in pitiful submission aits for death.

The eagle, struck in midair, fights the last against the fatal summons. here is no moan or sound of pain, and e defiant look never fades from its yes until the lids finally close over em.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Game of Golf.

On the notice board of a Liverpool lf club, says the Liverpool Post, ap ear the following verses typewritten the club notepaper:

Swat the ball and walk a mile.
Swat the ball. It's worth your while.
Walk a mile and swat the ball.
Walk some more. Nor is that all.
Swat the ball and walk—what then?
Swat the ball and walk again.
After that you walk and—what?
Once again the ball you swat,
Swat the ball and walk still more.
Keep on swatting as before.
When as far as this you've got
Swat and walk, then walk and swat.

Golf, of course, has been defined as good walk spoiled, and a low comean once described the game thusly: You hit a ball as far as you can, and you find it the same day you have on."

THE BLUE PENNANT

And a Little Wisp of Stained and Tattered Silk.

By PHILIP KEAN.

Helen Marshall was always dressed with a demureness that made an effective foil for the bronze brightness of her hair, the warm ivory of her skin, the red of her lips. Today she wore blue—a trim tailored gown of deep colored cloth, a little cocky felt hat and a great bunch of violets that outshone all the other blues except that of the pennant which she carried at the end of a slender cane.

"You beauty!" Holden said under his breath as he took his seat beside her on the grand stand.

She turned quickly.

"Oh, Irwin," her face was brilliant with color, "it's worth everything to see you again! Aunt Sue," she said to the lady beside her, "this is Irwin Holden, the famous halfback of two years ago."

"'The king is dead! Long live the king!'" Irwin quoted solemnly. "There have been so many famous halfbacks, Helen, that it isn't any wonder that Mrs. McDonald doesn't remember me."

"But I do remember," Mrs. McDonald assured him. "Helen has talked of you so much—and," she hesitated, "of your accident."

"I haven't been able to walk well on two feet since," Holden said grimly, "and this is the first game I have dared let myself see. It makes me wild."

"To think that you can't play!" Helen's tone was sympathetic.

"To know I can't ever do things that make a man worth while!" bitterly.

"But you have done so many things that are worth while, and they tell me that you are writing a book."

"Oh, a book!" His tone was scornful.

"You might have let me know what you were doing!" she complained. "I think our old friendship deserved that."

He glanced down at her.

"Ah, our friendship," he said. "I had two good feet when we cemented that, Helen. I wasn't a dummy on crutches."

"Irwin," she flashed out reproachfully, "as if that made any difference!"

"But it does make a difference," he said as he bent over her. "You know you worship strength in a man, don't you?"

"Yes," she agreed quietly, "but not always mere physical strength."

"The one isn't much without the other. Look at those fellows now."

Down the field came the terms. The bands of the opposing sides crashed out the good old tunes, college yell succeeded college yell, and the banks of spectators stretching up and up on the seats in solid masses of blue and crimson were agitated to uproariousness.

"Isn't it fine? Isn't it fine?" Helen said breathlessly, having cheered the blue team to the echo.

Holden nodded.

"They are bound to win," he said. "They are made of the right stuff."

"I know only one of them personally," Helen told him—"Van Dorn."

"He's the strongest man in the lot. He's an ideal halfback."

"He is ideal in more ways than one," she agreed.

He flashed a quick glance at her.

"I have heard you thought so."

"Who told you?"

"Some of the fellows."

She turned her back on him squarely.

"I didn't suppose that you talked me over with the fellows," she said over her shoulder.

"I don't," uncomfortably, "but one couldn't help hearing that Van Dorn is awfully daffy over you."

"So were you—two years ago."

She said it daringly, giving him a glimpse of flaming cheeks and indignant eyes, and then once more he was forced to contemplate the knot of bronze hair under the cocky hat.

His face went white, but he said quietly, "We are missing the best of the game," and turned his attention to the field.

All about them people were absorbed by the play. Aunt Sue, unlearned and unlettered in football lore, was oblivious to everything else. These two alone thought of other things.

It was at Van Dorn's touchdown that the place went wild.

"Oh, he's great, great, great!" Helen enthused as she waved her pennant frantically. "I haven't seen anything like it since the last game you played, Irwin. Oh, do you remember the little blue pennant that I made you pin to your sweater for luck—and it didn't bring you luck!"

"No," he said dully, "it didn't bring me luck. I lost the game, I lost the strength I gloried in—I lost you, Helen."

"No, no," she protested. "You knew you always had my friendship, Irwin."

"But I didn't want friendship, and you knew it, and I knew it. And I hadn't the right to ask for anything else, and so I kept away from you. But after two years of separation the temptation to see you was too great, so I sent you the tickets and asked you to come to the game."

"The whole world was changed when I read your letter," she said simply. "I have missed you so, dear boy."

Then for a moment he let himself go.

"Oh, Helen, Helen!" he said brokenly.

But the game was over, and a tumultuous throng poured out of the seats.

"Irwin wants us to go to dinner with him, Aunt Sue," Helen said as they went down the steps.

In their walk across the green they attracted more than usual attention, the younger boys admiring Helen's beauty, the older ones recognizing in the man with the crutch the famous halfback of two years ago, who had then been reported engaged to the girl by his side.

Van Dorn, flushed with victory, came up to their table at the college inn.

"I've won your pennant, Miss Marshall," he said, looking like a young god with his great, strong figure, his fair hair tossed back from his forehead.

"Did I promise it?" Helen asked uncertainly.

"Indeed you did," he stated securely, "and I shall wear it like a knight for his lady."

With her eyes avoiding Holden's, Helen untied the blue trophy slowly from the cane. In the sight of the whole room Van Dorn pinned it to his sleeve. He did it triumphantly, bending over her with an air of possession that made Holden set his lips sternly and turn to a tense study of the menu.

"May I come back and go home with you?" Van Dorn asked, but Helen shook her head.

"Irwin will take us," she said, "but I wish if you have a minute you'd show Aunt Sue the trophy room. She has never seen it."

As they went away she faced Holden.

"Oh, he took things so for granted," she told him. "I promised as I might to any of the college fellows. But what will people think?"

"What I think," Holden said slowly—"that you are going to marry Van Dorn."

Her steady glance met his.

"I am not going to marry him."

"Why not?" he probed.

"Because of this"—

About her neck at the end of a long chain she wore a locket of dark blue enamel marked with a "Y" in seed pearls.

"You remember it?" she asked as she opened it. "You gave it to me on the evening before that last game."

"Yes," he said, "I remember," and then as he saw what it contained he stopped.

Within was a wisp of blue silk stained and torn and crushed into that small space.

"It is all that was left of the little silk pennant that I gave you for luck," she told him. "After you were hurt I made them let me have it. I have kept it ever since."

His hand closed over it eagerly.

"Dear," he said, and his voice broke, "you know how I love you."

"I have never doubted it—even when you stayed away."

"How could I come? How could I ask you to marry me?"

"How does any man ask?" blushingly.

"But other men are not cripples."

"Oh, what difference does it make?" she flung out. "Haven't you the same mind and heart and soul as before?"

The light that illumined his face transfigured it.

"Marry me," he cried, "and mind and heart and soul shall go to the making of your happiness!"

Van Dorn came back presently, making triumphant progress with Aunt Sue in tow. On his arm was the blue pennant for all the world to gaze, but Holden's eyes rested on it serenely, for above his heart, hidden from the profane glances of the multitude, was the little stained wisp of sapphire silk, the token of his dear lady's favor.

Few people expose their ignorance by keeping their faces closed.

TORTURED WITH RHEUMATISM

Could Not Walk, Until "Fruit-a-tives" Completely Cured Him

CHATHAM, ONT., April 3rd. 1913.

"I am a veteran of the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny, volunteering from the Royal Artillery into the Royal Engineers, and served under Lord Roberts during the Indian Mutiny, and am a pensioner of the British Government. Fierce hand-to-hand fighting and continual exposure, left me a great sufferer from Rheumatism, so much so that my legs swelled up, making it impossible for me to walk. My bowels were so constipated that I only had one passage a week until I got to using "Fruit-a-tives". They cured me of both the Rheumatism and Constipation. In my regular employment, I walk thirty miles a day and enjoy perfect health. No more Rheumatism or Constipation. You are at perfect liberty to publish this letter if it will be advantageous to "Fruit-a-tives".

IOWA'S WALLED LAKE.

Mystery in the Water and the Stones That Surround It.

One of the curiosities of the west is the "Walled lake," a hundred miles west of Dubuque, Ia. Some two or three feet higher than the surrounding surface, the lake has a wall two feet wide on the bottom and five feet on the top, and the wall varies in height from ten to fifteen feet. The most remarkable circumstance connected with this strange lake is that the stones used in the construction of this wall vary from three to 1[illegible] pounds in weight and there are no stones whatsoever in the entire country surrounding the lake for five or ten miles.

There is no record, history or Indian legend to tell who brought these stones to build this wall, and to make the scene more mystifying a belt of woodland half a mile in length composed of oak surrounds the lake. With this exception, the entire country is a rolling prairie. The trees must have been planted about the same time the wall was built. In 1856 there was a great storm, and the ice and the lake broke down a large part of the wall, and the farmers living in the country were obliged to repair the wall to prevent their farms from being flooded. This curious lake covers a ground surface of 2,800 acres, and the water is twenty-five feet deep and as cold and clear as ice. No one seems to be able to tell where the water goes to or comes from, but it is always fresh and clear. —C. Gilbert Percival in Health.

Razed by an Earthquake.

Since 1861 the city of Mendoza, in Argentina, has not erected a structure above one story in height. In that year the greatest disaster which ever befell the place, an earthquake, demolished the town, and the inhabitants have been haunted ever since by the fear of a return of such a holocaust. The ruins of the great cathedral, whose walls crashed down upon the crowd of supplicants who had gathered within for protection, still stand as a warning. The old abandoned town lies about a mile from the new town and is a mass of ruins, scarcely a single house remaining intact.

The stage of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York city, is 101 feet wide, 80 feet deep and 77 feet high and is believed to be the largest in the United States.—London Answers.

Hence the Danger.

SHE HAD A NIMBLE TONGUE.

The Old Duchess Could and Did Swear Like a Trooper.

The old Duchess of St. Albans, who had been the widow of Mr. Coutts, the banker, when the duke, much her junior in age, married her, was one of the habitual visitors at Taymouth. My first view of her, however, was at the Crieff hotel, on her way through to Kenmore, when the duchess and her retinue arrived in eight carriages; for though by birth of no family, she had a most exalted idea of her own importance and when paying a series of short visits to country houses was so convinced of the savage condition of the highlands that she traveled always with her own chef and patissier, who alone were permitted to cook her meals at the inns she stopped at on the road.

I shall not easily forget the sight of the disgorging of the duchess' own chariot when it pulled up at the inn door! First emerged her grace herself, an enormously fat woman; then followed her three nieces, daughters of Sir Francis Bardett, whereof the youngest and best looking became inheritress of her wealth, and Baroness Burdett-Coutts.

These young ladies, evidently in mortal terror of their awful relative—not without reason—followed the duchess in single file, dutifully carrying each some article necessary to her grace's comfort — reticule, cushion, wraps books, footstool and bag of toilet requisites, the duchess' favorite lap dog and her pet parrot in a cage. After them came her grace's private physician, who traveled always in the same carriage as herself, so as to be on the spot, while the duke preferred the coach box to the company inside—and no wonder!

All the time the duchess' tongue was heard going—scolding, complaining, abusing everybody, from her husband downward, in unmeasured terms. The unfortunate nieces came in for no small share of her harangue and earned painfully any share of her fortune she may have left them in her will, for she swore like a trooper or a Billingsgate fishwife the whole time.—Lady Login in Cornhill Magazine.

CHEMICAL EXACTNESS.

Bunsen's Feat After His Goblet of Solution Had Been Upset.

The remarkable skill in dealing with the material of their experiments that some chemists have is well illustrated by the following story told of the great German chemist Professor Robert Bunsen:

Professor Bunsen evaporated fifty hogsheads of water from the Durkheim spring and carefully isolated from the residue a small quantity of the salts of two very rare elements, caesium and rubidium. He dissolved these salts in a small beaker of water and set them aside on his laboratory table.

One day a friend came to see Professor Bunsen. Unnoticed by the chemist his visitor in leaning against the laboratory table tipped over the beaker and spilled its contents on the floor and on his clothing. The solution looked like plain water, so the man thought nothing of the accident and a few minutes later took his departure.

Shortly after the gentleman had gone Bunsen noticed that the contents of the beaker had been spilled. Instantly he ran out to the street, overtook his friend and brought him back to the laboratory.

With water Bunsen carefully extracted the salts from the sleeve of the gentleman's coat and his underclothing washed his arm, cleaned off a drop that had spattered on his shoe, carefully washed the floor and the table, collected all the solutions together, purified them and on evaporation found that he had recovered the valuable salts! So perfect was his skill that he had not lost a weighable amount.—Youth's Companion.

There is greater variety in salt and cured fish than in meats.

DUPLICATING AN ACCIDENT.

Showing How It Happened Is Sometimes a Dangerous Risk.

"Showing just how an accident happened is sometimes serious business," said the adjuster of an accident insurance company. "The settlement of a claim isn't made any easier by having some reckless person insist on illustrating just how the thing occurred and then losing a hand, an arm or perhaps his life, before your very eyes.

"I shall never forget an elevator accident that occurred in the early days of my adjusting. The elevator was in an old building which had been remodeled for apartments and offices.

"A tenant rang the elevator bell on one of the upper floors. As there was no response to his signal, he put his head over the metal lattice work that inclosed the shaft to see if the elevator was up or down. Just then the elevator started, the heavy weights came down and crushed his skull.

"When I came to look the ground over the janitor insisted on showing me just how the man met his death. As an illustration he put his head out into the elevator shaft. Again the elevator started, the weights came down as before, and instead of one claim to settle there were two, although of course the latter one was set aside on the ground of gross carelessness.

"Another case was where a woman employed in a steam laundry had four fingers so crushed that amputation was necessary. The next day in an attempt to show me 'just how the thing happened' another woman lost her entire hand, and amputation was necessary above the wrist.

"Nowadays when I go to the scene of an accident I say: 'Give me full particulars. Show me the place and the position of the injured person, but for heaven's sake don't duplicate the accident for the sake of showing me "just how!"'"—New York Sun.

It Sometimes Pays.

A New York contractor said, apropos of a poor man who, after taking tremendous risks, had improved his position a little:

"This fellow's case proves to us that it is sometimes better to try the fire than to stay always in the frying pan." —Exchange.

Vaccinated Cattle.

The natives of Senegambia vaccinate their cattle against tuberculosis with a serum drawn from the lung of a beast in the incipient stages of the disease. They inject this on the forehead, and what looks almost like a third horn grows there.

SAFETY FIRST ON GRAND TRUNK

The Safety Committee, which is the executive body in charge of the Safety First Movement on Grand Trunk, held its first meeting in the Board of Directors' room, General Offices, Montreal, January 12th, at 10 a.m. The following members were present:—

Mr. H. G. Kelley, Vice-President, Chairman.

Mr. U. E. Gillen, General Superintendent, Chicago.

Mr. H. E. Whittenberger, General Superintendent, Toronto.

Mr. C. G. Bowker, General Superintendent, Montreal.

Mr. W. D. Robb, Superintendent of Motive Power, Montreal.

Mr. H. A. Safford, Chief Engineer, Montreal.

Mr. M. S. Blaiklock, Engineer, Maintenance of Way.

Mr. T. W. McRae, Claims Agent, Montreal.

Mr. Geo. Bradshaw, Safety Engineer, Secretary.

This is the first meeting of the committee since the organization of the Safety Movement. The report read by the Secretary disclosed the fact that twenty-four Division, Shop and Terminal Safety Committees have been organized on the system with a membership of about six hundred. During the month of December, the members of these committees actually corrected five hundred unsafe physical conditions which might perhaps have caused injury, and cautioned employees against unsafe methods, and practices in about four hundred and eighty cases. The General Safety Committee passed upon a number of important recommendations submitted by the local committees.

The report of the Secretary, which was read at this meeting, showed the interesting fact that since the inauguration of the Safety Movement on the Grand Trunk on August 15th, 1913, injuries to employees have been reduced to the extent of 11.5 per cent. and that during the same period fatal injuries to employees on duty have been decreased 50 per cent., as compared with same period of 1912. Traffic was heavier in the latter period than in the former.

The officers and employees of the Grand Trunk are taking a keen personal interest in correcting unsafe conditions and practices and to this interest is due the favorable record above cited, which is one of the most remarkable that has ever been achieved by the Safety Movement on any Railway, and especially so in view of the short time in which the movement has been in force.

SIR CHARLES TUPPER

LONDON, Jan. 15.—Messrs. Constable will publish in the spring the reminiscences of Sir Charles Tupper, which W. A. Harkin was preparing at the time of his death.

Bernard McEvoy and A. E. Greenwood are completing the manuscript and a preface is expected by Lord Strathcona.

LESTER BROOKS LOSES LIFE TRYING TO SAVE ANOTHER

A Story of Heroism Almost Without Precedent in Canadian History—Two Others Had Narrow Escape.

PORT COLBORNE, Ont., Jan. 15.—One hero, Lester Brooks, lost his life, and two others, Jack McCracken and Charles Guidette narrowly missed death when trying to rescue the former, who had jumped into the bell of a heated blasting furnace at the Canadian Furnace Co.'s plant here Tuesday night, in an effort to rescue an Hungarian laborer named Joseph Postico, who had slipped into the furnace while caulking ore. The story of their heroism is almost without precedent in the annals of Canadian industrial development.

The crude ore had become frozen at the summit of the furnace, and Lester Brooks, who had charge of the night gang, told Postico to go aloft and force it into the upper bell.

By some means or other, which may never be explained, the Hungarian missed his footing and slipped down into the heated chamber. Hearing his piercing cry, Brooks rushed to one of the dampers, 12 feet below the roof of the dome, and jumped into the awful chamber, with a vain hope of saving Postico's life, but he, like the Hungarian, went to instant death. The men were burned and asphyxiated.

Following their chief, the remainder of the night gang working nearby, rushed to the door through which Brooks had disappeared, but the fumes threw them back. Brooks and Postico lay prostrate on the ore, but out of reach of willing hands. McCracken and Guidette, knowing full well what it meant to enter the chamber, volunteered to go in and bring out the two men, whom they thought were alive, but unconscious. Their first attempt was abortive, then they secured ropes, and leaving one end in the hands of workers who stood at a safe distance, they filled their lungs with fresh air, entered the door, and groped their way towards the bodies, fastened a loop around the waists of the prostrate men, and rushed back to safety in the nick of time. They soon revived when taken out into the fresh air. Brooks and Postico were dead when pulled out, and in their case death was instantaneous.

Little is known of Postico. Brooks was a married man about 45 years of age. He is survived by a widow only, as he lost his only child, a son, a short time ago. He was a trusted employe of the Canadian Furnace Co., for whom he had worked a number of years.

PASSENGERS AND CREW SAVED FROM COBEQUID

Wireless Operator Could Send Only One Call For Help.

YARMOUTH, N.S., Jan. 15.—The hundred and six persons who were on board the steamer Cobequid are safe, and ninety-four of them are now in Yarmouth. The two rescue ships, the Westport and John L. Cann, arrived here last night shortly after eight o'clock, the former with seventy-two and the latter with twenty-two. There are twelve men, including Captain S. Boweson, R.M.R., the ships' physician, W. H. Lester, the wireless operator, and nine others still on board the Cobequid, with the Dominion Government steamers Lansdowne and Lady Laurier standing by to make rescue at daybreak this morning.

The navigation officers of the ship refuse to talk, and the company officials, of whom there were three on board, Captain Hicks, the marine superintendent, and Messrs. J. Allsop and W. Charles Kenney, two of the directors, were too exhausted to give any statement last night, but will talk to-day.

From the junior officials and members of the crew it is learned that the ship struck during a dense storm at 6.15 Tuesday morning, and filled in a very few minutes. The wireless operator was able to get out one call for help before his aerials iced up, after which he was helpless. Her furnace fires were put out in a few minutes, and the passengers and crew were forced by the rapidly rising waters to the boat deck, where they took refuge in the captain's quarters.

For twenty-four hours, in the midst of one of the worst storms ever experienced on this coast, with the thermometer half hovering around zero, and with winter seas sweeping their vessel and breaking it up beneath them, these people had to huddle together. Yesterday morning one of the men succeeded in getting a metal bucket, in which some holes were punched to make a draft, and in which a small fire was started, where some warm drinks were prepared for the women and children.

The party arrived here with nothing but what they stood in, and ten of them, all men, had to be sent to the hospital with frost-bites and minor injuries. Two of the worst were S. Hawkins, a seaman, who was below when the ship struck, and rushed on deck with practically no clothing. Another man named Daniel Hurley, an oiler, had his right arm broken, and his right leg cut badly by being jammed in a door.

GUELPH, Jan. 15.—The most successful meeting yet held in the thirty-five years' existence of the Ontario Agricultural and Experimental Union came to a close yesterday afternoon.

Listowel Suffers by Fire.

LISTOWEL, Jan. 15.—Fire doing $10,000 damage wiped out the town hall and the stables of the Grand Central Hotel and seriously scorched the hotel and the implement warehouse of Robert Marks and other nearby buildings. The fire broke out about two o'clock, probably owing to a defective furnace.

COUNT ITO DEAD.

Famous Japanese Admiral Was National Naval Hero.

TOKIO, Jan. 15.—Count Yukyo Ito, fleet admiral of the Japanese navy, died yesterday morning in his seventy-first year.

Count Ito had more to do with the development of the Japanese navy than any other man. He entered the service in 1868. In the war between China and Japan in 1894 he took a very prominent part, commanding the combined squadrons of the Japanese fleet which fought the battle of the Yellow Sea, afterward blockading the port of Wei-Hai-Wei and destroying the Chinese fleet. He was then appointed chief of the naval general staff, and many honors were conferred on him for his services in the war.

During the Russo-Japanese war he acted as chief of the naval general staff and contributed greatly by his strategy to the retention of the command of the seas by the Japanese fleet.

Fireman Killed In Blaze.

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 15.— One fireman was killed, two men were seriously injured and damage estimated at $150,000 was caused by a spectacular fire which early yesterday destroyed the Bacon department store at 2,175 Washington street, and a building adjoining. While the wind blew a gale and the thermometer registered ten below, seventy-five families were rushed into the streets in their night clothes, when the sparks were carried nearly a mile and caused forty roof fires.

Cardinal's Will Not Found.

ROME, Jan. 15.—The search for the late Cardinal Rampolla's apartments for a box alleged to contain a recent testament made by the cardinal, was suspended yesterday by the investigating judge, but will be resumed to-day. Meanwhile the judge interrogated several persons with a view to ascertaining whether it was actually known that such a testimonial existed.

Train Leaves Tracks.

KINGSTON, Jan. 15.—As a heavy freight train, eastbound, was pulling out of the Grand Trunk station at four o'clock yesterday morning, the engine went off on a blind switch and left the tracks. Engineer Varley of Belleville had a narrow escape, the train ran into the siding. The ties were ripped up and the rails displaced.

Sink Hole Baffles Engineers.

KINGSTON, Jan. 15.—The sink holye at Sucker Lake, which is causing so much trouble and holding up the opening of the new lake shore line of the C.P.R., is a mystery to engineers. It is only about 200 feet across the shallow end of a small lake. A forest of timber and a mountain of stone and gravel have been used in an endeavor to fill the hole. On a number of occasions this hole has been filled in, but to the disappointment of the engineers, the engineers, the material continues to disappear.

Seven Die From Cold.

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—From five below zero at 2 a.m. the lowest temperature recorded here in 15 years, the mercury climbed slowly upward in New York and vicinity yesterday, reaching six above at noon. The backbone of the cold spell appeared to be snapped.

The death list in the greater city due to the cold was estimated at seven.

Wilson Served Punch With "Kick."

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—Roping off the East Room into a series of pens, serving of punch that had a "kick" to it, and a crowd of three thousand, were features of President Wilson's first state function, the reception held Tuesday night at the White House. The Wilsons maintained the Taft custom of serving a buffet luncheon.

LONDON'S LORD MAYOR

SIR THOMAS BOWATER COMES OF A FIGHTING LINE.

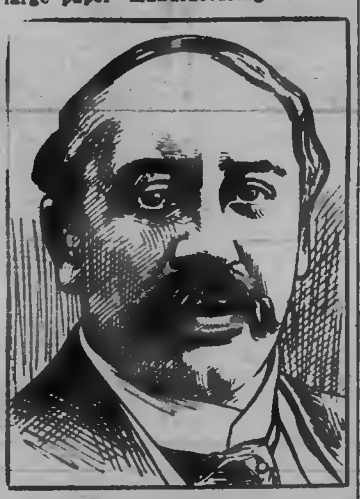
New Chief Executive of the Metropolis Is Descended From a Famous Admiral and a Famous General—Was Always at Foot of Classes Except In Arithmetic and Was a Most Unruly Pupil.

The new Lord Mayor of London, Sir Thomas Vansittart Bowater, is fifty-one years old and one of the youngest men to hold that office. He was born in Manchester and is the first man from that city ever elected to the London office. He seems to be different in many other respects from the usual conception of the holder of this romantic office, which one associates with memories of Dick Whittington and his marvelous cat and other men of humble birth and friendless youth.

Sir Thomas is a descendant of two distinguished British fighters — Admiral Edward Bowater, who made a splendid record at the battle of Trafalgar, and General Sir Edward Bowater, who held a command at Waterloo.

The new Lord Mayor gave no promise in his youth of his present career. He was generally at the bottom of his classes, except in arithmetic, which he learned without effort, and was occupied most of the time in fighting the other boys, gaining the reputation of being the most unruly boy in school and the hardest fighter.

He became more studious in later years and is now at the head of a large paper manufacturing firm in London, but he has retained his youthful enthusiasm for sport and expects to do a great deal while in office for the Olympic games.



SIR THOMAS VANSITTARD BOWATER.

The Lord Mayor rules only over the ancient city of London, about one square mile in area, which in olden days was inclosed in stone walls and defended by troops armed to the teeth. But this area includes the Bank of England, the Tower of London, St. Paul's Cathedral and the Guildhall, where all the important mercantile and banking interests of the metropolis are bound together by an organization now many hundreds of years old.

Traditionally the sovereign has no right in the city of London except by permission of the Lord Mayor, and this official takes precedence in his own precincts of even the Prince of Wales.

In striking contrast to the usual election of a mayor of a Canadian city is the choosing of the Lord Mayor of London. There is no pre-election campaign, and the ordinary citizen has no part in naming the chief executive of the ancient city on the Thames. He is chosen by the aldermen from among their own number. He must necessarily be a man of wealth and substance, for the Lord Mayor receives no salary and is under heavy expense by virtue of his office. The corporation sets aside $50,000 for an entertainment fund, and he is expected to add an equal amount. The banquets at the Mansion House are gorgeous and cost enormous sums. The Lord Mayor is also expected to lead off with the largest subscription to every charitable cause which has the support of the city of London. Altogether his year of office is a costly honor, but he is invariably created a baronet before retiring, which secures a title for his family in future generations. The new Lord Mayor has four sons and two daughters.

Wesley and Whitefield.

In the mouths of Wesley and Whitefield the repeated sermon became both necessary and effective, for they journeyed and found new hearers for old sermons. Wesley, for instance, traveled 4,500 miles a year until he was well on toward threescore years and ten and, traveling, preached two, three and occasionally four times a day. With Whitefield particularly the sermon gained by repetition. Thus writes his biographer: "It never reached its highest point of effectiveness until he had preached its forty times. Then it became on his lips a perfect instrument of persuasion." Whitefield, it has been calculated, preached over 18,000 sermons.

Professional Forgers.

Forging is generally quite an amateur affair in England, but in India, where the professional forger flourishes, it is the business of a lifetime. A father, for instance, who thinks he detects in his son an aptitude for the occupation, apprentices him to one of its masters. He learns among other things, engraving, photography, paper making, chemistry, so as to deal with colored inks, and, above all, fine penmanship and delicate miniature-like painting. After several years hard work he is pronounced proficient and sets up in business for himself, generally commencing by counterfeiting Government stamps.

BONDHOLDERS QUERULOUS

They Say Wilson Has Crippled Mexico's Finances

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—Formal notice from the City of Mexico through the American charge d'affaires yesterday that the suspension of the payment of interest on the Mexican national debt covers a period of six months only, was not regarded here as conveying much encouragement to the holders of Mexican bonds. State Department officials do not doubt that if the revolution still is in progress at the end of six months there will be another default for the same reason that brought about the present suspension of payment.

Mutterings of discontent among European bondholders, it was suggested yesterday forebode a renewal of pressure from the European Governments upon the United States to take some decided action to safeguard the interests of their subjects in Mexico. At one of the embassies it was stated that it was quite out of the question for any of the European powers, either individually or collectively, to intervene in Mexico now that they have practically, if not formally, confided to the United States the protection of those interests, but that it was assumed that the United States would take notice of the patent distress of these European interests.

Some administration officials are disposed to believe that Gen. Huerta has deliberately held up these interest payments with the purpose of forcing intervention if possible. In their view, the Provisional President, alarmed at the success of the constitutionalists, prefers to yield to the United States Government as an intervener and thereby martyrize himself in the eyes of the Mexican people rather than surrender the reins of power to the men who have sworn to feed his carcases to the sharks of Vera Cruz Bay.

A Businesslike Suiter.

"No-o, he isn't the sort of a husband I should have chosen for my daughter, but I think perhaps he'll get along in the world all right."

"What way does he differ from the man you would have chosen?"

"When he proposed to my daughter and she had told him to see me, he sent me a note telling me where his office is and what his office hours are and asking me to drop around and see him when convenient."—Houston Post.

OUTLOOK IS BRIGHT.

Good Times Will Continue For Ontario Dairymen.

STRATFORD, Jan. 15.—"The outlook is bright for those engaged in the dairy business, said President Facey of the Western Ontario Dairymen's Association at its 47th annual convention here yesterday. The increased markets for cattle and dairy products have produced a demand for cattle in Ontario, and these have advanced in price at least 25 per cent. in the past year. The quantity of milk and cream required in our cities has made a good market for these products."

The report of the directors for the year 1913 dealt with a variety of subjects relevant to the dairying industry. The report noted the stimulus given to live stock raising by the U. S. lower tariff, and predicted that during the next few years stock-raising should be a very profitable pursuit in Ontario. The directors did not anticipate a great expansion of the export trade in milk and cream owing to the insatiable home demand.

Man Missing at Falls.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Jan. 15.—The police department and a posse of citizens searched all day for Jas. Lockhart, 48 years old, who disappeared from his home on Queen street early Tuesday morning. He was clad only in a night shirt, and it is believed that he has perished in the severe cold. Lockhart, who lived with his mother, had been ill for some time.

COAL PRICES DROPPED STILL FURTHER BY FITZGERALD

Better Buy Now at These, the Lowest Made: $1.00 Per Ton Below Regular Prices

I propose to meet any competition that is put up by any dealer and meet it in a decisive way. Consumers are urged to send in orders at once.

It will pay to buy and burn coal at these prices. Don't delay. We deliver the best thoroughly screened coal, first quality Lehigh Valley Coal, every load.

	Regular Price	Fitzgerald's Price
Egg Coal	$8.00	$7.25
Stove Coal	8.25	7.25
Nut Coal	8.50	7.50
Pea Coal	7.00	6.00

I claim that the prices heretofore asked for coal have been reasonable, considering the expenses of the business. Below I give a statement of facts in connection with the cost of handling coal in this city. One ton of coal of 2,000 lbs.

1 ton nut (at Buffalo)	$5.36
Freight from bridge	$1.25
State export tax	.10
Total cost on track	$6.71
Handling cost in this city	$1.35
	$8.06
Selling price to public	$8.50
Leaving profit	44c. per ton

COST OF ECONOMICAL COAL HANDLING
(From the Coal Trade Journal.)

In answer to an inquiry with reference to the net profit per ton on coal we state that the profit can fairly be assumed by deducting the following items of expenses, these being based upon a fairly equipped yard, up-to-date generally:

Advertising	$0.03	per ton
Breakage, lost in transit, culm	.15	" "
Dumping in pocket	.01½	" "
Office and general expenses	.12½	" "
Insurance and taxes	.03	" "
Yard superintendent and employes	.13	" "
Interest on investment or rent	.10	" "
Bad debts and equipment depreciation	.02	" "
Office employes	.15	" "
Owner's salary	.15	" "
Interest on stock carried	.02	" "
Average cost of delivery	.50	" "
Total handling cost to the dealer, per ton	$1.42

The public may ask how I can afford to sell coal at the prices I now make. I am selling the coal at cost on track and only adding the cost of cartage to consumers (70c. per ton.) Overhead expenses will be charged to other lines of business.

GEORGE STREET W.M.S. HELD MEMORIAL SERVICE

At the regular meeting of the W. M. S. of the George street Methodist Church on Tuesday, a very impressive memorial service was held for the late Mrs. Platt, of Picton, formerly president of the Bay of Quinte branch.

The program was as follows:

Hymn—Calling us away.

Prayer—Mrs. Kendry.

Lesson—1 Cor. 15th Chap.

Mrs. Campbell and Miss Munro spoke of their personal acquaintance with Mrs. Platt.

A solo was given by Mrs. Mather and Mrs. S. R. Armstrong read the following resolution:

Resolved: That we desire at this first meeting of our Auxiliary since our dearly beloved president, Mrs. Platt, was called up higher, to place on record our deep grief at her loss, knowing well that our loss is her gain. May her lovely life inspire us to follow her as she followed Christ. And that a copy of this little tribute be sent to her deeply bereaved husband and daughters.

Miss J. C. Wood read Mrs. Platt's last message to the societies. On account of her husband's illness Mrs. Platt had to resign her position as president. Following is the message:

Dear Fellow Workers:—I have had a glad surprise. In this mail this morning I noticed a large envelope which did not interest me particularly, until I noticed the hand writing of our treasurer, and then I was all attention. A grand total of $18,388.61 and an increase of $1,519.22 in our branch receipts. Surely this is an occasion for gladness and thanksgiving! For the last few hours I have been rejoicing at this increase and regretting the decrease in Auxiliary givings, especially those of my own district. I need not tell you that I am sorry not to share in the privileges and labor of this branch meeting. You know me too well to believe that I would accept a responsible position and then desert you in the hour of need, if it were not necessary. I made every arrangement to be present and until today, hoped to be with you, if only for one day, but at the last moment, find it impossible to leave home. For twenty years and more, my husband has encouraged me to continue my work in the society, and has borne cheerfully any inconvenience that was occasioned by my absence from home. But now he is suffering and needs me and my duty is to him. I am sure you will all help to make this the best branch meeting in our history. Any disappointment you may feel because of my absence, will be more than counterbalanced by the presence of our beloved Board President, Mrs. Ross. This alone will make our meeting and this year memorable. I have been wishing more earnestly I believe, than I ever wished anything for our work that we could in some way commemorate this anniversary, the completion of our twenty years of happy fellowship in Branch work. If I could have my wish, this is what it would be: A pledge from each delegate that she will for this year at least, give more time to study of the needs and results of W. M. S. work and will do what she can to awaken interest in others. Perhaps some one asks, do you consider study of greater interest than prayer and systematic giving. Not more important than prayer, but it is first in order, because without knowledge there can not be intelligent earnest prayer and there will not be cheerful, large-hearted surrender of our means. In the Master's Command, this is the order: "Lift up your eyes and look upon the fields," and then "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest." Can we not have a missionary study class and a mission study secretary in each auxiliary and circle? The author of our new text book says very truly: "We can never give to others an outlook wider than our own; we can never interest others in a work with which we are vaguely or imperfectly familiar." She says further, as members of women's clubs, we have spent a year on a study of one author; of one phase of history, perhaps of one play of Shakespeare. Many of us have to plead guilty to a deeper interest in almost any other class of literature than in mission study. Undoubtedly the lack of study has been our weakness in the past. It accounts for the inefficiency of auxiliary workers and their ineffective efforts to win and hold new members. We need to strengthen our forge as from without and I believe it is really more important to train our present membership to greater efficiency than to seek for new members. More earnest workers as well as new members should be our aim. "Our new text book, 'The King's Business' is a mine of wealth, perhaps the most helpful of any text book that has been published. You can not afford to leave it unread and you should try to have it as widely used as possible in your auxiliary and circle. You will also find many valuable new leaflets on the literature table. No matter what your particular need may be, there will be something to help you. Let me mention a few of the best: "The Gift of Self," "The White Gift," "The Gift Without the Giver," "A Model Auxiliary Officer," "How Long Must I Wait?" "Giving From a Girl's Standpoint," "The Third Prayer," "Young Women in the Program of Christ." There are doubtless many more equally as good which I have not read. Then there is the free leaflet prepared by Mrs. Ross, giving the present statistics of our work in brief. And last but not least, our official organ, the Missionary Outlook with the monthly reports from the fields which we must circulate as widely as possible. This is my last official message for you must not elect me to any office, nor as delegate to the Board of Managers, but if ever I can help any one by a letter, please let me know. If I could not keep in touch with you in some way, I would feel that something very sweet and precious had gone out of my life.

Always your friend,

H. L. PLATT,

Picton, June 8th, 1913.

The meeting closed by singing "A Few More Years Shall Roll."

WEAKER YESTERDAY.

Sir James Whitney Was Unable to Take Nourishment.

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—Sir James Whitney's condition showed no material change last night, though he was gradually growing weaker. The splendid vitality which he has always manifested, however, stood by him, and while his friends said yesterday they feared for the ultimate outcome of the first real illness of his life, they were satisfied that unless something unexpected occurred he would hold out for some time and even be able to return to Toronto.

The long rest which he obtained by sleeping from 11 o'clock Tuesday night to 10 o'clock Wednesday morning produced a good effect. His failure to take nourishment as heretofore, however, offset the advantage thus gained to some extent, and the night bulletin, issued somewhat later than usual, read as follows:

"10 p.m.—Sir James Whitney has taken little food and grows slightly weaker, but has considerable reserve strength.

"R. A. Pyne, M.D."

THREE HUNDRED STRIKERS BARRICADED IN HALL

Johannesburg Men Defy Police—Secretary Bain of the Federation of Trades and the More Desperate of His Followers Are Resisting all Efforts to Arrest Them.

JOHANNESBURG, Jan. 15.—The siege of the Trades Hall, where Secretary Bain of the Federation of Trades and a band of his supporters are defying the police from behind barricades, constituted the main feature of the strike drama yesterday. After the hall had been raided by police and detectives yesterday morning without avail, great crowds gathered and the police were compelled to make several bayonet charges owing to the aggressive attitude of the people, many of whom were slightly injured. With the final bayonet charge, the police cleared the entire neighborhood and a cordon of police with fixed bayonets, was thrown around the park. The situation of Bain and his friends is serious, as they are cut off from water and supplies.

The police commander explained that he had no intention of again attempting an assault on the hall, for he considered that the 300 men are as good as in jail. The besieged have been able to get food supplies from nearby restaurants.

Eventually Bain and his followers were completely isolated, being cut off from all supplies. A correspondent, who passed the strikers' pickets by aid of a permit, found a remarkable scene inside the hall last night. The 300 inmates were all fully armed. They expressed themselves as determined to resist and attempt to storm their stronghold. The windows and doors were barricaded with boxes filled with bricks. Openings were left for rifle fire. Other boxes were filled with ammunition.

The defenders are subsisting chiefly on fruit, quantities of which are stored in the hall. They also have some stale bread. Many of the men were dressed only in trousers and boots. It is evident from their gaunt, hungry faces that they were already suffering hardships from the siege. They stoutly asserted, however, that the hall would not be taken until all their ammunition was exhausted, and not a bar or iron or a stick was left to wield.

A bomb explosion occurred yesterday at Benone, slightly injuring three mounted troopers and several strikers arrested by the police near the same place were rescued by their comrades, but were subsequently re-arrested by the troops.

The Transvaal Railway authorities are maintaining a partial service, and are attempting to secure supply of food and fuel. The bakers are determined not to strike for the present, but they refuse to bake for the police, troops or special constables. One firm, however, has decline to be bound by this agreement.

The miners continue to stop work as fast as their shifts end. The department of mines announces that it will keep the mines running, and has no intention of sending the natives home.

GROWTH OF A CHURCH.

St. Paul's In Toronto Was a Tiny Place 71 Years Ago.

It was in a spirit of ambassadorship of the gospel that the early settlers in Toronto raised to the worship of God the first log chapel and set apart the Sabbath. Perilous times these, when men moved in the shadow of death and knew not what a day might bring forth. It was an unpretentious House of God that was opened seventy-one years ago where the forest barred the way northwards to the encroachments of Toronto and where St. Paul's Church now stands on Bloor street, a low, narrow frame building, it provided ample accommodation for the hundred souls that comprised its first congregation. Its wooden spire, hoisted to the top by willing hands, was built of four pine trees.

Eighteen years later the wooden church had given place to a handsome stone structure of typical English design, seated to accommodate three hundred and fifty people. For thirty years this sacred edifice stood like a sentinel on the outposts of the city and within its walls another generation grew into the fullness of Christian knowledge.

In 1900 three hundred more worshippers were provided with seats by an enlargement of the church, and so rapid was the growth of population at this period that four years later the building was further extended, giving seating accommodation for 1,250.

Such is the record of steady growth from the modest forest chapel, built of wood, to the spacious and handsome architectural structure that has adorned Bloor street east in ever increasing size for over forty years.

Three years ago the corner-stone of a new church building was laid, capable of seating 2,500 people. The grain of mustard seed planted in 1842 has grown to enormous dimensions. The forest chapel has become the city temple.

The other day the congregation of St. Paul's worshipped for the first time in the new and imposing building in which for three years past the clang of hammer and chisel has never ceased. It approaches Westminster Abbey in dimensions, and is considerably larger than Exeter Cathedral.

The facade of the church on Bloor street is designed in what might be commonly termed four "stories"; three large arched doorways deeply recessed, with well-designed arch mouldings and traceried heads, each varying in design; a low arcade of lancet-pointed arches supported on columns standing about two feet in front of the lights behind; three towering windows with richly varied tracery, mullions and transoms, and emphasized by columns and archivolt mouldings; a traceried stone balustrade, set out in relief from the main gable, which rises behind it, and is flanked on either side by heavy buttresses, which finish in traceried pinnacles. In each transept is a huge rose window, quite worthy to stand in an old world cathedral. These windows are forty feet high and twenty-seven feet wide, the diameter of the rose itself being twenty-two feet.

Britain Buys Our Cheese.

Great Britain is still the premier market for Canadian cheese, according to statistics prepared by the Department of Customs at Ottawa. During the month of October last Canada exported 21,120,000 pounds of cheese, valued at $2,802,000. Of this Great Britain took $2,776,000 worth, Newfoundland $10,433 and the United States was a poor third with $5,885. The balance was distributed among British West Indies, Bermuda, British South Africa, China, Japan and Hong Kong.

Replacing Postoffices.

Fifty-three new postoffices were opened in Canada on Dec. 1. Eighty-seven were closed on the same date, of which seventy were discontinued owing to the inauguration of the rural free delivery system.

Varieties of Carbon.

The diamond, the graphite of my lead pencil, the plumbago with which I polish the stove, the soot of my chimney and of my lamp are all chemically the same. All are variations of carbon. By analysis the diamond reduces to pure carbon and a little iron. But, given pure carbon and a little iron, can the chemist, by synthesis, produce the diamond? Science says that he can, though the diamonds made in laboratories by the crystallization of carbon are, as yet, minute in size and commercially valueless. Nevertheless they are true diamonds, and the process of their formation is in miniature that of old Mother Earth when, with volcanic basin as seething crucible and toppling mountains as pressure force, the magic mystery of crystallization of carbon went on silently and successfully in what are now the diamond beds of Borneo, Brazil, Colombia, California and Kimberley.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Wanted a Treat.

A man may be rough looking and yet have a touch of sentiment about him.

A ragged, ill kept looking man appeared at the door of a woman's home and in a pleading tone asked:

"Have you a piece of cake, lady, to give to a poor man who hasn't had a bite for two days?"

"Cake?" echoed the woman in surprise. "Isn't bread good enough for you?"

"Ordinarily, yes, ma'am. But this is my birthday," explained the tramp.—New York Journal.

Triumph of a Sausage.

Westphalia, in Prussia, is the home of the sausage. There, it is said, a trader will name no fewer than 400 different kinds of sausage. A sausage exhibition was held recently in Germany, at which 1,000 varieties of sausage were shown.

In this connection the story is told of a young Prussian who, though he had received an expensive training as a chemist, shut himself up in his laboratory and instead of devising a new dye, safety match, motor engine, explosive, aeroplane or photographic lens took pork, veal, olives, pepper, fennel, old wine, cheese, apples, cinnamon and herrings' roes and from them evolved a wonderful and totally original "wurst," the best of its kind. He has amassed a considerable fortune from its sale.—Berlin Cor. New York Sun.

ESKIMO HOSPITALITY.

A Dinner Drama That Illustrates a Trait of the Natives.

A custom of the Eskimos, which illustrates in a striking manner the character of the people, is thus described by Dr. S. K. Hutton in his work, "Among the Eskimos of Labrador:"

"It was a queer dinner party. The table was pushed into the corner and littered as usual with clothes and books and relics of work hastily laid aside. Dinner was spread on the floor. The center of the feast was an enormous pot, heaped with lumps and slabs and ribs and joints of raw seal meat. Round the pot the family squatted, every one except the baby, armed with a businesslike knife. Cutting off pieces of flesh or gnawing at bones, they munched and chewed and smacked their lips with great relish.

"So busy were they all that perhaps I was the only one to notice a slow, shuffling step passing the window. The footsteps turned into the porch, and I heard the dogs yelping as somebody cleared them out of the way. A groping hand felt for the latch, and the door silently opened. A voice said, 'Akause'—'Be strong, all of you'—and Apkik, a young man of the village, came in, choking and coughing at the sudden warmth. Nobody seemed to take much notice, but John gave a laconic 'Ah!' in answer to his greeting, and the circle widened to make room for the newcomer.

"Apkik sat down and pulled a knife out of his belt. I watched him pityingly as he helped himself with lean and shaking fingers. It was not long before he was satisfied, for he was sadly listless and weary, and with a simple 'Nakomek' he wiped his knife upon his trousers leg and slowly went out. Again nobody took much notice. John said 'Ah!' and Apkik shut the door after him.

"I was mystified by this strange little drama, and I suppose that I showed my wonder in my face, for John answered the question that was in my thoughts, just as if I had asked it.

"'We all know Apkik,' he said. 'He is a poor young man who cannot hunt or work for himself, and we know that he cannot work because he is ill. I did not invite him to come, but he is quite welcome. No poor man lacks for a meal as long as there is food. It is a custom of the people.'"

Early Hairpins.

The women of early days possessed bronze bodkins made like those of our time, and in their toilet they employed small tweezers of a pattern that has not altered in 2,000 years. To retain the hair in the desired fashion they had not, it is true, hit on the idea of bending a wire double, but they did employ for this purpose straight bronze pins exactly like the modern hatpin and showing a big spherical head.

SONG OF THE CARROT.

Where Is the Poet Who Will Glorify This Neglected Vegetable?

Why does no poet arise to sing the song of the carrot, the hardest worked vegetable in the kingdom? Much is said in favor of the pie-built pumpkin, the gathering of corn is a commonplace theme, but the poor carrot has been neglected—yea, even scorned.

For diversity of use the carrot has pumpkin and corn backed over the garden wall. Men feed carrots to cattle, increasing the dairy output; they feed them to other stock sometimes improving its temper. A carrot artificially hollowed with a knife makes an elegant Japanese vase. Sufficiently hardened by harsh contact with the world, a carrot may be used for a weapon, either operated like a mallet with a handle or buried like a Russian bomb

Carrots are sometimes even used for food by human beings. They are a chief ingredient in vegetable soup. Mixed with butter, they improve its color. They make better pumpkin pie than pumpkins themselves. Served as hubbard squash, they make one wonder why squashes were invented.

The answer to the high cost of living cry is carrots. Johnson had his Boswell. Whom will the carrot have?—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Power of a Great Wave.

The remains of an excursion steamer may be seen in a hayfield 300 feet above the lake of Loen, in Norway. This oddly placed wreck is the sole relic of a terrible landslide which took place in 1905, when the whole side of a mountain suddenly slipped into the lake, raising a great wave more than 300 feet high, which drowned everybody living along the shores, more than sixty people perishing. The steamer, which was moored on the lake at the time, was carried on the crest of the wave over a perpendicular cliff and deposited, as already stated, more than 300 feet above the normal level of the water, more than a quarter of a mile away from its anchorage. It is a torn and battered wreck, every bit of woodwork has been wrenched off, and the twisted steel work testifies to the force of the wave which cast it ashore.—Wide World Magazine.

ERUPTION IS ABATING

Volcano at Sakura—Japan is Quieting Down.

TOKIO, Jan. 15.—Official reports yesterday afternoon from Southern Japan, where volcanic eruptions and earthquakes have caused heavy loss of life, panic and great property damage, are that the eruption of the volcano at Sakura-Jima, which has caused the most devastation, is abating.

Just how heavy has been the loss of life cannot yet be estimated. Sakura, where the greatest loss of life undoubtedly occurred, cannot be visited because the eruption of Sakura-Jima continues. So the story in this respect must wait. Troops and warships are now in the vicinity and a search of the island will be made at the first opportunity.

Kagoshima, the nearest big city to Sakura, while it suffered great damage from the earthquakes, does not appear to have sustained a severe loss of life. H. Ijuin, former Japanese Minister to China, who lives at Kagoshima, sent a despatch to the Foreign Office in which he said that ten persons have been killed and thirty injured there. He also stated that great confusion prevailed in the city.

WORKED AMONG THE INDIANS

Rev. Dr. Crosby, Methodist Missionary, is Dead.

VANCOUVER, Jan. 15.—Rev. Dr. Thomas Crosby, a pioneer Methodist missionary, who left his home in Woodstock, Ont., over fifty years ago to labor among the Indians on the northern coast of British Columbia, and continued in that work until about four years ago, died Tuesday night, aged 73. His headquarters for more than a quarter of a century was at Port Simpson, near Prince Rupert, where he established the Crosby Home for Indian girls.

Dr. Crosby was one of the aggressive and tireless missionaries of the Methodist Church, the lodest and most famous of those in the home fields. He early engaged in Y.M.C.A. activities and felt strongly called to enter the Chinese mission field, but later found his life work.

An account of his deeply interesting experiences is given in his book, "Among the Ankomenums of the Pacific Coast," published in 1907.

New Elections in Bulgaria.

SOFIA, Bulgaria, Jan. 15. — The Bulgarian Parliament was dissolved yesterday by the Premier, Dr. V. Rados-Lavoff, because the opposition refused to pass a provisional appropriation on account.

The sitting had lasted nine hours, and when the contrary vote was cast the Premier immediately rose and read a ukase signed by the King declaring that the Parliament had shown its incapacity for work.

The new chamber must be elected within two months, according to the constitution and the elections are based on general manhood suffrage.

Shot Turkish Assassin.

PARIS, Jan. 15.—A double tragedy connected with Turkish political intrigue was enacted yesterday at the Paris residence of Gen. Mehmed Cherif Pasha, one of the chiefs of the radical Turkish party.

A strange Turk called to see the Ottoman politician and was refused admission by the valet, Ismael Hakki, whom he immediately shot dead.

Cherif Pasha's son-in-law, Salil Bey, hearing the detonation then ran into the corridor, where he shot and killed the assassin.

Kean's Suggestion.

When Charles Kean was playing the part of Richard the Third his fearful grimaces almost frightened the other actors out of their wits. One night a new man took the character of the sentinel who awoke Richard. When asked, "Who is there?" he should have taken up the cue with the words: "'Tis I, my lord. The village cock hath thrice proclaimed the hour of morn." But Kean's facial contortions threw the sentinel into such a fit of stage fright that he forgot most of his words, stammering, "'Tis I, my lord, 'tis I, my lord; the—the village cock!" He repeated this three or four times, so that when Kean said, "Then why on earth don't you crow?" the audience was convulsed with laughter.

A CULINARY TREAT

Served in a Little Cake Shop in a Little French Town.

THE COST WAS LITTLE ALSO.

Surprises Came Thick and Fast in the Way of Meals, but the Greatest Surprise of All Came After the Gastronomic Conquest Was Ended.

They were talking about dainty dinners when the man who goes abroad said, "The best meal I ever got was in the back parlor of a small shop in a one horse town, and it cost me 50 cents."

Urged to tell his story, he continued: "It was in a small provincial French town—Blois. A friend of mine called Bodfish enticed me there by looking me up in Paris and throwing a fit about the delights of the town.

"'It has a castle,' he told me, 'and a moat and ramparts and a little cake shop run by a charming old woman'—

"'Enough,' said I, 'me for Blois.'

"We went there and we castled and we moated and we ramparted, and then we blew into the little shop to cake. The proprietress, a very pleasant old woman, indeed, introduced us to her son, who was modestly hiding behind his mustache in a corner.

"We got into conversation with him —that is, Bodfish and I plunged into French and he, diving in heroically after us, was pulled under in our drowning struggles. The upshot of it all was that we agreed to hire a room in his mother's house for the night—we meant to stay just one night in Blois.

"'And—er—dinner?' asked Bodfish.

"'If the messieurs will permit I will do myself the honor of cooking them a dinner,' said the cake lady's son, bowing most courteously.

"Thereupon Bodfish and I went blithely to an attic 518 years old at a conservative estimate, washed the castle and the moat and the ramparts from our hands and faces and descended to the dining room, a small apartment in the rear of madame's cake shop.

"Our landlady's son was there, ready for us. So was a soup.

"That was, by actual count, the grandest soup ever produced by a human being. I have traveled all over the world, tasting the best every country has to offer in the way of soup, but at the first taste of that Blois sample all my memories of other soups huddled together in a dark corner of my mind and froze to death.

"I looked at Bodfish. He was positively half witted with delight. He looked as if he wanted to spend the rest of his life as high priest in a temple devoted to the worship—and manufacture—of that soup.

"'More, messieurs?'

"Between us we razed that soup to the ground.

"'Entree, messieurs?'

"Don't ask me what that entree was. Bodfish ate it with his eyes shut and his head bowed reverently.

"Bodfish and I stayed in Blois for twenty-nine meals. Don't ask me how many days that makes; we knew only two sorts of times—meals and between meals. As for sightseeing, we didn't see much more than our plates, because after each meal in the back parlor of that celestial cake shop we were so chock full that we hibernated like snakes, lay sprawling on couches, unable to budge, blinking sleepily, grunting grunts of Elysian contentment. Time and again we would ask that Frenchman how he had come by his culinary skill, but in vain. He would merely smile and give us another helping. You may get some idea of what sort of meals that cuss gave us when I tell you that Bodfish summed up his ability in these words:

"'At times he seems to lose his culinary grip and descends to mere perfection.'

"After the twenty-ninth meal Bodfish and I remembered that we belonged somewhere, had a number of relatives, were engaged in business, had restive careers to coax along. So we called our cook, announced that we were leaving and wanted to know how much we owed.

"'Six francs for each day, messieurs,' said he. 'One for the room, one for breakfast, one and a half for lunch, two and a half for dinner.'

"Bodfish and I fell heavily against each other. Then we paid and started for the door.

"'Wait,' said our host. 'I, too, travel away today.'

"'Whither are you bound?' we asked.

"'To St. Petersburg,' he replied. 'I came away but to see my old mother in the cake shop. I had not seen her for five years. I must thank you, messieurs, for giving me this chance of keeping up my art. Had you not done so, I fear that, after getting back to St. Petersburg, my art would surely have suffered'—

"'Whuh-whuh-what are you in St. Petersburg?' we inquired huskily.

"'Chef,' he said, bowing, 'to his majesty the czar!'"—New York Times.

Overheard on the Street.

"Hasn't that girl an ethereal look?"

"Very."

"Let us listen to what she is saying to her companion. I'll wager it is something soulful."

FAMILY PERSIFLAGE.

MOTHER says he's growing old,

There's a grin that all behold
On the face of Uncle John.
"Look upon his wrist to see
If he has a watch," says I.
Why this madcap pleasantry?
Father has a velvet tie.

Sister says, "I'll bet a dime
He will get a plush hat next."
Pa keeps silent all the time,
But it's plain that he is vexed.
"He'll wear braid upon his coat
Soon," says Jimmy, with a sigh,
Striving hard to get his goat
"'Cause he wears a velvet tie."

"Hush!" says mother, with a smile,
"Be you not so rude to him.
He'll buy glasses in awhile
With the lovely tortoise rim.
Perfume he'll be using, too,
That we'll scent as he goes by."
Father says: "What's ailing you?
Don't you like this velvet tie?"

A mother writes us of the precocious economy of effort displayed by her six-year-old son.

"Frederick," she called to him the other afternoon, "go up and wash yourself this minute. You are frightfully dirty."

"Why, mother, my hands ain't a bit dirty," he objected, holding out those members for inspection.

"But your face is dirty. Go and wash it."

"You wash my face for me, mother."

"Nonsense. Can't a great big boy like you wash his own face?"

"Yes, but I'd have to get my hands wet, and my hands don't need it."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

MAD MULLAH'S RIFLES

WHERE DOES MOSLEM FANATIC GET HIS ARMS?

Some of the Weapons Which Were Used in the Cutting Up of the Camel Corps in Somaliland Were by Irony of Fate Secured From Britain Herself — Abyssinia is Mostly to Blame.

The disaster to the British Camel Corps last August in Somaliland, led to the sending of the special representative of an English newspaper to that country, to endeavor to solve the mystery how the Mad Mullah obtains arms and ammunition.

It is a well-known fact that some guns were obtained from the British Government itself; indirectly of course. When the troops were withdrawn from the Soudan, rifles and cartridges were distributed to the friendly tribes so that they might protect themselves against the Mad Mullah's hosts. The ammunition was generally expended in inter-tribal feeds, then, when ammunition gave out, the rifles were given to the Mullah in the hope of buying him off. Having thus secured a large number of these rifles, the Mullah had little difficulty in taking the rest by force.

Still, this present from the British Government was not large enough to explain how it is that his men are, and always have been, liberally supplied with rifles. Africa is rigorously closed to the gun traffic. The giving or selling of firearms (even gas-pipe guns) to the natives of practically every portion of that great continent is rightly looked on as a most heinous offence, and the offender is liable to very heavy punishment indeed.

England cannot afford to let the natives of the Soudan, East or Central Africa get possession of firearms. Neither can France permit it in Morocco, Northern Africa, or the Sahara, and both countries spend much money in the prevention of gun-running.

Yet rifles and cartridges circulate freely in the heart of Africa, and there is no doubt whence they come.

The Mad Mullah will never run short of arms as long as the existence of an arms factroy is permitted at Addis Abeba.

Abyssinia, a ridiculous and quite irresponsible black state, is being allowed to sow the seed of endless trouble in the Soudan, in Central Africa, and in East Africa. The harvest is for England to reap, and already we have had a foretaste of it in the troubles with the Mullah. From the Addis Abeba factory rifles are distributed as far as the Congo, the Western Sahara, and Portuguese East Africa.

The people of Abyssinia do not at first sight impress one with their worthiness to be allowed any liberty in the dangerous matter of the arms traffic.

They are accorded the right to govern their own country simply because France, Italy, and England have almost equal interests in it, and cannot decide how to divide it equally. The Abyssinian looks on Europeans, notably Italians and English, as miserable scum. His own ideas of civilization are pretty well shown in the Custom Houses there.

An ink-black savage, using an eight-foot spear as a walking-stick, picking his teeth with a bamboo splinter and having brass rings in this ears and tin ones on his toes, does not strike one as an authorized customs officer. But he is in Abyssinia!

He will claim and exercise the right to empty your portmanteau into the dust, paw your underlinen with indescribably filthy fingers, and exact practically any duty he may please on any article that takes his fancy. He will detain your baggage for as long as a fortnight in the hope of getting a bribe, and he will steal therefrom anything that it is possible to steal.

I give this genuinely faithful picture of one of the institutions of civilized Abyssinia, says Mr. Alan Ostler, the special representative referred to, so as to show that people of this type are hardly the kind to be allowed an arms factory.

It may be said that they do not yet actually make new rifles. That is merely a quibble. They repair old or damaged rifles ostensibly for the use of the Abyssinian police. This is done under the direction of an Englishman. There is no suggestion that his part in the business covers anything beyond the supervision of mechanical details, such as refitting locks and lock-bolts, adjusting damaged triggers, and so forth. But when the repairs are executed, the rifles, instead of being distributed among the soldiery, are sold to buyers. Then a fresh supply of old discarded rifles is bought "for the soldiery," and the profitable business is repeated.

There is no doubt that many of the best of these rifles find their way into the hands of the Mullah's men. I am also told by Somalis that on at least one occasion the Mullah having sent a deputation with presents to the Abyssinian Governor of Harrar—a son of Ras Makonnen—received in return a rich gift of cartridges and guns. And in this, and other ways, the Empire's enemies obtain the wherewithal to continue the acts of lawlessness, which frequently cost so much in treasure and blood.

Depravity.

Native—Yes, sir, he may be the richest man in town, but he does a lot to disturb the peace.

Visitor—Is he dissipated?

Native—No; 'tain't that, but he practically supports the village brass band.

WHAT QUEBEC READS.

High Class French Literature Is Widely Circulated.

In a recent article in The Canadian Courier, Alfred Mousseau discusses the subject of reading among the French-Canadians of Quebec.

"I am sure I can safely assert that practically every home in the Province of Quebec receives a newspaper every day, except in some remote districts where they receive only a weekly newspaper, and in some still more remote places where they receive none, but this is a very rare exception," he says. "In the country, only the French papers find their way to the mass of the French-Canadians, but in the cities many of them read at least one English paper every day. Those of the enlightened class make it a point of keeping themselves posted upon the doing of their English compatriots by reading the English papers. Most of the professional men living in the country are on the subscribers' lists of one English paper or another.

"Up to twenty years ago the literature, that is, what little of it was circulating amongst the rural populations, was nearly a half century backwards, and the intellectual movement in France was followed here only from a distance. To-day, this state of affairs has been wonderfully improved and the farmers, their wives and children, have a better and more up-to-date supply of books at their disposal. This supply is still very small, however, as it consists chiefly of the books contained in the parochial libraries kept by the parish priests. Those books are lent to the parishioners and they are circulated from hand to hand. The rural libraries include very few works of great literary worth, although one finds in them a few books by such authors as Francois Coppe, Huysmans, Bordeaux and Rene Bazin. The "good authors" predominate and it must be understand that they are "good" from the moral point of view, more than from the literary one.

"In mixed localities, where there are both French and English people, in the Eastern Townships, for instance, English novels and English magazines and newspapers have nearly as much circulation amongst the French element as amongst the English one.

The situation described in the few lines above is also prevalent in the small cities and there are really only two important intellectual centres, namely, Quebec and Montreal. In those two cities, one finds all the latest productions of French literature, and fully one-half of the population of those cities is deeply interested in the reading of books.

"The best writers of fiction and the poets of 'La Belle France' are read with much interest. Those authors that are commendable from a Catholic point of view enjoy more favor than the others from the buyers. The readers in the public libraries, however, seem to be less particular and they ask for everything in sight, provided it be good literature.

"The novel writers whose works are most patronized at the present time are Henry Bordeaux and Rene Bazin, Paul Bourget, and a few others. Jean de la Brete, M. R. Montlaur, Mathilde Serao, Pierre L'Hermite, Pierre de Coulevain, Abbe Moreux, Lichtenberger, Rodenbach, may be mentioned as rivalling with the first ones named. The sales are not equal for all. Delicate and exquisite writers as Lichtenberger and Rodenbach don't enjoy the same popularity as Pierre L'Hermite and a few others of the same type, who write popular fiction and don't strive to achieve masterpieces of literature.

THE SPORTING WORLD

Y.M.C.A. FINISHED STRONG AGAINST THE WANDERERS

Boston Exploits Had Three Goal Margin Over Alerts

The game in the Junior City League last night at Brock street rink resulted in a win for the Y.M.C.A. over the Wanderers and a victory for the Boston Exploits over the Alerts. The hard ice gave the boys a chance to show their class and none of the spectators were disappointed, for the hockey handed out was of the best calibre.

The first game was particularly good, both teams playing the game the whole sixty minutes. At half-time the score stood 1—1, and for the first part of the last half it looked as though the final gong would ring with the same result, but the "Y" brigade spurted and slammed in three in quick succession. Shortly before the final gong the Wanderers tallied one and appeared to rally, but the two-goal lead was too much. The final score stood 4—2.

For the winners Knapman, Quinn and the Smiths were the shining lights. The fast work of J. Smith at left wing accounted for two of the "Y's" counters in the last half and he also united with Quinn for the other one. Knapman was the victim of several hard body checks, but he always came back gamely and did so with a vengeance.

For the Wanderers the most effective men were May, Primeau, and Brotherston. Their brick-topped goal minder "Pat" Walker, tore off a few sensational shots and if his defence had given him a little more chance he would have stopped a couple that beat him. He showed great liking for the shots from Knapman's stick and time and again he robbed "Sliver" of a sure goal. The teams lined up as follows:

Y.M.C.A.—4		Wanderers—2.
	Goal
Darling		Walker
	R. Defence
R. Smith		Guerin
	L. Defence
Cranfield		Revoy
	Rover
Jackson		Brotherston
	Centre
Quinn		Patterson
	R. Wing
Knapman		Primeau
	L. Wing
J. Smith		May

Second Game.

The second game proved to be the main attraction of the evening for many of the fans wanted to see the forward line of the Boston Exploits in action on hard ice. As was anticipated the good ice favored them and they slipped one over the Alerts by the score of 5—2.

The game had hardly started when the Exploit's forward line commenced combining nicely and they had 4 goals before the Alerts knew they were playing. The game then grew faster and the pace terrific, with Latimer being called upon to handle two or three fast ones. Neither side scored again till after half time.

Immediately after the rest, the Alerts slammed in two and the game became interesting. It looked for a while as if the Alerts would beat the little fellows out but they rallied and a few moments before full time they tallied, making the final score 5—2.

It would be hard to select "the best" among the Exploits for there isn't a weak man on the team. For the Alerts Davidson, Legrendre and Lowes were the most effective men.

The teams:

Boston Exploits.		Alerts.
	Goal
Latimer		Legros
	R. Defence
Phelan		Davidson
	L. Defence
Regan		Legrendre
	Rover
Graham		Bartley
	Centre
Butcher		Lowes
	R. Wing
Rogers		O'Connell
	L. Wing
Rose		Heath

Mr. Len Dobson refereed the games and handled them in his usual efficient way.

STRONG LINEUP FOR GAME WITH BELLEVILLE SEVEN

One of the Old Time Crowds Expected to Witness Battle To-night

The crisis of this district of the Intermediate O. H. A. is at hand and the game tonight at Brock Street Rink between the locals and Belleville, is "the" important game. If the locals emerge from tonight's fixture with a victory, they have every possible chance of going through the remaining games of this district without a defeat and if this be accomplished, prospects for the championship will begin to shine.

The Belleville team are confident that they can carry home the honors since they defeated Whitby, who copped the opening game from the locals. They are running an excursion and expect to have a large number of supporters along which means that the old rink will be crowded. To add to the excitement, the 57th Regiment Band will be out. Mr. Gliddon was very grateful when the hockey club called the game for tonight instead of tomorrow night so as not to conflict with the concert.

The team which will play Belleville will be the same as played the last half in Oshawa, namely:

Goal—James.
R. Defence—Denison.
L. Defence—Bond.
Rover—Giroux.
Centre—Park
R. Wing—Bradshaw
L. Wing—Kelly

A STORY FROM THE COAL STOVE LEAGUE

Charlie Smith, the former Canadian League umpire, who has officiated in many minor leagues, related a good story to a bunch of fans sitting around the coal stove league a few nights ago.

Some years back Frank Shaughnessy, manager and part owner of the Ottawa Senators, was managing a club in the West Virginia League, in a town bordering on the ocean. None other than our old friend "Slatts" Davis was calling the balls and strikes in a game one afternoon. "Shag" had been particularly peeved over a bad one James Ira had called, and in a mild protest had asked the umpire to take the dust out of his peepers. Mr. Davis replied by removing Frank from the game. This action brought forth a tirade of abuse from the manager and was the cause of his being banished from the grounds. The entrance to the ball park was from the beach and as Shaughnessy passed the stands to the exits, "Slatts" doffed his cap and said, "Ladies and gentlemen," pointing at the retiring player, "Shaughnessy's March to the Sea."

Get this—"At Alexandra on Tuesday night the Ottawa Valley League game was called off because it was too cold." It's nearly as bad as Belleville not playing Whitby Monday night because of no ice.

Canadian Press Despatch

LINDSAY, Jan. 15.—In the Gillies Trophy, Toogood of Orillia, defeated Waddell of Peterboro, 11 to 5. Fitzgerald of Peterboro defeated Knowlson of Lindsay, 12 to 9.

The Napanee curlers passed through this city this morning en route from Lindsay, where hey were attending the big bonspiel. Despite the fact they failed to win any trophies, the knights of the broom and stane report a most enjoyable trip, and commented on the good work of the local rinks who are competing in the bonspiel.

A short meeting of the Curling Club was held last night in the Curling Rink. Five members were ballotted for and admitted.

Four rinks are to be made up today, and will go to Toronto tomorrow to play the Granites of that city, in a friendly match.

PUCKERINGS FROM PUCK

An important meeting of the Plumbers Hockey Club will be held tonight in the Examiner Office. All players and those interested in the Plumbers' team are urgently requested to be on hand at 7.30 o'clock.

The Plumbers hereby challenge any one of the Junior City League hockey teams for a practice game of hockey to be played any night before Monday, the 19th. Any team accepting this challenge may communicate with the Plumbers at the Examiner Office between 7.30 and 8 o'clock this evening.

The first practice of St. Andrew's Utopia Bible Class team will be held on Friday night from 10—11 o'clock at Parker's rink. The following are requested to turn out:—Saunders Borland, H. Lees, N. Patterson, Minorgan, B. Lees, Gibson, McWilliams, F. Reid, Wm. Reid, Dryland, Curry, Dormer, Chapman, Wing, M. Patterson, Fortye.

It seems hard on Midland that the game of Jan. 6th with T. R. and A. A. should be thrown out because Hope Armstrong played in the game. Hope did not touch the puck, he being dropped after 14 seconds of play.

Hugh Burritt played fast hockey for the Argos on Tuesday night. The News says of the Peterboro boy:

"Burritt., of the Bank League, is a newcomer, and while he does not possess much weight, is a great stick handler, and has the "poke" check down to a science. He broke up a lot of rushes and held his own with the speedy Hyland."

The Midland team left today to play two games with Cleveland.

The Tool Room Hockey team are billed to practice tonight after the O. H. A. game at Brock Street Rink.

Mayor Bush will face the puck at the Peterboro, Port Hope game Friday evening, at Port Hope.

It is expected that the rinks on St. Andrews' Church property will be ready for use on Saturday.

Bumped the Bishop.

Bishop Montgomery once enjoyed the strangest of episcopal rides. While travelling in China he covered forty-five miles in two days in a wheelbarrow. "Bishop Scott and I," he writes, "were on one barrow; Lanchester followed on a second, the luggage in a third. We did it luxuriously, with three men to each barrow—one in front, one behind on the handles and a third with a rope in front of all. Are there springs to the barrow? Certainly not. It would be no fun if there were. Bumps? Of course. On the first day we calculated we had 25,000 of them—the best were caused by drops of six inches or more from one stone to another. I got quite used to them and found I could sleep stretched luxuriously on my mattress."

This Beautiful New Hupmobile

is now on display at our showrooms. The new Hupmobile is, we believe, better than anything that has ever before come to us from the factory.

And this is no slight praise—for this new Hupmobile is far, far from being an ordinary car. It is an extraordinary car. A car whose intrinsic value and inherent quality are not expressed in the Hupmobile price.

Bluntly, it is an infinitely better car than the price implies. It is a car of characteristics unusual at the price. You have heard us say: "We believe the Hupmobile to be the best car in its class in the world. We mean that sincerely and strongly.

Every man in our organization is imbued with the conviction that it has no equal in its type and at its price. We stand ready to demonstrate as much to you.

We are prepared to dissect the car for your benefit—to justify the faith that we have by pointing out the precise particulars in which the Hupmobile excels.

We will explain to you that its construction embodies a larger use of aluminum than any other car—at any price in the world.

We will show you that a larger volume of costly steel is engaged in its production than in the construction of any car of like price.

See us to-day. We want the opportunity to prove what we say is true. No cost or obligation.

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

PARTICIPATING vs. NON-PARTICIPATING Life Assurance

Fifteen years ago a prominent merchant on George Street took out a 10 pay 15 year endowment policy of $2000 on his life at age 45 in the Sun Life of Canada, premium $189.50.

Had this man taken a non-par policy his premium would have been $172.50 or $17.00 per year less.

PARTICIPATING RESULTS.		NON-PAR RESULTS.
$2637.75	Total cash 1st Dec. last	$2000.00
1895.00	Total prems. paid	1725.00
742.75	Amount received over that pd. in	275.00
Almost 40 p.c.	Percentage returned over prem paid	almost 16 p.c.
1299.70	or, Cash returned and a paid-up Policy of $2000	661.25

Now, this man paid $17.00 per year for 10 years only, or $170.00 all told and it yielded him $637.75 in profits. Just figure out what rate of interest that is on the $17.00 per year, paid extra for profits, and see if you would not like to invest a few dollars at the same rate. If so, call at or 'phone the Sun Life Office, 402 Water Street.

The above policyholder thinks he had a splendid result. Don't you?

THE SPORTING WORLD

Y.M.C.A. FINISHED STRONG AGAINST THE WANDERERS

Boston Exploits Had Three Goal Margin Over Alerts

The game in the Junior City League last night at Brock street rink resulted in a win for the Y.M.C.A. over the Wanderers and a victory for the Boston Exploits over the Alerts. The hard ice gave the boys a chance to show their class and none of the spectators were disappointed, for the hockey handed out was of the best calibre.

The first game was particularly good, both teams playing the game the whole sixty minutes. At half-time the score stood 1—1, and for the first part of the last half it looked as though the final gong would ring with the same result, but the "Y" brigade spurted and slammed in three in quick succession. Shortly before the final gong the Wanderers tallied one and appeared to rally, but the two-goal lead was too much. The final score stood 4—2.

For the winners Knapman, Quinn and the Smiths were the shining lights. The fast work of J. Smith at left wing accounted for two of the "Y's" counters in the last half and he also united with Quinn for the other one. Knapman was the victim of several hard body checks, but he always came back gamely and did so with a vengeance.

For the Wanderers the most effective men were May, Primeau, and Brotherston. Their brick-topped goal minder "Pat" Walker, tore off a few sensational shots and if his defence had given him a little more chance he would have stopped a couple that beat him. He showed great liking for the shots from Knapman's stick and time and again he robbed "Sliver" of a sure goal. The teams lined up as follows:

Y.M.C.A.—4		Wanderers—2.
	Goal
Darling		Walker
	R. Defence
R. Smith		Guerin
	L. Defence
Cranfield		Revoy
	Rover
Jackson		Brotherston
	Centre
Quinn		Patterson
	R. Wing
Knapman		Primeau
	L. Wing
J. Smith		May

Second Game.

The second game proved to be the main attraction of the evening for many of the fans wanted to see the forward line of the Boston Exploits in action on hard ice. As was anticipated the good ice favored them and they slipped one over the Alerts by the score of 5—2.

The game had hardly started when the Exploit's forward line commenced combining nicely and they had 4 goals before the Alerts knew they were playing. The game then grew faster and the pace terrific, with Latimer being called upon to handle two or three fast ones. Neither side scored again till after half time.

Immediately after the rest, the Alerts slammed in two and the game became interesting. It looked for a while as if the Alerts would beat the little fellows out but they rallied and a few moments before full time they tallied, making the final score 5—2.

It would be hard to select "the best" among the Exploits for there isn't a weak man on the team. For the Alerts Davidson, Legrendre and Lowes were the most effective men.

The teams:

Boston Exploits.		Alerts.
	Goal
Latimer		Legros
	R. Defence
Phelan		Davidson
	L. Defence
Regan		Legrendre
	Rover
Graham		Bartley
	Centre
Butcher		Lowes
	R. Wing
Rogers		O'Connell
	L. Wing
Rose		Heath

Mr. Len Dobson refereed the games and handled them in his usual efficient way.

FITZGERALD AND LANG WIN THEIR GAMES

Local Rinks Continue to Win at Lindsay Bonspiel.

Latest reports from Lindsay state that up to noon today Fitzgerald's and Lang's rinks were still undefeated in the Lindsay 'spiel. Matthews and Waddell have lost one, while the exact standing of Sturgeon is not known.

At the 6.30 p.m. draw yesterday, Gillies of Brampton, defeated Rochon of Winnipeg, in the competition for the Gillies' trophy. In the next draw in the competition for the Flavelle Trophy, Braden of Winnipeg, defeated Gillies, of Brampton.

Canadian Press Despatch

LINDSAY, Jan. 15.—In the Gillies Trophy, Toogood of Orillia, defeated Waddell of Peterboro, 11 to 5. Fitzgerald of Peterboro defeated Knowlson of Lindsay, 12 to 9.

The Napanee curlers passed through this city this morning en route from Lindsay, where hey were attending the big bonspiel. Despite the fact they failed to win any trophies, the knights of the broom and stane report a most enjoyable trip, and commented on the good work of the local rinks who are competing in the bonspiel.

A short meeting of the Curling Club was held last night in the Curling Rink. Five members were ballotted for and admitted.

Four rinks are to be made up today, and will go to Toronto tomorrow to play the Granites of that city, in a friendly match.

STRONG LINEUP FOR GAME WITH BELLEVILLE SEVEN

One of the Old Time Crowds Expected to Witness Battle To-night

The crisis of this district of the Intermediate O. H. A. is at hand and the game tonight at Brock Street Rink between the locals and Belleville, is "the" important game. If the locals emerge from tonight's fixture with a victory, they have every possible chance of going through the remaining games of this district without a defeat and if this be accomplished, prospects for the championship will begin to shine.

The Belleville team are confident that they can carry home the honors since they defeated Whitby, who copped the opening game from the locals. They are running an excursion and expect to have a large number of supporters along which means that the old rink will be crowded. To add to the excitement, the 57th Regiment Band will be out. Mr. Gliddon was very grateful when the hockey club called the game for tonight instead of tomorrow night so as not to conflict with the concert.

The team which will play Belleville will be the same as played the last half in Oshawa, namely:

Goal—Janes.
R. Defence—Denison.
L. Defence—Bond.
Rover—Giroux.
Centre—Park
R. Wing—Bradshaw
L. Wing—Kelly

In all probability Lawson Whitehead will referee

A STORY FROM THE COAL STOVE LEAGUE

Charlie Smith, the former Canadian League umpire, who has officiated in many minor leagues, related a good story to a bunch of fans sitting around the coal stove league a few nights ago.

Some years back Frank Shaughnessy, manager and part owner of the Ottawa Senators, was managing a club in the West Virginia League, in a town bordering on the ocean. None other than our old friend "Slatts" Davis was calling the balls and strikes in a game one afternoon. "Shag" had been particularly peeved over a bad one James Ira had called, and in a mild protest had asked the umpire to take the dust out of his peepers. Mr. Davis replied by removing Frank from the game. This action brought forth a tirade of abuse from the manager and was the cause of his being banished from the grounds. The entrance to the ball park was from the beach and as Shaughnessy passed the stands to the exits, "Slatts" doffed his cap and said, "Ladies and gentlemen," pointing at the retiring player, "Shaughnessy's March to the Sea."

Get this—"At Alexandra on Tuesday night the Ottawa Valley League game was called off because it was too cold." It's nearly as bad as Belleville not playing Whitby Monday night because of no ice.

PUCKERINGS FROM PUCK

An important meeting of the Plumbers Hockey Club will be held tonight in the Examiner Office. All players and those interested in the Plumbers' team are urgently requested to be on hand at 7.30 o'clock.

The Plumbers hereby challenge any one of the Junior City League hockey teams for a practice game of hockey to be played any night before Monday, the 19th. Any team accepting this challenge may communicate with the Plumbers at the Examiner Office between 7.30 and 8 o'clock this evening.

The first practice of St. Andrew's Utopia Bible Class team will be held on Friday night from 10—11 o'clock at Parker's rink. The following are requested to turn out:—Saunders Borland, H. Lees, N. Patterson, Minorgan, B. Lees, Gibson, McWilliams, F. Reid, Wm. Reid, Dryland, Curry, Dormer, Chapman, Wing, M. Patterson, Fortye.

It seems hard on Midland that the game of Jan. 6th with T. R. and A. A. should be thrown out because Hope Armstrong played in the game. Hope did not touch the puck, he being dropped after 14 seconds of play.

Hugh Burritt played fast hockey for the Argos on Tuesday night. The News says of the Peterboro boy: "Burritt,, of the Bank League, is a newcomer, and while he does not possess much weight, is a great stick handler, and has the "poke" check down to a science. He broke up a lot of rushes and held his own with the speedy Hyland."

The Midland team left today to play two games with Cleveland.

The Tool Room Hockey team are billed to practice tonight after the O. H. A. game at Brock Street Rink.

Mayor Bush will face the puck at the Peterboro, Port Hope game Friday evening, at Port Hope.

It is expected that the rinks on St. Andrews' Church property will be ready for use on Saturday.

Bumped the Bishop.

Bishop Montgomery once enjoyed the strangest of episcopal rides. While traveling in China he covered forty-five miles in two days in a wheelbarrow. "Bishop Scott and I," he writes, "were on one barrow; Lanchester followed on a second, the luggage in a third. We did it luxuriously, with three men to each barrow—one in front, one behind on the handles and a third with a rope in front of all. Are there springs to the barrow? Certainly not. It would be no fun if there were. Bumps? Of course. On the first day we calculated we had 25,000 of them—the best were caused by drops of six inches or more from one stone to another. I got quite used to them and found I could sleep stretched luxuriously on my mattress."

NOTICE OF ANNUAL MEETING

The Annual General Meeting of the Shareholders of this Company for the election of Directors, Reception and Annual Report, and other purposes, will take place at the Company's Offices, George, St., Peterborough, on Friday, the 23rd day of January, 1914, at 2 o'clock, p.m.

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

PARTICIPATING vs. NON-PARTICIPATING Life Assurance

Fifteen years ago a prominent merchant on George Street took out a 10 pay 15 year endowment policy of $2000 on his life at age 45 in the Sun Life of Canada, premium $189.50.

Had this man taken a non-par policy his premium would have been $172.50 or $17.00 per year less.

PARTICIPATING RESULTS.		NON-PAR RESULTS.
$2637.75	Total cash 1st Dec. last	[illegible]
1895.00	Total prems. paid	1725.00
742.75	Amount received over that pd. in	275.00
Almost 40 p.c.	Percentage returned over prem paid	almost 16 p.c.
1299.70	or, Cash returned and a paid-up Policy of $2000	661.25

Now, this man paid $17.00 per year for 10 years only, or $170.00 all told and it yielded him $637.75 in profits. Just figure out what rate of interest that is on the $17.00 per year, paid extra for profits, and see if you would not like to invest a few dollars at the same rate. If so, call at or 'phone the Sun Life Office, 402 Water Street.

The above policyholder thinks he had a splendid result. Don't you?

MAN IN CHARGE OF TEAM FINED $20

Was Intoxicated and the Team Ran Away.

NORWOOD, Jan. 15.—Edgar Wells, who lives in the neighborhood of Warkworth, was brought before Magistrate Squire, charged by License Inspector Williams, for being drunk in a local option municipality. Defendant pleaded guilty and was fined $20.00 and costs, in all $28.45. It appears that Wells who was on his way to Coe Hill, left home Friday morning and at Hastings, procured, from Howard's liquor store, 2 quarts of whiskey for use during his sojourn at the shanty at Coe Hill, and also had 3 glasses at the Spellman Hotel. He was driving a team and cutter. In coming up the Hastings road towards Norwood, his horses ran away throwing him out. He was found about noon in an intoxicated condition by J. Marks, who notified constable Puffer by 'phone of the accident. The constable immediately went down to the place and finding Wells lying in a stupor, brought him to town and placed him in the lock-up. The team was left at Mr. Mark's farm. During the afternoon the Constable became alarmed at the condition of the man and summoned the services of Dr. Sutton, who pronounced him unhurt. He was brought before the magistrate next morning. The liquor was given in to the hands of the Constable to await instructions from the License Department as to its disposal.

Woman's Love of Jewels.

Even in the stone age woman was fond of jewels. But it was man, the brutal master, who wore them. The heavy necklace that descended upon his breast was the emblem of his superiority and power. Even before he had progressed so far as to cover himself with the skin of the stag he wore a necklace of shells, of teeth of animals or glittering flint. The elegant dame or demoiselle who rolls by in her limousine is not so distant a relative of the cave man as she may try to appear She likes jewels better than dress since each season we see her more and more bejeweled and less and less clothed The joy of jewels is of the same infantile quality with the coquette of today that it was in the early barbaric times —a thread of metal upon which are strung some shining pebbles, a thread of silk over which are placed some small round concretions of lime found rolling in the liquid of a diseased oyster—Le Brésil Economique.

His Influence Failed.

Judge Drysdale, of Nova Scotia, tells a story of a meeting of the Bar Society of one of the Eastern Provinces where the point was raised whether law students did or did not, as a general rule, adopt the political ideas of the lawyers with whom they were articled.

"Well, I studied in Judge Blank's office," said a member, "and while he was a strong Liberal, yet he did not not make me a Liberal."

"And I studied with the late Mr. Brown," retorted another member when the Tory cheers had subsided, "and while he was a staunch Conservative, he did not make a Conservative out of me."

It was now the Liberals' turn to applaud, when a vinous looking member arose in the rear of the hall.

"Gentlemen," he announced a trifle unsteadily, "I studied law with good old lawyer White, and while he was an ardent Prohibitionist, I am glad to say that he did not make a Prohibitionist out of me."

GREAT MUSICAL EVENT OF THE CONCERT SEASON

New York and Toronto Star to Visit Peterboro — English 'Cellist, Peterboro Violinist and Conservatory Orchestra—Fine Program Arranged

Tomorrow evening Peterboro people are to be given the opportunity of enjoying the greatest musical event of the season. Mr. Gliddon, of the Conservatory of Music, with the committee under the chairmanship of Mr. G. C. Wainwright, have spent infinite pains in the arrangement of the program for the evening.

The chief artiste is Miss Florence Hinkle, the famous New York soprano. Miss Hinkle has a continental reputation, and has appeared at the famous Massey Hall Mendelssohn concerts, in Toronto, where her singing took the audience by storm. It is only at very great expense that the committee have secured Miss Hinkle, as hitherto only large cities which could command big audiences, have been able to procure her services.

While Miss Hinkle is the chief star of the program, there are also other artists of note. Mr. Leo Smith is already known to Peterboro, having visited the city before. Mr. Smith is a violin celloist, and hails from Manchester, Eng., being a Bachelor of the Music University of that city. Those who heard Mr. Leo Smith on his last appearance in Peterboro, will not need any special urging to hear him again. There is no sweeter music than the cello. The Toronto Star says: "Mr. Leo Smith's playing is poetic and beautiful and denotes a temperment that is intensely musical."

Miss Lena Adamson is also contributing violin solos. Miss Adamson needs no introduction to Peterboro audiences, as her charming gift is well known.

The Conservatory Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Gliddon, has arranged a specially fine program of bright and beautiful music. The Review has had the privilege of listening to the rehearsal of some of the selections and can promise the patrons of the concert tomorrow evening, a delightful treat from this one section of the program alone. The program includes Verdi's "Ernaur," overture, "William Tel," "Peer Gynt," Suite by Greig. Selections from "Faust" by Gounod.

The concert is to be held in the Grand Opera House and the prospects are that the house will be filled. Tickets for seats are being eagerly taken up. And the committee are gratified at the response of the public so far.

MR. R. GLIDDON,
Leader of Conservatory Orchestra, which is to take part in Opera House Concert to-morrow evening.

THE VERSATILES IN MUSICAL COMEDY

Take Advantage of Their Return to the City and go and See Them Saturday.

Did you see "The Versatiles" at The Grand on New Year's Day? If not, you will do well to take advantage of the only opportunity you will have of seeing this remarkable clever company at The Grand next Saturday. For the matinee the company will present "The Canadian Express" and for the evening performance "Up the River," an entirely new musical bill, which is brimful of catchy songs. Both performances will be preceded by the Old Country Pierotts, which made such a decided hit before two big New Year's audiences here. This act, which runs for about thirty minutes, is on the high class vaudeville order, and is indeed extremely amusing and clever. Specially attractive prices have been arranged for the matinee performance in order to give everyone an opportunity of attending. The entire lower floor will be 35c. and 50c., and the balcony 25c., 35, and 50c, Children 15c., any seat. The evening prices range from 25c. to $1.00. The seats are now on sale at the box office.

THE LITTLE DAMOZEL AT THE GRAND

The play at the Grand last night, by Lawrence Brough, and his all-English company, certainly deserved a larger house than it received, for the acting not only of the two leading people, Lawrence Brough and Olga Esme, but also of the whole company, was of a high standard. The play was called a comedy in three acts—rather heavy and serious in spots to be classed with what is usually conceived to be comedy. This characteristic added difficulty to the different roles—particularly of the leading man, for he had to be very jocular, happy-go-lucky in the opening act, somewhat settled and respectable in the second, and very serious in the third act. The transition was made without friction and the coldness which a small audience invariably creates in a theatre, was wanting at the end of the performance. Miss Esme ably performed her part, not an easy one by any means, and presented a very likeable human la petite demoiselle, which she pronounced correctly with a French accent on the word. Rule Pyott as the Hon. Fitzroy Locke, fitted in to his role admirably and in fact, the whole company did well.

As for the play itself, it might easily have been better. It presented some original humorous hits which are too rare on the stage, but it is doubtful whether the relationship between the real and unreal world, or the play and actual life in other words, was as close at it should be. Very likely no real man would have done as Poole and Partington did, but, however this may be, the comedy was interesting and well presented.

George Ham as a Judge.

George H. Ham of the C.P.R. was a good many years ago an alderman of the City of Winnipeg. This gave to him the right at that time to sit as a Justice of the Peace. A compositor on one of the papers had been arrested for carrying a little too much liquor inside his personality. George Ham was called upon during the absence or sickness of the ordinary occupant of the bench to act as a J. P. The accused, delighted at the fact of Ham being the judge, cheerfully pleaded "guilty." To his horror he was addressed as follows: "Prisoner, the sentence of the court upon you is that you be taken to the place in which you were last confined, and then be hanged by the neck until you be dead, and may the Lord have mercy upon your soul." The man gazed in horror. "Or," continued the judge, "you may pay the costs of this court and go home."

This was the only case in which the alderman presided as a judge, "as," says he, "that was the only great criminal case in which I was ever a principal."

Champion "Packers."

They set great store by the ability to "pack" heavy loads in new countries and many a reputation in the west is built on a feat of "toting." Andy Linderberg, who stake a claim on the Salmon River in southeastern Alaska, acquired local fame by packing 400 pounds of supplies a short distance. At Haynes Mission in Alaska, the story is told of Joe Martin that he carried a stove, weighing 380 pounds, from the wharf to the store without stopping. Alluring invitations were showered upon him all along the way, too, for the whole camp lined up along his path and did its best to get him to stop and have a drink or a chew, for Martin had made a bet. But he turned a deaf ear to the beguilemente, and with perspiration dripping from his nose, he strained on up the trail and delivered his burden in accordance with his boast.

GROWTH AT ST. ANDREW'S CALLS FOR AN INCREASED SCHOOL ACCOMMODATION

Good Reports Are Made at Annual Congregational Meeting

In adopting the Sunday School report at St. Andrew's annual meeting held last evening, it was decided to follow out the recommendation in the report, for the erection of more improved accommodation for the Sunday School and a committee consisting of Messrs. Lees, McFarlane, Kerr and Gilman were appointed to nominate a committee to investigate. These men will report on the recommendation at the next meeting of the congregation next Tuesday night.

The report of the Sunday School during the year was satisfactory. Owing to the Bible Class being without a teacher, for some months, the attendance for the year was hardly as large as the preceding year. In the last three months there had been a decided increase. The increase in one day being 16. This was above all records.

The mission offerings were well in advance of any previous year, and the contributions for the support of the work of the school were exceedingly encouraging.

The necessity for improved accommodations was made apparent by mention of the fact that the Men's Bible Class which was re-organized some time ago by Mr. Gilman, has already outgrown the room available for it. The girls' class rooms are also in need of an improved accommodation. Reference was made to this at the last annual meeting as to the erection of a more modern and suitable building. The officers showed gratification and evident determination to do whatever possible for providing the school with the very best facilities for doing its work efficiently.. The congregation was respectfully recommended to appoint a committee to investigate into the matter of constructing a modern and up-to-date Sunday School. This is largely dependant on the sympathy, encouragement and co-operation of the entire congregation.

Department Reports

The financial statement presented by E. I. Martin, secretary treasurer of the Ladies' Bible Class, showed a balance of $19.20. The social gatherings during the year had been very successful.

The Officers

The officers of the class are:
Hon. Pres.—Mrs. Rollins.
Pres.—Miss E. M. Wiggins.
Vice Pres.—Miss McCormack.
Asst. Treas.—E. I. Martin.
Asst. Treas.—Mrs. Hill.
Teacher—Mr. F. E. Kerr.
Con. Lookout Com.—Miss M. Henderson.
Con. Social Com.—Miss P. Hosken.
Con. Visiting Com.—Miss Clarkson.

The number of members enrolled 28, with an average attendance of 13.

The statement of the Sunday School accounts presented by Mr. J. A. Brightman, treasurer, showed a balance of $121.22.

Mr. Gilman reported on the Men's Bible Class which has an enrollment of 60, with an average attendance of 35. This class has entered a team in the Church Hockey League and is giving attention to athletics. The class will conduct a debate on "The High Cost of Living," next Tuesday evening. Mayor Buller will act as chairman.

The general report of the W.F. M.S. presented by Mrs. J. John, was very satisfactory. The financial report of the W.F.M.S. presented by Mrs. A. Moore showed a balance of $180.24.

The officers of the W. F. M. S. for the ensuing year are:
Hon. Pres.—Mrs. Wm. Fowler.
Pres.—Mrs. Rollins.
1st Vice Pres.—Mrs. Kerr.

Appreciate Mr. Treneer

Mr. F. E. Kerr reported on the choir which has had a most successful year and expressed the choir's sincere thanks for the new organ which has been very valuable. Reference was also made to the efficient work of Mr. Treneer. The balance of the choir is $5.04.

The choir came in for a great deal of praise. Mr. Treneer is much appreciated for his musical talent and personal facilities and is making rapid headway in building up a musical organization of which the congregation is proud.

A vote of thanks was unanimously tendered the organist and choir master.

Rev. Jas. Rollins, pastor of the church, acted as chairman and in an appropriate manner congratulated the congregation on the rapid headway they were making. Mr. Rollins also conducted the devotional exercises.

The Board of Managers' report and general statement of the church will be presented at the congregational meeting next Tuesday evening.

This idea of two meetings is a new one and was tried out by St. Andrew's in order that discussions would be more profitable and longer time taken in presenting the reports. The election of the officers will also take place next Tuesday evening.

FOR DR. GRENFELL'S WORK

The story of Dr. Grenfell's work is now pretty familiar to our readers. The side of it that appears to all is its heroisms, its splendid sacrifices for neglected. Here is what he himself says of that life so full of hardships, hair-breadth-escapes, and splendid battles against wrong: "It's really a splendid life. You know the feeling you had at school going for a run in a jersey and shorts well above the knee. That's the feeling I have in Labrador." Dr. Grenfell is a dynamic man, and he is in a world which badly wanted energy. He is always in it and always happy in it. Try and make him still happier by your gift to his work. Send it in at once to the office of this paper.

EX-REEVE BROWN PASSES; HAD UNEXPECTED RELAPSE

Numerous friends and acquaintances in the city and throughout the county, will regret to learn of the death of Mr. John Brown, of North Monaghan, who passed away at Nicholl's Hospital this morning at seven o'clock.

The late Mr. Brown had been confined to the hospital for about twelve days, suffering with pneumonia, and his condition had improved, giving the hope that he would recover. The relapse that came early this morning was hardly expected.

The deceased was born in the township of North Monaghan, where he lived practically all his life of fifty-five years. He was a successful agriculturist, also a popular representative of the people in the North Monaghan Council, where, after serving as councillor, he was honored with the position of Reeve, which office he held for three years. During all his municipal life Mr. Brown had to stand in only one election contest. He was also prominent in the West Peterboro Agricultural Society, the directorate which he was a member. He was a man of upright character; he served faithfully on the trustee board of the Fraserville Methodist Church. He was also a member of the C. O. O. F. Court, Peterboro.

He leaves a widow and two sons and one daughter, Melville, of the local post office staff, and Walter and Annie at home. His brothers are Messrs. Thomas and James B., city, and Harry of North Monaghan. Mrs. Albert Sanderson of this city, is a sister.

The funeral will be held from the late residence, near Springville, Sunday afternoon at two o'clock, to the Little Lake Cemetery. Rev. Mr. Wickett will conduct the service at the home and Rev. Mr. Clarry will take the service at the grave.

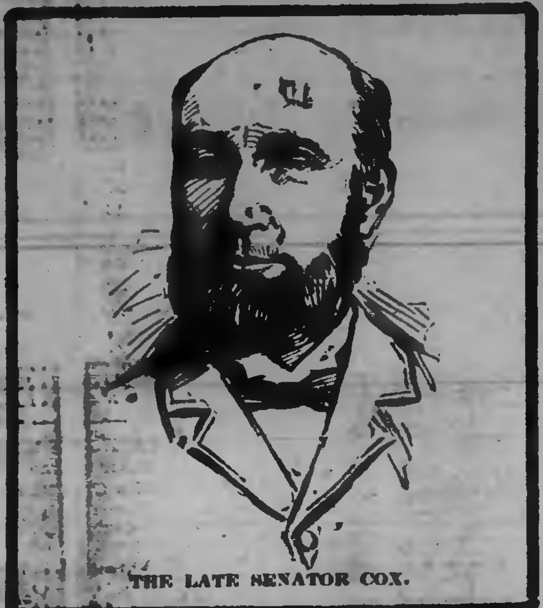
SENATOR COX PASSES AFTER ACTIVE AND USEFUL LIFE

He Made His Start In Peterborough and Rose Rapidly.

A SELF-MADE MAN



THE LATE SENATOR COX.

Canadian Press Despatch

TORONTO, Jan. 16.—Senator Cox died this morning at 5.15.

He was born at Colborne, seventy-three years ago, and removed to Peterboro in his early youth and began life as a telegrapher. Long before he came to Toronto, 26 years ago, he was a prominent financial figure through his connection with the Canada Life Assurance Co., and his reorganization of the Midland Railway. At the time of his death he was identified with several score of financial and industrial institutions, some of them of national scope, as shareholder, director or president. These included the Grand Trunk Pacific, Bank of Commerce, Dominion Steel Co., Dominion Cement Co., Central Canada Loan, Dominion Securities, Canada Life and the Imperial Life.

Up to a few months ago when his general mental breakdown began, he toiled at his desk like a salaried clerk. He was very prominent in the Methodist Church and a liberal giver to the funds of that church and to charities. He had been unconscious for two days and death was hourly expected.

Senator Cox was twice married, and two sons and two daughters of the first marriage, survive. An exact estimate of his estate is impossible. Six years ago a Toronto newspaper stated it at ten million dollars, and it may be guessed at anywhere from that figure to eighteen million dollars.

Early wires this morning announced the death of Hon. George A. Cox, at Toronto. His death was not unexpected, as during the last few months his general health had rapidly declined. Ever a man of intense energy and identified with large enterprises and immense interests, his responsibilities were always of the greatest. He was distinctly one of our foremost Canadians and a notable figure in financial, commercial and business enterprises.

Spent Early Life Here

Peterboro has always claimed Mr. Cox as her own. It was in this town (afterward city), that his early work was done, and where he developed those admirable business qualities that presently found the town too small a field for his activities. As he identified himself with important enterprises, his associations in a business sense, called him away and he removed to Toronto, where he could be and keep in close touch with details, and the remaining years of his life were spent there.

Ready to Help

As a man long identified with the progress of the city, and ever ready to take part in supporting its enterprises, he will be well remembered. No promising industry but what felt his wise advice and assistance. Many of those now carried on were enabled to do so and to survive reverses because George A. Cox was ready to help. He was one of the men who with faith in the future organized the industry that afterwards developed into the Canadian General Electric Co. He was largely interested in the Peterboro Lock Co. and other industries. Such progress as the city has made in the last thirty years would have been much less without the hand, help and counsel of George A. Cox.

As prominent men pass away some brief review of their life is of value, and should not go unrecorded. He was of English descent, his family emigrating to the States in 1810. Eight years later they moved to Canada and settled in Prince Edward and afterwards in Northumberland county. He was born at Colborne, Ont. His father was Edward W. Cox, his mother, Jane Tanner. He secured at his home such education as he could and began life as an operator in the service of the Montreal Telegraph Co., at Colborne. In May, 1858, he came to Peterboro to take charge of the local branch of the Telegraph Co., where he lived for thirty years. The young agent speedily asserted his individuality and took an active part in the municipal, educational and commercial interests of the town.

Mayor for Seven Years

For seven years he was Mayor, and was four times elected by acclamation, as a recognition of his interest and deep concern in the affairs of the municipality. Under his rule the town made rapid progress, for he not only advised, but assisted as well.

In 1871 Mr. Cox stepped from the municipal into the political field, and contested the riding with the late W. A. Scott. The election was set aside and the following year he again entered the contest and was elected over Mr. Scott by a majority of one. In 1887 Mr. Cox contested the West Riding with the late James Stevenson. The contest was a most exciting one, but he was defeated by a majority of sixteen.

His admirable business ability brought him in contact with larger enterprises than the activities of the town afforded. He took hold of several important to the country at large, and in 1878 became president of the Midland Railway, (the lines connecting Port Hope with Peterboro, Lindsay, Beaverton and points to the north, at the request of the creditors of the Company which at the time was in difficulties. During the term of his presidency, and almost wholly because of his personality; and the confidence inspired, the road was placed in first class condition, and four other railways brought in with the Midland systems. As an evidence of the nature of his work, the system was afterwards sold to the Grand Trunk Railway, at which time the securities were worth more than par, although when Mr. Cox took hold of it the bonds were selling at seventeen cents on the dollar. His able direction of this enterprise no doubt laid the foundation of his large fortune.

In 1884 he founded the Canada Central Loan and Savings Co., becoming its first president, which office he retained during his life. In 1885 he became a director of the Canadian Bank of Commerce and President in 1890 and held the responsible position for several years. He had been closely identified with the interests of the Canada Life Assurance Co., since 1861, was president until a few weeks ago. The success of this company and its premier position among Canadian companies is largely due to his direction and counsel. He was President of the Western Assurance Co., the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co., the British American Assurance Co., and identified with many other large interests among which are the National Trust, The Dominion Iron and Steel, and the Dominion Coal Companies.

Called to the Senate

A Liberal in politics Mr. Cox was called to the Senate of Canada in November, 1896, by the Earl of Aberdeen.

He was ever a staunch supporter of the Methodist Church, and a supporter to Victoria University, in which institution he established a chair. He was also a member of the Trustee Board of Toronto University.

In 1862 he married Margaret, youngest daughter of Daniel Hopkins, of Peterboro. His wife predeceased him in 1905.

Three sons and two daughters were born of this union, E. W. Cox, president of the Canada Life Co., H. C. Cox, president of the Imperial Life Co., and Fred G. Cox, who died some years ago. The daughters are Mrs. A. L. Davis, and Mrs. A. E. Ames, both of Toronto.

He Gave Freely

His benefactions were large and widely distributed. A wealthy man, he gave liberally and most wisely. One of his largest was the gift to the new General Hospital, Toronto, of $125,000. All over this city of Peterboro, are scattered institutions that his generosity has helped, if indeed he has not wholly maintained.

Over thirty years ago his large sympathy was brought into action in connection with Dr. Barnardo's Homes, which brought to Canada, poor, but deserving waifs from England. As a substantial measure of assistance he purchased the magnificent residence of late Alexander Smith, remodelled the building and practically presented to Dr. Barnardo as one of his Canadian homes. A few years ago he enlarged the premises by erecting an addition at a cost of over $10,000.

The magnificent building at the corner of Aylmer and Simcoe streets the home of the Young Women's Christian Association was erected, largely through his assistance and of the cost of putting up and equipping, he contributed over $15,000. The local Y. M. C. A. was largely benefitted by his generous gifts. Charlotte St. Methodist Church, which he attended, was most liberally helped, and only recently he made to the church trustee board a gift of the property on which to erect a new church, and which is known as the Aaron Cox residence, at the head of Simcoe St., with in addition, a substantial contribution of $10,000. The Peterboro Protestant Home, George St. Methodist Church, Murray St. Baptist Church, and St. James Methodist Church, all were benefitted by most liberal amounts.

In the case of the latter, Mr. Cox not only gave a large sum to assist in its erection, but has given each year, one-tenth of the amount of the running expenses.

It is announced that the funeral will take place in Toronto, on Monday, 19th inst., to the cemetery in which he had erected a most magnificent mausoleum in which the body will be placed.

PETERBOROUGH MOURNS THE DEATH OF SENATOR COX

Prominent Citizens Who Were His Associates in Years Gone by, Pay High Tributes.

Universal regret was expressed in the city on the receipt of the news of the death of Senator Cox this morning. In every office and store could be heard the enquiry: "Did you hear of the death of Senator Cox?" This, with many of the stories related as to the work of the late Senator indicate the esteem in which he was held by those who were closely acquainted with his work in the city.

Senator Cox started in Peterboro in a very humble way. Many stories are told of his early life and his first business venture. He was from the first, a man of dominant personality. It has been said that at one time he peddled pins, he certainly was a "chore" or messenger boy at one time in this city, and afterward became a telegraph operator and from that worked his way to the forefront of the business world, and became a great power in the district.

Many of the older citizens have personal recollections of the late Senator, and all express their regret upon his removal, but there is a feeling that his work was completed and that all the business concerns with which he was connected, were so well managed that his death will not effect any change in their management.

Magistrate Dumble

Magistrate Dumble spoke in high terms of the late Senator's personal character. He said he was always openly associated with the membership of the Methodist Church and a loyal and liberal supporter of that body.

"As a citizen," said Mr. Dumble, "he was always progressive, and incessant in his efforts to advance the interests of the town. He was ambitious, but always accomplished his purpose by honorable methods and was prudent to excess. He thought out his plans with great care, and being satisfied as to the course, pursued it, with great tenacity, and he rarely, if ever, made a mistake.

When he began buying property, it was central city property and productive, and always enabled him to meet his liabilities. When the Midland Railway was under mismanagement and it was necessary to have a thorough business man at its head, Mr. Cox was appointed president. He took up the active management and gave assiduous labor to the work, put up his own credit, obtained money, improved the railway and settled all the debts of the Company.

He purchased large quantities of railway bonds and so improved and increased the business that the bonds rose to power which had been bought at 12½ cents on the dollar, and this was the foundation of his fortune. From that day to this, he has gained and occupied high positions in financial concerns. He had an extraordinary grasp of finance. He insisted upon first class bookkeeping, and audit; for the last two years, he has been arranging all his business matters, so that they are now under the ablest management. As to his home life, Magistrate Dumble who was one of the late Senator's most intimate friends, said that it was all summed up in the words "simple and beautiful."

Mr. R. J. Winch

Another old friend of Senator Cox still living in Peterboro, is Mr. R. J. Winch. He was very much surprised to hear of the Senator's death and spoke in warm terms of his association with him. He said that the last occasions on which he met him was in California, and afterwards in Vancouver, and they had some fine talks together about old times. Mr. Winch had known Senator Cox for fifty-six years. He said "I have nothing but good will to say of my friend, Senator Cox." Mr. Winch is at present ,confined to his house, owing to a slight accident a few days ago; he is only a few years younger than the late Senator.

Mr. E. A. Peck, M.L.A.

E. A. Peck, M.L.A., spoke of Senator Cox as "a man of sterling principle, a forceful advocate of temperance and a leading Methodist." Mr. Peck was a law student in the same building in which the Senator was in business He said that the bringing of the main line of the G. T. R. to Peterboro was due to his taking hold of the Midland Railway, by building what is known as "the missing link," from Millbrook.

Mr. T. E. Bradburn

Mr. T. E. Bradburn ex-M.P.P., spoke of Senator Cox as a public spirited man, who had spent his best days in the up-building of the town. He was ever on the look-out for manufacturers whom he encouraged to locate in this district.

Many other old friends of the late Senator expressed themselves in similar terms, among whom were Mr. W. G. Morrow, ex-Mayor Bradburn, Mr. Jas. Kendry and Mr. Collins.

FAMILY IN PERIL FROM COAL GAS

Five people narrowly escaped death this morning from asphyxiation by coal gas. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Curtis, their two little daughters, and Mr. Curtis, brother, Harry, reside on Boundary Road, below St. Peter's Cemetery. Last night when some fresh coal was placed in the range, the dampers were allowed to remain closed and as a result the gas was not given means of escape via the pipes.

About four o'clock this morning Mrs. Curtis was aroused by the convulsive manner in which one of the children was acting. She immediately arose and soon observed that the place was filled with gas. After much work she succeeded in arousing her husband and his brother and the former set out to get a doctor.

Dr. Scott was summoned and he found every member of the household in a very weakened condition. In the course of a few hours however, they revived and were none the worse for their experience.

CONDUCT THE MUNICIPAL BUSINESS BY COMMISSION

Ald. Gordon Moves Resolution That Legislation be Sought, but Council Decides not to Hurry

During the meeting of the Committee of the Whole Council last night, Ald. G. N. Gordon moved a resolution, the substance of which was that the city apply for legislation, giving the city power to introduce municipal government by commission.

Ald. Gordon failed to get a seconder, although he looked at Mayor Buller. His Worship humorously remarked that Ald. Gordon had been away and had had some sort of imagination. The Chief Magistrate explained that, as stated by Ald. Gordon, he had referred to the question in his inaugural address, but it was his intention to call a public meeting and by this and other means, give education and bring about discussion on the subject. It was not his idea this year.

Ald. Anderson opposed the resolution. He was not satisfied that it was the best means of government. It had been tried across the line and some places had gone back to the old system. He would be in favor of a Board of Control and Council.

"There are arguments for and against it," said Mayor Buller.

Other members thought there were other more important items, and that the slate to go before the Private Bills Committee should not be crowded.

WOULD NOT HAVE MAYOR ON UTILITIES COMMISSION

The city council in committee last night, discussed several matters, for which special legislation may be asked for this year.

One was that the Mayor be a member of the new Utilities Commission, that will deal with both the water and power. The opinions expressed were against a fourth member being added to the commission, as a deadlock might be brought about in the role on different questions.

Ald. Anderson thought the Board should not be interfered with. The council would not want anything like this. The Commissioners were elected by the people and they should be responsible. If the Board were not satisfactory, the people could say so by their vote.

Another matter was the changing of the name from Water Commission to Utilities Commission, but this is asked for by the government, so there would be no difficulty.

The committee discussed the proposed legislation regarding Hydro-Electric, in private.

As Mark of Respect.

The bell at St. John's church was tolled this morning and funeral marches were played on the chimes, as a token of respect for the late Senator Geo. A. Cox.

PETERBOROUGH, FRIDAY, JAN. 16, 1914.

FREE ICE AND SNOW.

C. E. JAMIESON, as secretary of the Big Brother's Club, has come to the aid of citizens in the matter of free open air skating rinks, and while the club has not succeeded in securing a free rink in each ward, it has undertaken the care and control of a free rink to be opened upon the lot kindly offered by Col. Clegg on the parade ground outside the Armouries.

As skating is a national past-time and almost a necessity to our young life, it is important that ample facilities should be provided for the safe indulgence in this very healthful winter exercise. It is surely a strange thing in a country where ice and snow is so abundant, that more provision is not made by our civic authorities for the free enjoyment of skating and sleigh-riding. The snow and ice is the free gift of God to our country and it should be kept free from all business propositions so far as ordinary exercise is concerned.

It is a pity that our Council could not see its way to take the matter up at once. One member argued that the money spent upon the upkeep of such rinks might be spent upon feeding and clothing the poor. But there is another side to that argument. The "poor" are denied the means of free open-air healthy exercise and very often spend money which ought to go to the necessities of life, for the privilege of skating upon a well-ordered private rink. Snow and ice should be free to the public and all rinks should be under the control and supervision of public authorities. It has got to come, and it might have come this year as well as next.

ARE WE TOO NERVOUS ?

THE WHITE SLAVE SCARE is responsible for a nervousness among a certain class of people which borders upon hysteria. If the average woman were to listen to all the awful warnings and obey all the injunctions of some very good but extremely highly strung individuals, her life out of doors would not be worth living. A photograph appeared the other day in one of our journals of a young lady being escorted by a trained police dog. The young lady in question was dressed in a very charming costume, especially designed to attract the attention and amorous glances of the male part of the population, and yet she went about with a sign up "beware of the dog," or "love me love my dog."

The following are some protective rules issued by an English Association :

1. Girls should never speak to strangers, either men or women, in the street, in shops, in stations, in trains, in lonely country roads, or in places of amusement.

2. Girls should never ask the way of any but officials on duty, such as policemen, railway officials, or postmen.

3. Girls should never loiter or stand alone in the street, and if accosted by a stranger (whether man or woman) should walk as quickly as possible to the nearest policeman.

4. Girls should never stay to help a woman who apparently faints at their feet in the street, but should immediately call a policeman to her aid.

Commenting upon these rules the Editor of Collier's Weekly says :

"Possibly these restrictions are colored by the moral overstrain apt to characterize a reformer's zeal, but it is fair to ask whether a land in which they are necessary is either civilized or Christian. Nothing Bernard Shaw says of English hypocrisy and sensuality is half so striking as this proposal to put everybody in social quarantine. If the facts sustain such contentions, the sooner we have an ironclad etiquette the better. But what a ghastly commentary on our "progress," how our cities sink their pride and become mere traps of lust and death ! What is the truth of all this ?"

THE FAILURE OF BOOMING.

THE PALL MALL GAZETTE, commenting on what it terms "the collapse of the Canadian land boom," says :—

"Probably the Dominion, especially in the Northwest, is face to face with a quiet time, for perhaps two years, until events resume their normal course. Canada has merely had an experience similar to that of Australia. It is a species of distemper, which attacks young countries and is very unpleasant to everybody while it lasts, but in the long run is productive of good results."

There is a great amount of truth in this comment, but the mistake that the English journal makes is in supposing or giving the impression that Canada is wholly dependent upon the "land boom." It is true that we are suffering from the excessive booming of real estate, but Canada is not going to wait until the real estate men get upon their feet again before she goes forward.

"Booming" is bad policy for the boomer, the country and the capitalist. An intrinsically valuable proposition may hang back for years for lack of confidence or knowledge of its value in financial circles. There are many such projects which only need taking up by level-headed financiers who can, not only take a thing up, but work it out.

Real estate must take its subsidiary place in the busines world, we must have town lots, but they are useless and valueless apart from trade and industry. Canada has not yet begun to develope as an industrial country. It has not yet realized its own possibilities in this direction. In the articles which have appeared in these columns upon the subject of mineral resources of Eastern Ontario, we have tried to indicate a line of development which might be persued by far-seeing, reliable and practical men.

True enterprise is not in a hurry, it examines its ground, and having made sure it is on the right track, sets out quietly to accomplish its purpose. We need more consecrated, patriotic business men who are divinely selfish and "conscious of far-gain." The great manufactories of England have been built up by English gentlemen who have stood by their propositions for years—and for a life-time. Industries cannot be built up by trumped-up companies and controlled by managers who have no further interest in the concern than to draw their salary. Mining and quarrying companies have been floated and put in charge of men capable of handling them, and in many cases known to us these "managers" have been the sole cause of the failure owing to their irresponsible and often dishonest conduct. All these things can be overcome and good men can be secured for sound propositions.

We are glad to find that our editorials on this subject have aroused interest in other journals and among engineers and speculators generally. The Toronto Globe has added a very encouraging editorial upon the subject which, appearing in such a widely read and responsible journal, will give impetus to the investigations which have already been instituted. In regard to feltspar, we have it on good authority that independent parties in Ottawa have lately taken out a number of patents connected with the matter, and we believe it will soon be an actual working proposition.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE CATHOLIC REGISTER says that it was an Irish poet, W. B. Yeats, who "first introduced Tangore to an admiring world." Tangore is a Hindoo poet and has nothing to do with the Tango. But the Irish have introduced a very hilarious dance to the world which, were it indulged in by Society in these days, would cause no little comment—we refer to the Irish jig.

THE SPEECH FROM THE THRONE read by H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught as Governor-General, was not in any way remarkable. No mention was made of naval matters. This does not necessarily mean that the matter is shelved, or that Mr. Borden has renounced his obligation. Mr. Borden is in office and he evidently intends to govern his tongue as well as Canada. Time is on his side.

A TELEGRAM from Mexico says : "The first woman to take up the diplomatic service as a profession has just been appointed here. Miss Henrietta Hoegh, a pretty woman of 27, is to be First Secretary at the Norwegian Legation in Mexico. She passed examinations in International Law and political economy two years ago. "As First Secretary she will have the privilege of wearing the usual diplomatic uniform with the exception of the ornamental sword and gold-braided breeches."

ARCHDUKE FRANCIS FERDINAND, the heir to the Austrian Throne, will not complain of the trammels of etiquette, which usually renders the lives of the children of the House of Hapsburg miserable. Their only son, Otto, is often taken out by his parents in a motor-car, the perambulator being packed at the back of the car. Out in the country the Archduke and his wife dismiss the car and wheel the perambulator themselves in turn. The principal amusement of their children this autumn has been watching the performances at a picture theatre at the Posendorff Palace.

The Ratio of Success.

Collier's.

As an interesting by-product of the currency discussion there emerges the fact that five of the six executives of New York City's greatest banks are self-made men, born to small things. Five to one is heavy odds, and banking is supposed to be almost the one business where success can be inherited. What is the ratio, in other lines where the struggle is more immediate ?

The Voiceless.

Oliver Wendell Holmes.

We count the broken lyrics that rest
Where the sweet wailing singers slumber,
But o'er their silent sister's breast
The wild flowers who will stoop to number ?

A few can touch the magic string,
And noisy fame is proud to win them—
Alas for those who never sing,
But die with all their music in them !

Nay, grieve not for the dead alone
Whose song has told their heart's sad story—
Weep for the voiceless, who have known
The cross without the crown of glory !

Not where Leucadian breezes sweep
O'er Sappho's memory-haunted pillow,
But where the glistening night dews weep,
On nameless sorrow's churchyard pillow.

O hearts that break and give no sign
Save whitening lip and faded tresses,
Till Death pours out his longed-for wine
Slow dropped from Misery's crushing presses.

If singing breath or echoing chord
To every hidden pang were given,
What endless melodies were poured,
As sad as earth, as sweet as heaven !

WHITE SLAVERY

By Walt Mason

Oh, let us paw around some more and roast the frightful white slave traffic, and on the lecture platform roar, and write foul novels, tense and graphic. White slavery's the darkest maze that e'er a moral stick we shook at; so let's present a lot of plays unfit for decent folk to look at. The magazines in horror pant, the public prints are daily yawping, until I tremble for my aunt whenever she goes townward shopping. The fate she faces makes me cringe—a fate distressing, dire and shady! Some fellow with a cheap syringe may up and dope that fine old lady! The unprotected girls to grab, the slavers lurk in nooks and crannies, and we must keep unceasing tab upon our gay and giddy grannies. Sane people say the white slave tales are made of air that's superheated, suggesting that the villain males should like all other myths be treated. But why be sane? The wiser game is just to shriek around and caper, and thus we win a transient fame, and see our pictures in the paper.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

COASTING ON HILLS.

To the Editor of The Review.

Sir,—I notice the comment regarding the children sleigh riding on the hills, and no doubt Mr. Johnston considers this pastime unsafe, on account of the railroad tracks, which is decidedly right. However, I would like to draw the attention of the Stewart street hill, which would make an ideal spot for the purpose, and a place where the traffic is very light, and I think this hill should be given to the children for their amusing and healthy exercise.

Trusting that something will be done for the benefit of the children, and thanking you Mr. Editor, for the valuable space.

Respectfully,
Centre Ward Ratepayer.

SAVED MANY LIVES.

Horseman Rides Through Valley Warning People of Break in Dam.

CUMBERLAND, Md., Jan. 16.—Had not a horseman made a wild ride of twenty miles before daybreak yesterday morning through the Stony River valley to Schell, W.Va., warning the people that the great storage dam of the West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co. had cracked and its crumbling was inevitable, there would probably have been great loss of life.

The telephone leading to the dam was out of commission, and the Paul Revere-like ride was the only means of warning the people, who immediately took to the hills and camped by bonfires. A few persons had previously known of the impending danger and had sought safety on the mountain-tops. The great dam, which was completed only a few months ago at a cost of a quarter million dollars, is a total wreck. At three o'clock yesterday morning the break began at both ends, and about eleven o'clock the front of the dam went out. The first break early in the morning tended to minimize the force of the greater break just before noon, yet a wall of water thirty feet high stretching between the narrow defile swept down, carrying everything before it.

At Piedmont the telephone girl, when asked about the flood, said: "I don't know anything about the flood. Water all around us; everything closed and the people gone to the hills. What's to become of me?" It is understood the girl was later taken taken out of the building in a boat.

Barbers State Functionaries.

In Egypt, a large proportion of the barbers are state functionaries. According to an edict issued by Ibrahim Pasha in 1848, every village barber was ordered when death occurred in his district to make a careful examination of the corpse and report to the authorities any death occurring through epidemic, disease or foul play. Severe penalties were imposed for any neglect of this duty, and a fee of five cents was paid for each death registered. Some years ago the system of payment by fees was abolished, and each village barber now draws from the Government a fixed salary for his services.

Only Drank Beer.

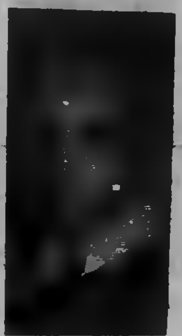
Swinburne's admiration for the scenery inspired the walk which every morning, rain or fine, he took across Putney Common. It led also to visitors to see the poet walk. One modest admirer traveled far to catch a glimpse of Swinburne in the flesh, and having read of the poet's habits visited the hostelry at which he called each morning in passing. There sat the literary demi-god reading the "Pink-'Un." It was a shock to the pilgrim, who played the part of merely an ordinary customer. But worse followed. Said the pilgrim to the girl behind the bar: "I suppose you know that is Swinburne, the great poet." Came the answer: "Yes, I've heard so. But he isn't much good to us—he only drinks beer."

Handel Was Disgusted.

There was a period of his life in which Handel, the famous composer, retired from London in a fit of disgust. He went to Dublin, and it was there—in the Dublin Music Hall—that his great masterpiece, "The Messiah," was produced. "The performance," writes D. A. Chart, "was for the benefit of Mercer's Hospital. In order to provide room for a large audience, ladies were requested to lay aside their hoops and gentlemen their swords. By this means an audience of 700 was crowded into the space, and the concert realised 400 pounds."

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

FRIDAY, JANUARY SIXTEENTH



Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, the eminent English actor, who is about to make his farewell tour of Canada, is sixty-one years of age today. Strange to say, Sir Johnston was originally an artist and intended to make his living as a painter, but the glamor of the stage seized him and he went on the boards when he was just twenty-one. He still continued his painting as a pastime and when playing with Sir Henry Irving in "Much Ado About Nothing," was commissioned by the great actor to paint the church scene in that play. Sir Henry proposed to pay £150 for the painting, but was so delighted with the result that he insisted on sending Forbes-Robertson a cheque for £300. The latter returned it twice but in vain. Irving would have his way.

PRESENT AT DOG FIGHT.

But Only in His Private Capacity, He Avers—Advises Theatrical Company About to Visit Giveadam Gulch—Unwise Wiliam Wise.

By M. QUAD.

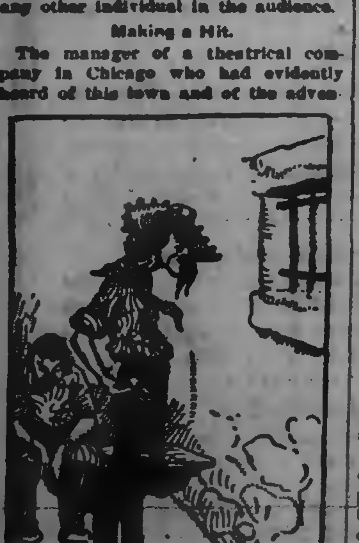
[Copyright, 1913, by Associated Literary Press.]

OUR esteemed contemporary has a column article this week pitching into us because we attended the dog fight at the rink last Saturday evening. Yes, we were there, and we are happy to say that we had $10 on the winning dog.

We did not attend the soiree as the editor of the Kicker, as mayor or as postmaster, but as a private citizen. As editor and proprietor of a newspaper we are expected to take a drink with the boys and sit down to a game of poker now and then, but as mayor and postmaster we are obliged to assume and preserve a certain dignity. This the boys perfectly understand and take in a good natured way. Those who saw us at the dog fight understood that we had left our dignity of position behind us for an hour and had come to see the fracas the same as any other individual in the audience.

Making a Hit.

The manager of a theatrical company in Chicago who had evidently heard of this town and of the adventures of various combinations visiting us writes to inquire just what sort of play will take best with our people. We take pleasure in answering him that he will be sure to make a hit and a barrel of money with "The Merchant of Venice."



WILLIAM WAS WONDERING WHERE HE WAS AT.

It must not be put on as in the east, however. Venice and the merchant will be all O. K. for about ten minutes. Then there should be five minute clog dancing and singing, after that more Venice, then a fight with Indians or the rescue of a beautiful maiden from a bloody pirate.

Don't stick too close to Venice. Our people want a mixture. There will be no objection to ringing in a scene from "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in one of the acts nor the gravedigging scene in "Hamlet" in another, but there must be a dance or an abduction between them.

Such managers as have taken our fatherly advice regarding this matter have pleased our people and gone away with a hat full of money, while those who have been stiff necked have left town on foot or died of starvation in the woods.

Fair Warning to All.

The panes of glass which were shot out of the city hall windows by Colonel Early's cowboys one day last week have been restored, and his honour the mayor (who is ourself) hereby gives fair warning to all—cowboys, teamsters or any other class—that the next man who pops at those windows will find somebody popping away at him. We don't object to the boys having fun and indulging in pistol practice to their hearts' content, but a line must be drawn somewhere, and we draw it at public property.

The front doors of the hall are provided with iron knobs. Any critter sober enough to shoot can stand and bang away at those knobs by the hour and no one will disturb him, but the windows are a different thing.

Copies of this notice will be sent to all ranches for twenty miles around, and we hope the warning conveyed will be heeded by all.

A Base Canard.

The story floating around town to the effect that Captain Kennedy, a late arrival from the east, was a horse thief who had to cut sticks from Indiana is a base canard and should be trampled on by every respectable person. The other day when the captain came to this office to subscribe for the Kicker he referred to the scandal and produced documents to prove his character.

Instead of stealing a horse, he drove off and sold three cows which he supposed belonged to an estate in which he had an interest. He was not chased out of the state; but, being all ready to go, he happened to take a train just ahead of the sheriff. He didn't come here as a skulk from justice, but to see if the pure air wouldn't help his catarrh.

He will remain for several weeks yet unless the Indiana officers come along and get his identity mixed up, and we bespeak for him the courtesy and good will of all our people.

The day he arrived in town he was asked to subscribe to the miserable apology issued by the bowlegged critter down the street, and his refusal to do so probably set this vile calumny afloat. We are glad that it is in our power to put this matter right with the public.

Not Any In Ours.

While on a business trip to Florence last week we had the privilege of a close inspection of a vehicle called a bicycle. This was the first time we ever saw one, except at a distance. After we had finished our inspection the owner showed us how the old thing worked and suggested that we try it.

We had never met with anything on wheels which we could not get on to and stay as long as we pleased, and it was with a great deal of self confidence that we tackled that bike. We know how we got on, but as to how we got off will ever be a puzzle to us. We can't make out whether the thing bucked with us or ran away, but when we came to we had a scalp wound five inches long, our nose was badly warped and we had a mouthful of dirt and grass to chew on.

Some men might have tried it again, but we didn't. When we want anything more in that line, we'll get it in the way of a stampeding herd of steers, or try a timber slide down a mountain. Our friendly feelings for the bikist will undergo no change, but as for the critter itself, we warn it that our guns are loaded and we shall take all precautions to protect ourself.

Unwise William Wise.

Colonel Sinclair's wagon train arrived from the railroad Wednesday afternoon, and at about 4 o'clock his honor (who is ourself) received word from a mule whacker named William Wise that he proposed to capture the town at 6 o'clock. Mr. Wise hadn't allowed for any change in Giveadam Gulch in the last five years.

He figured that things were just as they used to be, when a lone duffer could ride into town with a boot, shoot right and left with a yell, and in the course of five minutes have the streets to himself and something to brag about for the rest of his life. We were ready, in company with the city marshal, at 5:55.

At exactly 6 o'clock William Wise came down the river road like a cyclone, hair flying, a gun in either hand and a warwhoop on the end of his tongue. At 6:05 his cayuse was dead in the road and William was in the town lockup and wondering where he was at.

Next morning he was fined $15 and his guns were confiscated, and when he walked off he kept looking behind him and trying to make out how things had happened that way. Any other duffer who feels like capturing the town is invited to communicate with us by mail or personal interview.

Reforming a Road Agent.

In returning from the Red valley the other afternoon we were stopped at Buckshot creek by an ugly faced critter who commanded us to shell out. As he had the drop on us we handed over our personal effects with promptness and dispatch. He was about to ride away when we proposed a game of poker, and the idea struck him favorably.

The two of us sat down on the grass and started in, and at the end of forty minutes we had won back our valuables and had him dead broke. On the last hand out we held only a pair of kings, and we knew from the run of the cards that he had a full house with ace high, and yet we bluffed him out of his horse and guns.

He was a mean looking cuss, and he had no scruples about robbing us, but he was a man of his word. He made no kick about being cleaned out, and there was something like a tear in his eyes as he asked us if we knew where he could strike a job at $1 a day. We don't see how he can get another start in the highway robbery business this fall, and we have considerable hopes that being cleaned out will lead to his reformation and salvation.

A Public Retraction.

The policy of the Kicker since the first issue has been to state things fairly and truthfully, and whenever we have discovered later that a published item has done any one injustice we have not been slow to follow it with an explanation perfectly satisfactory to the party aggrieved.

Last week we had a local item to the effect that some miserable wretch had robbed Major Smith's clothesline of four shirts, and we indulged in the hope that he would speedily be caught and given a dance on the head of a barrel.

It seems that we were mistaken, and the major feels that he has been placed in a false position to the public. The fact is, as he wishes us to state, he does not own four shirts, but only two, and neither of these is a white one. They were old blue flannel shirts, much the worse for wear. What was really stolen was a Navajo blanket, and we are glad to make this retraction and set the major right before this community.

A Success.

Mrs. Seaside—Was your house party a success?

Mrs. Countrycot—Yes, indeed. There wasn't one of them who wasn't engaged the first week, and there wasn't two of them who would speak to each other the second.—Puck.

Sad Death of "No. 1."

Scotland Yard's mascot, the black cat Thomas, semi-officially known as "No. 1," recently met his death by falling nearly 100 feet when trying to perform the criminal act of capturing a bird from the ledge of a sixth-storey window.

So popular was "No. 1" that privileges which high officials, such as assistant commissioners, chief constables, and superintendents, would not presume to demand he regarded as his right. For instance, he would invade the commissioner's private room and, ensconcing himself in the most comfortable chair, would hear the greatest criminal secrets. But these did not always interest him, and he had been known to show his contempt for the whole proceedings by stalking across the floor and demanding instant release from the room.

He was taken out after being in the water for fifteen minutes, but life was found to be extinct.

TO COMMAND IN INDIA.

Kitchener's Right Hand Man Gets a Coveted Post.

It is very evident that the British War Office intends strengthening the position of its representatives in India, for instead of appointing an officer of the British Army to the important position of Commander-in-Chief, in succession to Sir O'Moore Creagh, Sir Beauchamp Duff has been selected from the Indian Army.

This has caused a good deal of surprise in the service, caused chiefly by the fact that the officer designated for the post belongs, like his predecessor, to the Indian army, whereas, there has long been a sort of unwritten rule in existence that the appointment should go alternately to members of the British army, and to the Indian army—such as is the case of the mayoralty of Montreal, a French-Canadian being chosen one term, and an English-speaking alderman the next.

The command in India now constitutes a very different post from what it was before Lord Kitchener appeared on the scene and carried out his great measures of administrative reform, measures which, so far as the central control of the military forces is concerned, have been developed still further on the same lines since he quitted the country. The Commanders-in-Chief used to have a co-adjutor in the form of the military member of Council, who, speaking generally, was responsible for everything in connection with material as distinguished from personnel. Both were members of the Viceroy's Council, and although the military member figured less conspicuously in the military life of the country than his confrere, he in reality controlled the purse strings, and was in a sense, therefore, the predominant partner.

Lord Kitchener swept this system away (contrary to the wishes of the then governor-general, Lord Curzon) and nowadays the Commander-in-Chief is virtually war minister. At the same time, a great deal of the inspection work that used formerly to be undertaken by the Commander-in-Chief has now devolved upon his two principal subordinates, outside of the headquarters staff, the commanders of the northern and southern armies. The consequence of the transformation has been that the soldier, who holds the highest position in the country, requires to possess qualifications, somewhat different from those which were primarily looked for when that position was about to fall vacant in the past.

If we look back over the holders of the post of Commander-in-Chief during the present generation, we find some very familiar names—H.R.H., the Duke of Connaught, Canada's present governor-general; Sir Donald Stewart and Lord Roberts, Sir George White and Sir W. Lockhart—but all these eminent soldiers, although capable and experienced administrators, won the post rather in virtue of their being acknowledged and successful fighting men, practiced in command in peace and war, than in virtue of their being credited with exceptional gifts of organization.

General Duff was Lord Kitchener's right-hand man at the time when the victor of Omdurman was, while still more or less a stranger, engaged in carrying out vital reforms in a land possessing a social system not readily intelligible to an outsider.

Realistic Dream.

A Hanover college professor was annoyed by the pranks of a freshman in his classes. He resolved that if that individual would not reform he would "kick" him out of the class.

The other morning the professor was seen coming to college with a slight limp in his gait. He was met by a brother member of the faculty and asked why he was limping.

"I dreamed last night that I was 'kicking' — out of one of my classes, and when I woke up this morning I found that I had a very sore toe. I must have struck the bedpost."—Indianapolis News.

WITNESS WAS UNWILLING

To Give Evidence Against Man Charged With Assaulting Her

CASE WAS DISMISSED

The charge of indecent assault against John Burns was this morning dismissed by Magistrate Dumble on the contention that the woman failed to satisfy the court.

Burns, who pleaded not guilty to the charge, was defended by G. N. Gordon, while the Crown was represented by Mr. Joseph Wearing, M.A.

Magistrate Dumble, in summing up the case, said that the woman had voluntarily gone with the men and had also gone to Burns' home, where there was nobody around, and that she was of a pitiful character, and that the men were nothing but blackguards.

Lizzie Kelly, said she was 25 years of age. She met Burns on Hunter Street on the night in question. The walked around for a while, and then went to Burns' home.

"Did he take any improper liberties with you there?" enquired the Magistrate.

"That is my affair," was the answer of the witness, who would not give any definite evidence as to the case.

"Well, you're conduct is on trial, too," remarked the Magistrate.

"Well, I will let the prisoner tell that part himself."

"Maybe the prisoner won't want to tell," remarked Mr. Gordon.

"Well, I've told all I am going to tell," asserted the witness.

The witness then described how they met the other man and went for a drive going by the way of the golf links.

"Did you go straight home?" enquired the Magistrate.

"No."

Witness admitted having a drink out of the bottle which the two men had. Near the golf links they got out and walked. Witness denied calling for help.

"I guess it must be a book you are writing," remarked the prisoner to His Worship.

As to the question regarding the house, the witness would not state definitely what took place. She could not remember the particulars of the drive.

After being discharged, the Chief produced another charge in the shape of a little information as to Burns being under the influence of liquor while on the black list. He pleaded guilty and said he got his liquor from Jack Donahue. He was fined $20 and costs, amounting to $22.50, to be paid forthwith.

The girl at first refused to take the oath, on the Bible used in the court. She said she was a Roman Catholic. A Roman Catholic Bible was secured and the oath was taken.

His companion, Arthur Kennedy, was fined $10 for the same offence. The police did not connect him with the assault.

In cold weather take special pains to dry the hands thoroughly, and you will save much discomfort from chapping.

BRILLIANT CEREMONIAL MARKS OPENING OF SESSION

Omission of Naval Aid Bill and Highways Aid Bill From Speech From Throne and Forecast of Distribution Indicates Chief Work of the Session—Debate Monday

OTTAWA, Jan. 16.—The Houses of Parliament were opened with stately ceremonial yesterday, after a vacation of nearly seven months. His Royal Highness, the Governor-General, rode from Rideau Hall escorted by the Princess Louise Dragoon Guards, and amid a brilliant scene the third session of the twelfth Dominion Parliament was inaugurated.

To-day's sitting will probably last only a few minutes and the debate on the reply to the speech from the Throne will begin on Monday.

The first Government resolution of the session to appear on the order paper is Premier Borden's motion providing for the increase in the Senatorial representation from the West, in accordance with the announcement made in the speech from the Throne. The resolution provides for two additional members of the Senate each from the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and three additional members from the Province of British Columbia, a total addition of nine members to the upper Chamber. This will bring the total membership of the Senate up to 96, the divisions being 24 for the Maritime Provinces, 24 for Quebec, 24 for Ontario and 24 for Western Canada.

The speech from the Throne, following precedent of recent years, was very short and made no attempt to outline at any length the Government program for the session. The most interesting feature of it was the news that the naval bill and highways act would not be introduced this session.

His Royal Highness began by thanking Canadians for their sympathy during the illness of the Duchess of Connaught. He congratulated the nation upon the expansion of trade and the bountiful crops. Continuing, the speech referred to the financial stringency:

"I feel convinced that this condition will be merely temporary, and that the boundless resources of this Dominion, which are so fully and universally known and recognized, give us the fullest assurance of continued material prosperity and progress.

"As a result of the recent decennial census the representation of the different provinces must be readjusted," it proceeds, "as required by the British North America Act, and a bill will be introduced for the purpose.

"A bill consolidating the Railway Act and its various amendments as well as bills relating to the civil service and to trust and loan companies will be submitted for your consideration.

"Several other bills will be submitted, including measures providing for increased representation of the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, in the Senate."

A reference to the growing volume of immigration, announcement of satisfactory arrangements under the Agriculture Instruction Act, a report of progress on the National Transcontinental Railway, a reference to the proposed provision of adequate terminal facilities and one to the sea safety conference in London, Eng., complete the legislative section of the speech.

In the financial section it is stated that the revenue for the past year "has been ample to cover both ordinary and capital expenditure, and the estimates for the next fiscal year are promised at an early date.

At the conclusion of the ceremony in the Senate chamber the members retired, and again betook themselves to the Commons. There the time-honored procedure took place. The Prime Minister introduced a bill respecting the administration of oaths of office, which will never be heard of again. And he then gave notice of a motion to take up the speech from the throne. Then the new members were introduced, resounding cheers from their respective sides greeting the appearance of each.

The House then adjourned until to-day, when the business will commence.

It is stated that the debate on the address will in all probability not be proceeded with until Monday. This means that the House will meet for a few minutes only to-day, when there will be an adjournment until Monday at three o'clock. The debate will probably take all of next week.

Death of Old Glengarrian.

CORNWALL, Jan. 16. — Allan Munroe, one of the oldest residents of Glengarry, passed away at the residence of his son-in-law, Farquhar McLennan, at Summerstown Station at the advanced age of 93 years. The late Mr. Munroe in his long span of life saw many changes. He used to tell stories of the time when ox carts were used to go to market, and he lived to see the automobile. The funeral took place yesterday to Salem Church Cemetery, Summerstown.

Ancient Polish Crown Found.

VIENNA, Jan. 16.—Severe storms at Gracow, the Austrian fortress, and formerly capital of Poland, uprooted an ancient elm, revealing the hiding place of the crown worn by the former kings of Poland, dating back to the fourteenth century. The hidden crown has been lost since the middle of the eighteenth century. Some magnificent gems have fallen from the crown, but none are missing.

A Bibliophile's Reply.

Mandell Creighton, who was bishop of London, had a horror of lending his favorite books. A fellow clergyman once visited the bishop and took a fancy to an old edition of Shakespeare. He borrowed the volume and did not think to return it for several months. Finally the minister returned it with a letter, saying, "My dear Bishop—I have great pleasure in returning the volume you lent me."

The bishop answered, "My Dear Brother—All the joy is mine."

COAL PRICES DROPPED

Better Buy Now at These, the Lowest Made: $1.00 Per Ton Below Regular Prices

I propose to meet any competition that is put up by any dealer and meet it in a decisive way. Consumers are urged to send in orders at once.

It will pay to buy and burn coal at these prices. Don't delay. We deliver the best thoroughly screened coal, first quality Lehigh Valley Coal, every load.

	Regular Price	Fitzgerald's Price
Egg Coal	$8.00	$7.25
Stove Coal	8.25	7.25
Nut Coal	8.50	7.50
Pea Coal	7.00	6.00

I claim that the prices heretofore asked for coal have been reasonable, considering the expenses of the business. Below I give a statement of facts in connection with the cost of handling coal in this city. One ton of coal of 2,000 lbs.

1 ton nut (at Buffalo)	$5.36
Freight from bridge	$1.25
State export tax	.10
Total cost on track	$6.71
Handling cost in this city	$1.35
	$8.06
Selling price to public	$8.50
Leaving profit	44c. per ton

COST OF ECONOMICAL COAL HANDLING
(From the Coal Trade Journal.)

In answer to an inquiry with reference to the net profit per ton on coal we state that the profit can fairly be assumed by deducting the following items of expenses, these being based upon a fairly equipped yard, up-to-date generally:

Advertising	$0.03	per ton
Breakage, lost in transit, culm	.15	" "
Dumping in pocket	.01½	" "
Office and general expenses	.12½	" "
Insurance and taxes	.03	" "
Yard superintendent and employes	.13	" "
Interest on investment or rent	.10	" "
Bad debts and equipment depreciation	.02	" "
Office employes	.15	" "
Owner's salary	.15	" "
Interest on stock carried	.02	" "
Average cost of delivery	.50	" "

Total handling cost to the dealer, per ton....$1.42

The public may ask how I can afford to sell coal at the prices I now make. I am selling the coal at cost on track and only adding the cost of cartage to consumers (70c. per ton.) Overhead expenses will be charged to other lines of business.

D ONTARIO'S MINERAL WEALTH

ronto Globe Endorses Re- iew's Editorials Advocating the Development of Mineral Industries.

The Toronto Globe of yesterday ntained the following editorial:

Mining possibilities in the Trent alley district and adjacent counties ave been set forth with interestg detail in a series of editorials n The Peterboro Review. Indications in this region have attracted any enterprising miners, and while esults in the past have been varied, prospects as The Review points out, re greatly improved by railway facilities, water power, and electric transmission adaptations and a more extensive demand for many lines of minerals. The list of minerals cited by The Review is long and varied, including iron pyrites, arsenical pyrites, talc, flourspar, feldspar, actinolite, mixtures of actinolite, fibrous hornblende and talc, bartytes, hematite, magnetite, galena, zinc blende, marble, apatite or phosphate of lime, silica, mica, graphite and marl.

There are many combinations in the list which promise good returns to enterprise. Large deposits of phosphate of lime are conveniently situated for treatment with sulphuric acid from the acid works at Tweed, a process which produces a fertilizer of recognized effectiveness and now in good demand. This highly mineralized district has already established a chain of industries producing sulphuric, nitric and muriatic acids, ground talc, arsenic, pig lead, cobalt and nickel oxide, cement, and lime. There are openings also for the manufacture of fire brick, roofing material, boiler coatings, and electric insulating substances.

The richness of this region in a variety of minerals and the comparatively slow development of attendant industries recall some serious defects in Ontario's legislation. Much of the land has passed through the hands of speculators during sporadic mining booms in the past. They have sold out to settlers, retaining mineral rights. These rights repose almost forgotten, on account of a grave defect in the law which exempts them from taxation.

Holders wait without cost to themselves until someone makes a discovery. The class of men likely to make discoveries know this and do their prospecting elsewhere. A change in the law making unworked mineral rights subject to taxation would soon restore them to the Province, and the opening of them for location would result in the advent of a swarm of prospectors. Until this change is made, and the lure of great possibilities held out to the actual discoverer, the mineral wealth will not be adequately developed.

Kaiser Orders Inquiry Into Crux of Alsation Trouble.

BERLIN, Jan. 16.—Emperor William yesterday again intervened in order to prevent another crisis in connection with the recent violent incidents between the military and civilians at Zabern, Alsace. He directed an investigation to be made to determine whether the decree of 1820, authorizing the military to ignore the civil officials, was still in force and had been rightfully included in the army service instruction which permitted the acquittal of Col. von Reuter and Lieut. Schad, of the 99th Infantry Regiment. Officials here declare it to be doubtful whether the decree should have been included.

The revocation of the ancient decree, it is stated, would remove the principal cause of the present Parliamentary and popular irritation over the affair, and would prevent a repetition of the arbitrary assumption of police powers by troops, without a request from the civil authorities.

Herr Von Heydebrand, leader of the ultra-Conservative, reactionary, pro-military party known as "The Uncrowned King of Prussia," gave a diverting exhibition of "the Zabern spirit" animating his class of Germans in yesterday's budget debate in the Reichstag. Attaching the Kaiser's Government for yielding to Radical-Socialist pressure with the tax provisions for army increase, Heydebrand said: "Why did not the Government stand firm? Why did not they simply tell Parliament to go to the devil?"

One of Heydebrand's staunch supporters is Von Oldenburg, who declared on a celebrated occasion that the Kaiser ought to have the right any time to send a lieutenant and ten men "to close up the Reichstag."

HALDANE AND SAMUELS SAY NO WEAKENING IN NAVY

British Liberal Ministers Enunciate Definitely the Determination of the Asquith Government to Avoid Any Step Which Would Impair Defence—Slackening Now Would Cost More in Long Run.

LONDON, Jan. 16.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—Two declarations of the most explicit kind were made last night by Lord Haldane and Postmaster-General Samuels, regarding the immediate policy of the Liberal Government on the navy. Speaking at Hoxton, the Lord Chancellor made one fact quite clear; namely, that the Liberal party does not propose to go back on the policy which has been declared publicly in Parliament, and have no intention of weakening the navy by departing from those standards.

Lord Haldane led up to this declaration by dealing with the proposals which have been made for a reduction of armaments. "I should be thankful," he said, "to see the time close at hand when all nations are going to agree to reduce their armaments and relieve us of the monstrous burden which we have to keep up for defence, but that can only be done co-operatively. Experience shows that if in a heroic moment one country lays down its armaments before others do, unrest follows, and there is reaction, and the bill it would have to pay would be much larger than if it had kept up to current standard."

The Liberal party, he went on to say, is against anything which will put the defences of this country in an unduly weak position. Far from having done that they have devoted during the last eight years more scientific study to the subject of defences than has been devoted to it for a very long time. "We have increased and strengthened the navy, and the reason of that is that other powers are building up and increasing their navies with great rapidity. We have reorganized the army, and as a result of prolonged enquiries we have the satisfaction of knowing that we have provided amply sufficient to secure the safety of this country, and we have laid down the standards from which there ought to be no rash departure," he added.

Herbert Samuel, replying to the cry that was being raised for reduction of armaments, declared the Liberal Government had always been and is to-day willing to come to an agreement to limit this lamentable expenditure, but hitherto declarations to that effect had met with no response. "It takes two to make an agreement, and failing such an agreement our policy is that we must maintain in battleships and armored cruisers superiority above the next strongest naval power of [illegible]0 per cent. In view of the world-wide responsibility which rests upon the Imperial Government, nothing less is adequate, and that margin of 60 per cent., it is held, gives us sufficient margin for our security. That standard has been endorsed by Parliament, it has been accepted by the spokesman of Germany as a not unreasonable one for us to maintain, and to that standing I for one adhere."

THE GARISON CAPITULATES

Secretary Bain and Fellow-Strikers Yield to Johannesburg Police.

JOHANNESBURG, Jan. 16.—Mr. Bain, secretary of the South African Federation of Trades, and his band of 300 comrades, who had barricaded themselves in the Trades' Hall here since Tuesday, surrendered unconditionally to the police yesterday. Mr. Bain and ten of the ringleaders were arrested and lodged in jail.

Previous to this Mr. Bain yesterday morning requested an interview with Gen. Louis Botha, Prime Ministed of the Union of South Africa. The Government regarded this as an offer to surrender and replied that the control officer of the region under the provisions of martial law, had orders to arrest everyone in the hall and to use the most drastic measures necessary if, after warning had been given them, the occupants did not surrender without violence.

Killed by Falling Wall.

BANGOR, Me., Jan. 16.—Two firemen, John Leonard and Walter Merrill, were killed by a falling wall while fighting a fire that destroyed the Bangor Opera House yesterday. Four other firemen were hurt, but are expected to recover. The property loss exceeded $75,000.

DENOUNCED THE TANGO

Cardinal Pompili Says Rome Must Eschew Dance.

ROME, Jan. 16.—Cardinal Basilic Pompili, vicar-general of Rome, representing the pontiff, has issued a pastoral letter denouncing the tango and also certain newspapers, theatrical performances and fashions, which, he declares, are perverting souls. The cardinal says:

"The tango, which has already been condemned by illustrious bishops, and is prohibited even in Protestant countries, must be absolutely prohibited in the seat of the Roman pontiff, the centre of the Roman Catholic religion."

It asks the clergy to raise their voice in defending the sanctity of Christian usages against the dangers threatening and the overwhelming immorality of the new paganism.

It tells parents that if they do not protect their children from the tango they will be guilty of failure in their most sacred duties.

RESCUED BY BOATS.

Stricken Inhabitants of Japanese Island Taken Off Perilous Shore.

KAGOSHIMA, Japan, Jan. 16.—A pathetic scene was witnessed yesterday on the Island of Sakura, when a group of famished, terror-stricken people were rescued from amid steaming lava and heated boulders by a boat from a Japanese warship.

A cruiser squadron arrived here yesterday and launches were at once lowered, whose crews searched the island, the contour of which has been entirely altered since the bursting into eruption on Jan. 12 of the volcano of Sakura, Jima.

The sailors did not risk landing, but made a systematic scrutiny.

FACTORY MANAGERS SCORED AT DAIRYMEN'S CONVENTION

Concluding Session of the Western Ontario Association's Meeting is the Occasion For Some Plain Speaking When the Causes of Failure in Successful Marketing Comes Up For Discussion.

STRATFORD, Jan. 16. — Discussions at yesterday's sessions of the Dairymen's Convention hinged not upon the topics of former years, such as the manufacture of butter and cheese, but upon the marketing of these commodities, with the bearing of this phase upon the cost of living. As regards cheese, Mr. Robert Johnston reviewed the conditions under which it travels from producer to consumer, and scored the factory managers for the use of flimsy boxes which did not protect the cheese in transit. Next year, he said, he himself would refuse to accept any shipments in which the containing boxes were too small to enclose the cheese properly.

"We often find twenty-five broken cheese boxes in a hundred-box shipment," declared Mr. Johnston in his address on "Defects in Our Cheese, When it Goes Into Storage, and When It Comes Out." "The makers are far too careless in packing boxes too wide or too narrow for the cheese being used continually. What is wrong? Is it that the boxes nowadays are of poor stuff—green wood, loosely put together—or are our cheese-makers losing interest in their business?" Many cheese were received, he said, containing large rat-holes or similar defects, and the lower price entailed put the buyer to an undeserved loss. He mentioned light salting and the failure of factory managers to properly mature October and November cheese as factors conducive to a defective or deteriorated product.

That absence of uniformity in the flavor, texture and pack of butter was resulting in the loss of reputation by the makers of Western Ontario was the next charge, made with unusual frankness by Mr. I. W. Steinhoff. "Western Ontario seems content to allow other provinces to make better butter and to put it up in more stylish form," Mr. Steinhoff said. "The best lesson for you men is to go and take a look at the samples of stylishly packed New Zealand butter, of which so much is now coming to Canada."

Professor Dean of the O. A. C., Guelph, dealt with the conditions of marketing which caused "too great a difference between the price the farmer receives for his milk and that which the consumer pays for cheese."

A full house greeted Secretary Herns when he read at the morning session the report of instruction for 1913. In his report as Chief Instructor, Mr. Herns urged upon makers the absolute necessity for the adoption of some more efficient system of cooling cream at creameries and pointed out that greater care of milk and cream on the farms was an essential to the manufacture of good butter. The report showed that one hundred and twenty-four cheese factories were described as being in first-class sanitary condition, a number being termed "only fair."

The election of officers resulted in J. B. Muir, of Ingersoll, being selected to succeed S. G. Facey, of Harrietsville, as president. The other officers for the ensuing year are: First vice-president, Robert Ryrich, Springford; second vice-president, James Bristow, St. Thomas; third vice-president, A. W. Stratton, Guelph; secretary-treasurer, Frank Hern, London; auditors, J. A. Nelles, London, and J. C. Hegler, Ingersoll; representatives to the Western Fair, J. Brodie, of Mapleton, and F. Herns; representatives to the C.N.E. at Toronto, F. Herns and Robert Johnston, of Woodstock.

VALUE OF FIELD CROPS THROUGHOUT DOMINION

OTTAWA, Jan. 15.—A bulletin issued today by the Census of Statistics Office gives final estimates of the area, yield and value of the principal field crops of Canada in 1913, as compared with 1912. Last year's season was very favorable for grain growing in the northwest provinces, where during the ripening, harvesting and threshing periods conditions generally speaking were ideal. In Ontario, Quebec and parts of the Maritime provinces, on the other hand, the yield of grain was adversely affected by prolonged drouth. For the whole of Canada the principal field crops occupied a total estimated area of 35,375,000 acres as compared with 35,575,000 acres in 1912, and their value, computed at average local market prices, was $552,771,500 as compared with $557,344,100 in 1912. Wheat upon 11,015,000 acres produced 231,717,000 bushels of the value of $156,462,000, the corresponding figures in 1912 being 10,996,700 acres, 224,159,000 bushels and $139,090,000. Of the total wheat area 970,000 acres were devoted to fall wheat, the production being 22,592,000 bushels and the value $18,185,000 as compared with 971,000 acres, 20,387,000 bushels and $17,157,000 in 1912. Oats yielded a total of 404,669,000 bushels from 10,434,000 acres and the value reached $128,893,000, the corresponding figures of 1912 being 9,966,000 acres, 391,629,00 bushels and $126,304,000. Both the wheat and oat crops of 1912 of 1913 are the highest on record in Canada, wheat as regards area, yield and value and oats as regards area and yield. The value of the oat crop was exceeded in 1911 when the amount was $132,949,000. Barley upon 1,613,000 acres yielded 48,319,00 bushels of the value of $20,144,000 as against 1,581,00 acres 49,398,00 bushels and $22,354,000 in 1912. Flax seed occupied 1,552,800 acres, and the production was 17,539,00 bushels of the value of $17,084,800, as compared with 2,021,900 acres, 26,130,000 bushels and $23,608,000 in 1912.

Quality Excellent

The quality of the grain crops, as indicated by the average weight per measured bushel, is excellent and is superior to 1912. Spring wheat averages 60,37 lb. against 58.90 lb. in 1912, oats 36.50 lb against 35.50 lb. and barley 48.50 lb against 47.50 lb.

In the three northwest provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta the production in 1913 of wheat is estimated at 209,262,000 bushels compared with 204,280,000 bushels in 1912, of oats at 242,413,000 bushels compared with 231,600,000 bushels. The wheat production of 1913 in Manitoba was 53,331,000 bushels from 2,804,000 acres, in Saskatchewan 121,559,000 bushels from 5,720,000 acres and in Alberta 34,372,000 bushels from 1,512,000 acres.

TOO CLEAR A CASE.

So the Judge Decided It Was Useless to Go On.

"When did your husband begin treating you cruelly?" asked her lawyer.

"It was about a year ago," replied the pretty petitioner.

"What happened?"

"We were on our way to New York."

"Yes. Did he strike you?"

"No. I asked him to get a drawing room, so that I would not have to undress in my berth."

"And he refused?"

"Yes. He said his mother had never occupied a drawing room in a sleeping car and he didn't consider me any better than his mother."

"Was that the only time he ever was cruel to you?"

"No. After I had bought my fall clothes last year they were so fine that I couldn't ride in a public conveyance without ruining them, and when I explained to him that he would have to buy an electric to save my clothes he told me to go ahead and ruin the clothes and get the kind that could be worn in street cars next time."

"It will be useless to go on with the case," the judge interposed. "There is no doubt that the man is absolutely heartless."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Aeroplane Factory.

In 1910 a new industry was added to Bristol, England, by the building of an aeroplane factory. The company operating this factory reports that complete machines to the value of $340,000 were turned out during 1912. The company maintains a school for aviators and issued certificates during 1912 to 106 pupils, of whom 87 are army and navy officers. Machines have been sold to the Governments of Russia, Germany, Italy, Turkey, Australia, Bulgaria, Roumania, and Spain. The works recently have been enlarged and the output is to be increased.

Brazilian Rat Catchers.

Rats are a great nuisance in certain parts of Brazil, where the climate is very warm. The common cat does not thrive for some unaccountable reason, but is replaced by a domestic rat catcher, whose presence causes a decidedly unpleasant sensation to visitors when first they come in contact with the creature. It is a species of small boa constrictor—the gibola. The snakes are not venomous. They sleep in the house, generally taking up their position at the foot of the stairs. When nightfall approaches they begin to awaken, and during the night they glide swiftly about the premises looking for rats. Gibolas are offered for sale in the markets of Bahia and Pernambuco at prices ranging from $1 to $5, according to the size of the creature. It is claimed that they are so easily domesticated that, if removed from one house to another, they invariably return to the house whence they have been taken.

Didn't Drop Into Poetry.

There is an interesting story of Wordsworth, who went to call on Miss Harriet Martineau at Ambleside, in the house which she had built and laid out, writes A. C. Benson in the Century Magazine. There was a gathering of neighbors present, and Wordsworth stood for a long time at the window contemplating the beautiful landscape outside. Then he turned to the party and said:

"Miss Martineau, I congratulate you on your beautiful little domain. The views are wonderful, and it will turn out to be the wisest thing you ever did in your life."

He paused for a moment, and the guests expected some comment on the uplifting effects of communion with nature, but Wordsworth, with a fine gesture, continued:

"Your property will certainly be trebled in value within the next ten years!"

PYNE MORE HOPEFUL.

Premier Whitney's Physician Reported Improvement Last Night.

NEW YORK, Jan. 16. — More hopeful conditions prevailed last night regarding the chances for the life of Sir James Whitney. While during the day the reports were conservative, a distinctly hopeful spirit breathed through the night bulletin, issued at nine p.m., which read as follows:

"Sir James Whitney had a more comfortable day and seems slightly better."

Dr. Pyne's attitude was entirely different from that of the dark days, when the life of his friend was in the balance. Although he admitted that the condition of Sir James was still exceedingly serious, the doctor was hopeful. "He has slept at frequent periods during the day, and the restless feeling has almost entirely disappeared. He still has periods of delirium, but they are neither so prolonged nor so strenuous," he said.

Another hopeful feature was the fact that Sir James had taken nourishment well throughout the day.

TWO BAD FIRES.

Midland Has a Loss of $75,000 and Sarnia One of $40,000.

MIDLAND, Jan. 16.—Midland suffered another big fire loss at one o'clock yesterday morning, when the Ingram and McLeod blocks were totally destroyed. The loss is estimated at about $75,000. The building contained the following business places, the contents of which have been totally destroyed: Bank of British North America, town clerk's office, Simcoe Railway & Power Co.'s office, Arthur W. Bell, sewing machine agent; Arthur W. Finlayson, barrister; Dr. Harvie, dentist; Light and Water Commission office, C. E. Aikman's office; Taylor, Armstrong Bros., and Frank; Miss McLeod, milliner; Canadian Express Co. and D. A. Fowlie, jeweler. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Sarnia Severely Visited.

SARNIA, Jan. 16.—Fire last night a few minutes before 10 o'clock completely gutted the stock of the Smith & Ash dry goods and millinery store here, and did damage, which is estimated at $40,000, with an insurance of about $31,000.

The fire started near the elevator and spread rapidly to the other storeys.

The firemen fought the fire on all flats at the same time, and after about a half hour got it under control.

About 25 employes will be out of work for some time.

WOULD BAR U. S. POTATOES.

St. John, N.B., Board of Trade Favors Retaliation For Embargo.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Jan. 16. — A meeting of the council of St. John Board of Trade yesterday, the following resolution was adopted:

"Whereas the Government of the United States has unjustly placed an embargo upon the importation of Canadian potatoes,

"Resolved, that the Canadian Government be requested to institute an embargo upon the importation into Canada of American potatoes to protect the Canadian growers, and that the Canadian Government be further memorialised to remove this embargo when the U. S. Government do justice to the Canadian farmers."

Stole Railway Passes.

EDMONTON, Jan. 16.—Two men were arrested here yesterday in connection with the theft of over 100 G. T. P. railway passes. These were stolen from the mechanical department of the railroad, and those responsible are believed to have secured nearly $5,000 through selling the passes at reduced rates. They had all been properly signed and were good from Edmonton to Fort William.

What Changed Him.

Mistress (finding visitor in the kitchen)—Who is this, Mary? Mary (confused)—My brother, m'm. Mistress (suspiciously)—You're not much alike. Mary (stammering apologetically)—We were, m'm, but he's just had his beard shaved off, and that makes him look different."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Trackless Trolleys.

A speaker at the recent meeting of the Municipal Tramways Association of Great Britain discussed trackless trolleys. He said that their total cost of operation under ordinary conditions was at least 20 per cent to 25 per cent less per car mile than that of motor busses and that they were equal in flexibility to the motor busses for the ordinary roadway width—namely, thirty to thirty-five feet. Trackless trolley systems are now in use in eight different districts in England, and several other undertakings are under construction.—Electric Railway Journal.

Anonymous French-Canadians Want Invading "Blokies" Fired.

MONTREAL, Jan. 16.—The general offices of the Grand Trunk on McGill street are to be blown up in thirty days, according to the terms of a notice served on the company. This notice was typewritten in French and signed by the "Anti-Blokie French-Canadian Association of Montreal."

It has been observed by this association for some time past that the Grand Trunk has been employing large numbers of "Blokies" to the exclusion of good French-Canadians, of whom there are large numbers available in the city without having to go outside for others. This it deemed an injury to the French-Canadians, who are on the spot. Therefore, if the Grand Trunk does not mend its ways, by getting rid of the "Blokies," both in the general offices and in the shops, the former are to be blown up in thirty days.

A three-minute glass should be kept beside the telephone to help in marking time during out-of-town calls.

INVESTIGATING OUTRAGES.

Horse and Fourteen Chickens Killed and Farmhouse Ransacked.

CHATHAM, Jan. 16.—High Constable Peters is busy making an investigation into depredations and outrages committed late Sunday night in Chatham Township.

A valuable driving horse, the property of Sid Coatsworth of the second concession is dying from the effects of being struck on the head by some weapon, presumably an axe, in the hands of an unknown person. Fourteen chickens belonging to Wm. Long, a neighbor, were despatched by apparently the same instrument, while the interior of the residence was literally turned upside down in the absence of the owner and a number of household articles carried off.

No clues to the identity of the miscreant have as yet been found.

BELLEVILLE SEVEN WERE LIGHT BUNCH WHEN PETES GOT BUSY IN SECOND HALF

Visitors Made Record Showing by Scoring First Two Goals in First Two Minutes of Play — Park, Denison and Kelly in Best Form of the Season

In one of the poorest exhibitions of hockey that has been seen at Brock Street Rink in some time, the local Intermediates defeated Belleville last night by a score of 10—4. The half time figures were Peterboro 4, Belleville 3. Right off the reel the visitors scored two goals but from then till the final gong they played like a bunch of old women and were never dangerous. If it was the same team that defeated Whitby, the local supporters have no need of worrying over the result of this district.

Off sides and kicking the puck were as common as they are in public school games and Referee Harvey Sproule was to be sympathized with for he had a terrible task on his hands. It was almost an impossibility to keep the forwards of the visitors on-side. The only man they have who plays any kind of fast hockey is their goalkeeper, and he was no Percy Leseur at that.

The Big Three

Maurice Park was the most effective of the locals and with Kelly and Denison, proved the stars of the performance. Giroux was injured early in the game and played under a handicap while Bradshaw was a trifle lost at right wing. He was much better in the last half when he was on the defence. Bradley injured his shoulder in the first half and couldn't play in the second period; so Bond was dropped to even up. While he was on, Percy wasn't given much to do as the play was mostly in Belleville territory.

Janes, (now recognized as the Mayor of Cavan), was given a chance to show his wears in the second half and he did so to perfection, but on the whole, he had a very quiet evening. The first two shots that beat him were merely mistakes and one at least, should never have passed him.

Harvey Sproule handled the game and as stated above, he couldn't be blamed for his work for the boys didn't play hockey at all. He could have kept the penalty box filled for loafing if he wanted to, but as usual, Harvey "had a heart."

The teams lined up as follows:

Belleville—4		Peterboro—10
Brotherhood	goal	Janes
T. Brant	r. defence	Bond
Bradley	left defence	Denison
E. Dunning	rover	Giroux
Whalen	centre	Park
B. Brant	left wing	Kelly
Symmons	right wing	Bradshaw

The Play

Park took the puck right from the face-off and secured a shot on the nets. Brotherhood blocked it and cleared nicely. The Belleville forward line then broke away and Dunning beat Janes from close in. Time 1 minute. Belleville—1, Peterboro—0.

Whalen battered the puck back to Bradley who tore up the middle of the ice and scored on a long shot. Time 30 seconds. Belleville—2, Peterboro—0.

With two goals scored inside of two minutes, the fans started to sigh but they revived when Denison broke away. The big fellow however, shot weakly. Peterboro started playing a little combination and only the good work of Brotherhood saved goals. Park broke his skate and play was held up till he returned. He was hardly back when he combined with Kelly, and scored. Time 5 minutes. Belleville—2, Peterboro—1.

Denison made an end-to-end rush but when Brant checked him "Dennie" body-checked the redskin into the boards and was penalized. Shortly after his return he lifted from mid- ice and the puck went in, but Bradshaw was offside and the score didn't count. "Brad" was jugged for loafing. Kelly and Whalen mixed it and both were penalized. Denison was sent away a few seconds afterwards for loafing offside, yet every one was back on the ice before any damage was done. Bradley injured his shoulder, though continued, and for a while the play was all around the Belleville net. Capt. Giroux injured his arm in a collision, but in a few minutes resumed play. Denison was banished for tripping and was soon followed by B. Brant for body checking Giroux. Denison returned and combined with the forwards on a beautiful rush. The big fellow took the puck from the corner, snaked around the goal and a few seconds afterwards, finding an opening, scored. Time 8 minutes. Belleville—2, Peterboro—2.

The play for a while centred around the Belleville net and finally Park put the locals ahead on a shot from close in. Time 3 minutes. Belleville—2, Peterboro—3.

Two minutes afterwards Whalen broke away and finding the defence wide open, he scored from the mouth of the net. Belleville—3, Peterboro—3.

It just took the locals 60 seconds to "come back." Bradshaw and Park combined on a nice fast rush and the latter scored. Belleville—3, Peterboro—4.

There was nothing else doing till Bradley drew a penalty for slashing Denison. He was in the box when half time was rung.

Second Half

During the resting period Bradley's shoulder was found to be dislocated. He couldn't continue so Bond was dropped and the fans were given a chance to see the six man hockey stunt. Dunning finished Bradley's time in the penalty box.

Denison and Park combined in a long rush and the latter scored Time 2 minutes. Belleville—3, Peterboro—5.

Peterboro had the game in their own hands, and scored almost at leisure. Kelly took the puck from centre ice and circled to right wing and lifted the disc in. Time 2 minutes. Belleville—3, Peterboro—6.

Denison drew his fourth penalty for a cross-check, but was back before any scoring. The locals let up a little and T. Brant came down unhindered and scored. Time 5 minutes. Belleville—4, Peterboro—6.

Janes was given a little practice when the home brigade let the railroad city's forwards line run wild and the "Mayor of Cavan" blocked everything. On one occasion he came out ten feet and broke up a three-man combination. The fans hollered for a goal and Dennie and Park responded with a beautiful rush, the latter scoring. Time 3 minutes. Belleville—4, Peterboro—7.

Bradshaw and Park broke away one minute afterwards and Maurice slammed in another. Belleville—4, Peterboro—8.

In just two minutes Giroux and Park came through with a pretty rush and once again did Park score. Belleville—4, Peterboro—9.

Bradshaw injured his ankle and at the same time Park broke his skate again. The game was held up for about ten minutes. After the stoppage Park received a kick in the lip, cutting him a little, but the fair-haired centre man continued to play. Giroux "rode" Symmons, who was dazed for an instant and the former was penalized. He was hardly back when he was sent away again for hooking.

The fans yelled to make it ten, so Park took the puck from a face-off near centre and satisfied them. Time 8 minutes. Belleville—4, Peterboro—10.

Bradshaw was cooped for tripping, and was off when the final gong sounded.

The Car of the Canadian Family

Hupmobile "32" Touring Car, $1,230. With electric starter, over size tires and other additional equipment $1,380 f.o.b. Windsor.

This Beautiful New

Hupmobile

is now on display at our showrooms. The new Hupmobile is, we believe, better than anything that has ever before come to us from the factory.

And this is no slight praise—for this new Hupmobile is far, far from being an ordinary car. It is an extraordinary car. A car whose intrinsic value and inherent quality are not expressed in the Hupmobile price.

Bluntly, it is an infinitely better car than the price implies. It is a car of characteristics unusual at the price. You have heard us say: "We believe the Hupmobile to be the best car in its class in the world. We mean that sincerely and strongly.

Every man in our organization is imbued with the conviction that it has no equal in its type and at its price. We stand ready to demonstrate as much to you.

We are prepared to dissect the car for your benefit—to justify the faith that we have by pointing out the precise particulars in which the Hupmobile excels.

We will explain to you that its construction embodies a larger use of aluminum than any other car—at any price in the world.

We will show you that a larger volume of costly steel is engaged in its production than in the construction of any car of like price.

See us to-day. We want the opportunity to prove what we say is true. No cost or obligation.

AN IMPORTANT MEETING OF THE MERCANTILERS

A very important meeting of the Mercantile Hockey League is called for to-night at eight o'clock in the Review Office. The executive and one representative of each team is requested to be present.

The reason of this meeting is to discuss the advisability of postponing the games of Monday night so as not to conflict with the O.H.A. excursion to Cobourg. This is an extremely important meeting so those requested will please attend.

Never mind the meaning of those words—they sound good anyway.

Queen Alexandras and the Central School seven play at the Brock Street rink Saturday morning from 10 to 11.

LOCAL RINKS MAKING FINE SHOWING

Canadian Press Despatch

LINDSAY, Jan. 16.—Germond of Oshawa, defeated Fitzgerald of Peterboro, in the midnight draw of the Gillies' Trophy. Waddell of Peterboro, defeated Gundrie of Gravenhurst, 16 to 5, in the nine a.m. draw in the same match and Lang of Peterboro, defeated Wilson of Fergus, 13 to 8 in the nine a.m. draw of the Flavelle match.

Mr. T. F. Matthews' rink composed of P. Fitzgerald, H. Evans, R. Hicks, and T. F. Matthews, skip. returned to the city last evening, being put out of the running yesterday afternoon by a rink from North Bay. In conversation with Mr. Hicks, The Review learned today that after the 9 a.m. draw today, each of the three Peterboro rinks, namely: Fitzgerald, Waddell and Laing, is still in the competition for one of the trophies. Mr. Hick's reports that the local men are doing some fine curling.

MATCH POSTPONED.

The friendly match between the local curlers and the Toronto Granites, has been called off. Last night the local club received communication from the Torontonians stating that their ice was very soft and not suitable for play, so the matches were postponed till colder weather sets in.

PUCKERINGS FROM PUCK

Park certainly is the ne plus ultra for getting away with that puck.

Did you see Kelly slide? Where? Why ahead of his man, of course.

That last score was an eye-opener to the game little aboriginee.

Well, even if Belleville was beaten, they handed out some game for the benchers.

We respectfully suggest that the ventilators be opened for the next game.

Did you hear the Peterboro yell?

The way Maurice Park smashes skates must soon give him stock enough for a second hand store.

By the way, would some one explain how Belleville got those first two goals?

My dear fellow, there is nothing easier when the paleocrystic encrustations are skilfully removed from the optical machina in your cranium. Briefly, from a teleological point of view we may enlighten your proliterian intellect by saying that the Peterboro boys, being gentlemen, couldn't refuse a Belle a couple.

The Tool Room had a work-out last night, after the O.H.A. game at Brock street rink, and they can be depended upon to put out a strong team against the Test on Monday night.

The route boys of The Examiner and The Review will play at Parker's rink, Saturday morning, from 10 to 11.

The standing of the Intermediate teams of this district is as follows:

	won	lost	to play
Peterboro	4	1	5
Whitby	2	1	7
Oshawa	2	2	6
Cobourg	1	1	8
Belleville	1	1	8
Bowmanville	0	4	6

Band at St. Railway Rink to-night.

BIG BROTHER CLUB TO CONTROL OPEN AIR RINK PROBABLY AT THE PARADE GROUNDS

No Contribution of Funds Forth Coming From the City Council

But Aldermen Themselves Are Generous and Would Give Financial Help

The Big Brother Club will have to take up the open air rink movement at their own expense.

Last night a letter was read to the committee of the whole council, from the Big Brother Club, offering to donate $25 towards the scheme, and it was presumed by the aldermen that the parade grounds in front of the armories, was a site satisfactory to the Club.

After some of the aldermen had given their views on the matter, Ald. Johnston fathered a motion to the effect that the open air rink scheme for each ward be abandoned for this year and that the offer of the parade grounds as a site, made by Col. Clegg, be accepted and that the control and maintenance of the rink be left in the hands of the Big Brother Club.

Speaking generally of the scheme, Ald. Green said he would offer a lot free and contribute towards the expenses but he would not consider spending the people's money.

Ald. Gordon said he would give $10. He thought the Club could get sufficient funds to finance the scheme themselves.

"The Lord loveth a cheerful giver," remarked Ald. Johnston. "That's a good way to start it off." He favored a rink at the parade grounds, the Club to assume the responsibility.

Ald. Duffus favored the rinks, even if the council had to spend some money. He would have one or two rinks and one at least. There should, he said, be some provision made to help many of the poor youngsters, whose parents do not care to spend the money to give them the required amount of sport and recreation, which is necessary for their general benefit. If two rinks cost too much money, let there be one. He would subscribe $25. It was a good thing to have a rink in the centre portion of the city. He would also have one near the boundary of the South and West Wards.

Ald. Johnston suggested that the rinks be provided in the vast lands of the Board of Education.

"It's rather late now," commented Ald. Anderson.

"We're really to blame," added Ald. Duncan.

It's just as important to provide for sleigh riding," argued Ald. Anderson. The children, he said, were driven off the streets and they enjoyed coasting, probably more than skating.

"Give $10 to the Charity Board and let them feed some of the people," remarked Ald. Duncan, who also said that he had gone into a house that day and the people had no wood.

"I don't think the people elected us to come here and talk about skating rinks," opined Ald. Green.

WHERE IS THE BRITISH THRONE?

The Venerabl Chair In Westminster Abbey and Some of Its Rivals.

One is so accustomed to speak about the "Throne," that it seems an absurdity to ask where it is; and it is certainly an embarrassment to find that the answer is not ready to the lips. As a matter of fact, it would puzzle the cleverest man to say precisely where the "Throne" of which he speaks so glibly is to be found.

It is no difficult matter to point to half a dozen royal seats in England on each of which His Majesty sits in state; it is much less easy to say definitely and with authority which of them all is really Britain's Throne.

Among the rival claims probably the strongest is that of the venerable oaken chair in Westminster Abbey, which has seen the crowning of every British sovereign since the first Edward brought it from Scotland more than six centuries ago. Not only has it this high antiquity and this splendid history to support its title, it contains, as we all know, the venerable Stone of Scone, on which generations of Scotland's kings sat for their crowning, and thus is the royal symbol of two kingdoms.

But, however strong a case may be made out for the Abbey chair, it has many powerful rivals. But a stone's throw away there is a much more regal throne in the House of Lords, one worthy of the ruler of a vast empire, with its rich upholstery, its carving and gilding and its flash of crystals, standing proudly on its dais under a stately canopy.

Compared with its Abbey rival it is, it is true, an infant of but seventy odd years; but it is the seat on which the King makes his most splendid and impressive appearance when his Parliament is opened or prorogued.

In His Majesty's Robing Room in the House of Lords, a magnificent apartment with wonderful carvings and frescoes, is a smaller, but handsome, throne, on which he takes his seat for the putting on of his state-robes. Raised on its dais with its background of the royal arms and its imposing canopy, this minor throne is little less impressive than that in the peers' chamber itself.

In St. James' Palace, which has been royal for many centuries, you will find probably the most splendid throne of them all, with its regal drapings, its gorgeous heraldry, and its imposing canopy. This is His Majesty's seat when presiding over his levees, and on all state occasions within his palace at St. James.

At Buckingham Palace, in a magnificent room sumptuously upholstered in red satin, with its vaulted and beautifully-decorated ceiling and wonderful marble frieze, is a similar throne, richly gilt, standing beneath a lofty canopy.

If we travel to Windsor we shall see, in the throne room between the Waterloo Chamber and the Grand Reception Room, one of the most beautiful thrones the world can show. The gift of an Indian prince, it is fashioned from ivory, exquisitely carved and richly upholstered in blue. And this is not the only throne in the King's castle, for another is to be seen at the east end of St. George's Hall.

Romantic London Inn.

Probably there is no London inn so romantic in the matter of sliding panels and concealed doors, secret rooms and underground passages — one of these reputedly leads to the tower—and thick walls richly carved as the Crooked Billet, said to be the oldest wine and spirit shop in London. There is every reason to believe that the old inn which stands so sturdily on Tower Hill dates from the time of Henry VIII. Often has it been threatened with destruction, but recently it was granted a new lease of life, and is now in the hands of the decorators, who, happily, however, instead of "improving" it, are merely restoring its pristine beauty. There is a tradition that Oliver Cromwell once lived at the Crooked Billet. The place was known in those days as "the old house at the bottom of the Minories."

Painting for Nerve Rest.

"For real nerve release others may plant cabbages or knit stockings or motor-bus the blues away. But let me paint. Not a picture as an artist, but a garden fence or a summer-house interior as an amateur artisan. There is nothing more soothing than a pot of paint and a proper fat brush to lay it on. Just enough bodily exercise without strain, just enough call for manual dexterity and, above all, visible result while you work. It is balm and peace of mind. Kipling notes it when he describes the infinite satisfaction with which Emmanuel Pyecraft, A.B., stepped back to observe the effect of an extra juicy swab with the paint brush'."
